

THE PLAYS
OF
WILLIAM SHAKSPEARE.
VOLUME the FIRST.

CONTAINING

PREFACES, &c.

The TEMPEST.

The TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA.

The MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR.

TO THE READER. .

*This figure, that thou here hast put,
It was for gentle Shakespeare cut,
Whereon the quiver bred a step,
With nature's touch drew the life:
O, could he but have drawn his wit,*

*As well as his pen, to his bath, but his face the print would then set;
All that was ever in us,
But never be drawn, as these lines,
Not on his picture, but his wits.*

• Ben Jonson

THE
P L A Y S
O F
WILLIAM SHAKSPEARE.
IN TEN VOLUMES.

WITH THE
CORRECTIONS AND ILLUSTRATIONS
O F
VARIOUS COMMENTATORS; TO WHICH ARE ADDED
NOTES by SAMUEL JOHNSON
AND
GEORGE STEEVENS.
THE SECOND EDITION, REVISED AND AUGMENTED.

THE SYLLEPSIS GRAMMATICUS HN, TON KAAAMON ANIOBPEXON EIZ NOTN.
Vet. AnR. apud Suidam.

MULTA DIES, VARIUSQUE LAEOR MUTABILIS AEVI
RETULIT IN MELIUS, MULTOS ALTERNA REVISENS
LUSIT, ET IN SOLIDO EVERSUS FORTUNA LOCAVIT.
Virgil.

L O N D O N,

Printed for C. Bathurst, W. Strahan, J. F. and C. Rivington, J. Hinton, L. Davis, W. Owen, T. Cañon, E. Johnson, S. Crowder,
B. White, T. Longman, B. Law, E. and C. Dilly, C. Corbett,
T. Cadell, H. L. Gardener, J. Nichols, J. Bew, J. Beecroft, W. Stuart, T. Lowndes, J. Robson, T. Payne, T. Becket,
F. Newbery, G. Robinson, R. Baldwin, J. Williams, J. Ridley, T. Evans, W. Davies, W. Fox, and J. Murray,

MDCCLXXVIII.

PREFACE.

THAT praises are without reason lavished on the dead, and that the honours due only to excellence are paid to antiquity, is a complaint likely to be always continued, by those, who, being able to add nothing to truth, hope for eminence from the heresies of paradox; or those, who, being forced by disappointment upon consolatory expedients, are willing to hope from posterity what the present age refuses, and flatter themselves that the regard, which is yet denied by envy, will be at last bestowed by time.

Antiquity, like every other quality that attracts the notice of mankind, has undoubtedly votaries that reverence it, not from reason, but from prejudice. Some seem to admire indiscriminately whatever has been long preserved, without considering that time has sometimes co-operated with chance; all perhaps are more willing to honour past than present excellence; and the mind contemplates genius through the shades of age, as the eye surveys the sun through artificial opacity. The great contention of criticism is to find the faults of the moderns, and the beauties of the ancients. While an author is yet living, we estimate his powers by his worst performance; and when he is dead, we rate them by his best.

To works, however, of which the excellence is not absolute and definite, but gradual and comparative; to works not raised upon principles demonstrative and scientifick, but appealing wholly to observation and experience, no other test can be applied than length of duration and continuance of esteem. What mankind have long possessed they have often examined and compared, and if they persist to value the possession, it is because frequent comparisons have confirmed opinion in its favour. As among the works of nature no man can properly call a river deep, or a mountain high, without the knowledge of many mountains, and many rivers; so in the productions of genius, nothing can be stiled excellent till it has been compared with other works of the same kind. Demonstration immediately displays its power, and has nothing to hope or fear from the flux of years; but works tentative and experimental must be estimated by their proportion to the general and collective ability of man, as it is discovered in a long succession of endeavours. Of the first building that was raised, it might be with certainty determined that it was round or square; but whether it was spacious or lofty must have been referred to time. The Pythagorean scale of numbers was at once discovered to be perfect; but the poems of Homer we yet know not to transcend the common limits of human intelligence, but by remarking, that nation after nation, and century after century, has been able to do little more than transpose his incidents, new name his characters, and paraphrase his sentiments.

The reverence due to writings that have long subsisted arises therefore not from any credulous confidence in the superior wisdom of past ages, or gloomy persuasion of the degeneracy of mankind, but is the consequence of acknowledged and indubitable positions, that what has been longest known has been most considered, and what is most considered is best understood.

The poet, of whose works I have undertaken the revision, may now begin to assume the dignity of an ancient, and claim the privilege of established fame and prescriptive veneration. He has long outlived his century, the term commonly fixed as the test of literary merit. Whatever advantages he might once derive from personal allusions, local customs, or temporary opinions, have for many years been lost; and every topick of merriment or motive of sorrow, which the modes of artificial life afforded him, now only obscure the scenes which they once illuminated. The effects of favour and competition are at an end; the tradition of his friendships and his enmities has perished; his works support no opinion with arguments, nor supply any faction with invectives; they can neither indulge vanity, nor gratify malignity; but are read without any other reason than the desire of pleasure, and are therefore praised only as pleasure is obtained; yet, thus unassisted by interest or passion, they have passed through variations of taste and changes of manners, and, as they devolved from one generation to another, have received new honours at every transmission.

But because human judgment, though it be gradually gaining upon certainty, never becomes infallible; and approbation, though long continued, may yet be only the approbation of prejudice or fashion; it is proper to inquire, by what peculiarities of excellence Shakespeare has gained and kept the favour of his countrymen.

Nothing can please many, and please long, but just representation of general nature. Particular manners can be known to few, and therefore few only can judge how nearly they are copied. The irregular combinations of fanciful invention may delight awhile, by that novelty of which the common satiety of life sends us all in quest; but the pleasures of sudden wonder are soon exhausted, and the mind can only repose on the stability of truth.

Shakespeare is above all writers, at least above all modern writers, the poet of nature; the poet that holds up to his readers a faithful mirror of manners and of life. His characters are not modified by the customs of particular places, unpractised by the rest of the world; by the peculiarities of studies or professions, which can operate but upon small numbers; or by the accidents of transient fashions or temporary opinions: they are the genuine progeny of common humanity, such as the world will always supply, and observation will always find. His persons act and speak by the influence of those general passions and principles by which all minds are agitated, and the whole system of life is continued in motion. In the writings of other poets a character is too often an individual; individual: in those of Shakspeare it is commonly a species.

It is from this wide extension of design that so much instruction is derived. It is this which fills the plays of Shakspeare with practical axioms and domestick wisdom. It was said of Euripides, that every verse was a precept; and it may be said of Shakspeare, that from his works may be collected a system of civil and oeconomical prudence. Yet his real power is not shewn in the splendor of particular passages, but by the progress of his fable, and the tenor of his dialogue; and he that tries to recommend him by select quotations, will succeed like the pedant in Hierocles, who, when he offered his house to sale, carried a stick in his pocket as a specimen.

It will not easily be imagined how much Shakspeare excels in accommodating his sentiments to real life, but by comparing him with other authors. It was observed of the ancient schools of declamation, that the more diligently they were frequented, the more was the student disqualified for the world, because he found nothing there which he should ever meet in any other place. The same remark may be applied to every stage but that of Shakspeare. The theatre, when it is under any other direction, is peopled by such characters as were never seen, conversing in a language which was never heard, upon topics which will never arise in the commerce of mankind. But the dialogue of this author is often so evidently determined by the incident which produces it, and is pursued with so much ease and simplicity, that it seems scarcely to claim the merit of fiction, but to have been gleaned by diligent selection out of common conversation, and common occurrences.

Upon every other stage the universal agent is love, by whose power all good and evil is distributed, and every action quickened or retarded. To bring a lover, a lady, and a rival into the fable; to entangle them in contradictory obligations, perplex them with oppositions of interest, and harrafs them with violence of desires inconsistent with each other; to make them meet in rapture, and part in agony; to fill their mouths with hyperbolical joy and outrageous sorrow; to distress them as nothing human ever was distressed; to deliver them as nothing human ever was delivered, is the business of a modern dramatist. If this, probability is violated, life is misrepresented, and language is depraved. But love is only one of many passions, and as it has no great influence upon the sum of life, it has little operation in the dramas of a poet, who caught his ideas from the living world, and exhibited only what he saw before him. He knew, that any other passion, as it was regular or exorbitant, was a cause of happiness or calamity.

Characters thus ample and general were not easily discriminated and preserved, yet perhaps no poet ever kept his personages more distinct from each other. I will not say with Pope, that every speech may be assigned to the proper speaker, because many speeches there are which have nothing characteristic; but, perhaps, though some may be equally adapted to every person, it will be difficult to find any that can be

be properly transferred from the present possessor to another claimant. The choice is right, when there is reason for choice.

Other dramatists can only gain attention by hyperbolical or aggravated characters, by fabulous and unexampled excellence or depravity, as the writers of barbarous romances invigorated the reader by a giant and a dwarf; and he who should form his expectations of human affairs from the play, or from the tale, would be equally deceived. Shakespeare has no heroes; his scenes are occupied only by men, who act and speak as the reader thinks that he should himself have spoken or acted on the same occasion: even where the agency is supernatural, the dialogue is leavened with life. Other writers disguise the most natural passions and most frequent incidents; so that he who contemplates them in the book will not know them in the world: Shakespeare approximates the remote, and familiarizes the wonderful; the event which he represents will not happen, but if it were possible, its effects would probably be such as he has assigned; and it may be said, that he has not only shewn human nature as it acts in real exigences, but as it would be found in trials, to which it cannot be exposed.

Thus therefore is the praise of Shakespeare, that his drama is the mirror of life; that he who has mazed his imagination, in following the phantoms which other writers raise up before him, may here be cured of his delirious ecstasies, by reading human sentiments in human language; by scenes from which a hermit may estimate the transactions of the world, and a confessor predict the progress of the passions.

His adherence to general nature has exposed him to the censure of criticks, who form their judgments upon narrower principles. Dennis and Rhymer think his Romans not sufficiently Roman; and Voltaire censures his kings as not completely royal. Dennis is offended, that Mæcenas, a senator of Rome, should play the buffoon; and Voltaire perhaps thinks decency violated, when the Danish usurper is represented as a drunkard. But Shakespeare always makes nature predominate over accident; and if he preserves the essential character, is not very careful of distinctions superinduced and adventitious. His story requires Romans or kings, but he thinks only on men. He knew that Rome, like every other city, had men of all dispositions; and wanting a buffoon, he went into the senate-house for that which the senate-house would certainly have afforded him. He was inclined to shew an usurper and a murderer not only odious, but despicable; he therefore added drunkenness to his other qualities, knowing that kings love wine like other men, and that wine exerts its natural power upon kings. These are the petty cavils of petty minds; a poet overlooks the casual distinction of country and condition, as a painter, satisfied with the figure, neglects the drapery.

The censure which he has incurred by mixing comic and tragick scenes, as it extends to all his works, deserves more consideration. Let the fact be first stated, and then examined.

Shake-

Shakespeare's plays are not in the rigorous and critical sense either tragedies or comedies, but compositions of a distinct kind; exhibiting the real state of sublunary nature, which partakes of good and evil, joy and sorrow, mingled with endless variety of proportion and innumerable modes of combination; and expressing the course of the world, in which the loss of one is the gain of another; in which, at the same time, the reveller is hasting to his wine, and the mourner burying his friend; in which the malignity of one is sometimes defeated by the frolick of another; and many mischiefs and many benefits are done and hindered without design.

Out of this chaos of mingled purposes and casualties the ancient poets, according to the laws which custom had prescribed, selected some the crimes of men, and some their absurdities, some the momentous vicissitudes of life, and some the lighter occurrences; some the terrors of distress, and some the gayeties of prosperity. Thus rose the two modes of imitation, known by the names of tragedy and comedy, compositions intended to promote different ends by contrary means, and considered as so little allied, that I do not recollect among the Greeks or Romans a single writer who attempted both.

Shakespeare has united the powers of exciting laughter and sorrow not only in one mind, but in one composition. Almost all his plays are divided between serious and ludicrous characters, and, in the successive evolutions of the design, sometimes produce

due seriousness and sorrow, and sometimes levity and laughter.

That this is a practice contrary to the rules of criticism will be readily allowed; but there is always an appeal open from criticism to nature. The end of writing is to instruct; the end of poetry is to instruct by pleasing. That the mingled drama may convey all the instruction of tragedy or comedy cannot be denied, because it includes both in its alterations of exhibition, and approaches nearer than either to the appearance of life, by shewing how great machinations and slender designs may promote or obviate one another, and the high and the low co-operate in the general system by unavoidable concatenation.

It is objected, that by this change of scenes the passions are interrupted in their progressions, and that the principal event, being not advanced by a due gradation of preparatory incidents, wants at last the power to move, which constitutes the perfection of dramatick poetry. This reasoning is so specious, that it is received as true even by those who in daily experience feel it to be false. The interchanges of mingled scenes seldom fail to produce the intended vicissitudes of passion. Fiction cannot move so much, but that the attention may be easily transferred; and though it must be allowed that pleasing melancholy be sometimes interrupted by unwelcome levity, yet let it be considered likewise, that melancholy is often not pleasing, and that the disturbance of one man may be the relief of another; that different auditors have have different habitudes; and that, upon the whole, all pleasure consists in variety.

The players, who in their edition divided our author's works into comedies, histories, and tragedies, seem not to have distinguished the three kinds, by any very exact or definite ideas.

An action, which ended happily to the principal persons, however serious or distressful through its intermediate incidents, in their opinion constituted a comedy. This idea of a comedy continued long amongst us, and plays were written, which, by changing the catastrophe, were tragedies to-day, and comedies to-morrow.

Tragedy was not in those times a poem of more general dignity or elevation than comedy; it required only a calamitous conclusion, with which the common criticism of that age was satisfied, whatever lighter pleasure it afforded in its progress.

History was a series of actions, with no other than chronological succession, independent on each other, and without any tendency to introduce or regulate the conclusion. It is not always very nicely distinguished from tragedy. There is not much nearer approach to unity of action in the tragedy of Antony and Cleopatra, than in the history of Richard the Second. But a history might be continued through many plays; as it had no plan, it had no limits.

Through

Through all these denominations of the drama, Shakespeare's mode of composition is the same; an interchange of seriousness and merriment, by which the mind is softened at one time, and exhilarated at another. But whatever be his purpose, whether to gladden or depress, or to conduct the story, without vehemence or emotion, through tracts of easy and familiar dialogue, he never fails to attain his purpose; as he commands us, we laugh or mourn, or sit silent with quiet expectation, in tranquility without indifference.

When Shakespeare's plan is understood, most of the criticisms of Rhymer and Voltaire vanish away. The play of Hamlet is opened, without impropriety, by two centinels; Iago bellows at Brabantio's window, without injury to the scheme of the play, though in terms which a modern audience would not easily endure; the character of Polonius is reasonable and useful; and the Grave-diggers themselves may be heard with applause.

Shakespeare engaged in dramatick poetry with the world open before him; the rules of the ancients were yet known to few; the publick judgment was unformed; he had no example of such fame as might force him upon imitation, nor criticks of such authority as might restrain his extravagance: he therefore indulged his natural disposition, and his disposition, as Rhymer has remarked, led him to comedy. In tragedy he often writes with great appearance of toil and study, what is written at last with little felicity; but in his comick scenes, he seems to produce without labour, labour, what no labour can improve. In tragedy he is always struggling after some occasion to be comick, but in comedy he seems to repose, or to luxuriate, as in a mode of thinking congenial to his nature. In his tragick scenes there is always something wanting, but his comedy often surpasses expectation or desire. His comedy pleases by the thoughts and the language, and his tragedy for the greater part by incident and action. His tragedy seems to be skill, his comedy to be instinct.

The force of his comick scenes has suffered little diminution from the changes made by a century and a half, in manners or in words. As his personages act upon principles arising from genuine passion, very little modified by particular forms, their pleasures and vexations are communicable to all times and to all places; they are natural, and therefore durable; the adventitious peculiarities of personal habits, are only superficial dyes, bright and pleasing for a little while, yet soon fading to a dim tinct, without any remains of former lustre; but the discriminations of true passion are the colours of nature; they pervade the whole mass, and can only perish with the body that exhibits them. The accidental compositions of heterogeneous modes are dissolved by the chance which combined them; but the uniform simplicity of primitive qualities neither admits increase, nor suffers decay. The sand heaped by one flood is scattered by another, but the rock always continues in its place. The stream of time, which is continually washing the dissoluble fabricks of other poets, passes without injury by the adamant of Shakespear.

If there be, what I believe there is, in every nation, a stile which never becomes obsolete, a certain mode of phraseology so consonant and congenial to the analogy and principles of its respective language, as to remain settled and unaltered; this stile is probably to be sought in the common intercourse of life, among those who speak only to be understood, without ambition of elegance. The polite are always catching modish innovations, and the learned depart from established forms of speech, in hope of finding or making better; those who wish for distinction forsake the vulgar, when the vulgar is right; but there is a conversation above grossness and below refinement, where propriety resides, and where this poet seems to have gathered his comick dialogue. He is therefore more agreeable to the ears of the present age than any other author equally remote, and among his other excellencies deserves to be studied as one of the original masters of our language.

These observations are to be considered not as unexceptionably constant, but as containing general and predominant truth. Shakespeare's familiar dialogue is affirmed to be smooth and clear, yet not wholly without ruggedness or difficulty; as a country may be eminently fruitful, though it has spots unfit for cultivation: his characters are praised as natural though their sentiments are sometimes forced, and their actions improbable; as the earth upon the whole is spherical, though its surface is varied with protuberances and cavities.

Shake

Shakespeare with his excellencies has likewise faults, and faults sufficient to obscure and overwhelm any other merit. I shall shew them in the proportion in which they appear to me, without envious malignity or superstitious veneration. No question can be more innocently discussed than a dead poet's pretensions to renown; and little regard is due to that bigotry which sets candour higher than truth.

His first defect is that to which may be imputed most of the evil in books or in men. He sacrifices virtue to convenience, and is so much more careful to please than to instruct, that he seems to write without any moral purpose. From his writings indeed a system of social duty may be selected, for he that thinks reasonably must think morally; but his precepts and axioms drop casually from him; he makes no just distribution of good or evil, nor is always careful to shew in the virtuous a disapprobation of the wicked; he carries his persons indifferently through right and wrong, and at the close dismisses them without further care, and leaves their examples to operate by chance. This fault the barbarity of his age cannot extenuate; for it is always a writer's duty to make the world better, and justice is a virtue independent on time or place.

The plots are often so loosely formed, that a very slight consideration may improve them, and so carelessly pursued, that he seems not always fully to comprehend his own design. He omits opportunities of instructing or delighting, which the train of his story seems to force upon him, and apparently rejects those.

those exhibitions which would be more affecting, for the sake of those which are more easy.

It may be observed, that in many of his plays the latter part is evidently neglected. When he found himself near the end of his work, and in view of his reward, he shortened the labour to snatch the profit. He therefore remits his efforts where he should most vigorously exert them, and his catastrophe is improbably produced or imperfectly represented.

He had no regard to distinction of time or place, but gives to one age or nation, without scruple, the customs, institutions, and opinions of another, at the expence not only of likelihood, but of possibility. These faults Pope has endeavoured, with more zeal than judgment, to transfer to his imagined interpolators. We need not wonder to find Hector quoting Aristotle, when we see the loves of Theseus and Hippolyta combined with the Gothick mythology of fairies. Shakespeare, indeed, was not the only violator of chronology, for in the same age Sidney, who wanted not the advantages of learning, has, in his Arcadia, confounded the pastoral with the feudal times, the days of innocence, quiet, and security, with those of turbulence, violence, and adventure.

In his comick scenes he is seldom very successful, when he engages his characters in reciprocations of smartness and contests of sarcasm; their jests are commonly gross, and their pleasantry licentious; neither his gentlemen nor his ladies have much delicacy, nor are

are sufficiently distinguished from his clowns by any appearance of refined manners. Whether he represented the real conversation of his time is not easy to determine; the reign of Elizabeth is commonly supposed to have been a time of stateliness, formality, and reserve, yet perhaps the relaxations of that severity were not very elegant. There must, however, have been always some modes of gaiety preferable to others, and a writer ought to chuse the best.

In tragedy his performance seems constantly to be worse, as his labour is more. The effusions of passion, which exigence forces out, are for the most part striking and energetick; but whenever he solicits his invention, or strains his faculties, the offspring of his throes is tumour, meanness, tediousness, and obscurity.

In narration he affects a disproportionate pomp of diction, and a wearisome train of circumlocution, and tells the incident imperfectly in many words, which might have been more plainly delivered in few. Narration in dramatick poetry is naturally tedious, as it is unanimated and inactive, and obstructs the progress of the action; it should therefore always be rapid, and enlivened by frequent interruption. Shakespeare found it an encumbrance, and instead of lightening it by brevity, endeavoured to recommend it by dignity and splendor.

His declamations or set speeches are commonly cold and weak, for his power was the power of nature; when he endeavoured, like other tragick writers, to catch opportunities of amplification, and instead of inquiring what the occasion demanded, to shew how much his stores of knowledge could supply, he seldom escapes without the pity or resentment of his reader.

It is incident to him to be now and then entangled with an unwieldy sentiment, which he cannot well express, and will not reject; he struggles with it a while, and if it continues stubborn, comprises it in words such as occur, and leaves it to be disentangled and evolved by those who have more leisure to bestow upon it.

Not that always where the language is intricate the thought is subtle, or the image always great where the line is bulky; the equality of words to things is very often neglected, and trivial sentiments and vulgar ideas disappoint the attention, to which they are recommended by sonorous epithets and swelling figures.

But the admirers of this great poet have most reason to complain when he approaches nearest to his highest excellence, and seems fully resolved to sink them in dejection, and mollify them with tender emotions by the fall of greatness, the danger of innocence, or the crosses of love. What he does best, he soon ceases to do. He is not long soft and pathetick without some idle conceit, or contemptible equivocation. He no sooner begins to move, than he counteracts himself; and terror and pity, as they are rising in the mind, are checked and blasted by sudden frigidity.

A quibble

A quibble is to Shakespeare, what luminous vapours are to the traveller: he follows it at all adventures; it is sure to lead him out of his way, and sure to engulf him in the mire. It has some malignant power over his mind, and its fascinations are irresistible. Whatever be the dignity or profundity of his disquisition, whether he be enlarging knowledge or exalting affection, whether he be amusing attention with incidents, or enchainning it in suspense, let but a quibble spring up before him, and he leaves his work unfinished. A quibble is the golden apple for which he will always turn aside from his career, or stoop from his elevation. A quibble, poor and barren as it is, gave him such delight, that he was content to purchase it, by the sacrifice of reason, propriety, and truth. A quibble was to him the fatal Cleopatra for which he lost the world, and was content to lose it.

It will be thought strange, that, in enumerating the defects of this writer, I have not yet mentioned his neglect of the unities; his violation of those laws which have been instituted and established by the joint authority of poets and of criticks.

For his other deviations from the art of writing, I resign him to critical justice, without making any other demand in his favour, than that which must be indulged to all human excellence; that his virtues be rated with his failings: but, from the censure which this irregularity may bring upon him, I shall, with due reverence to that learning which I must oppose, adventure to try how I can defend him.

His histories, being neither tragedies nor comedies, are not subject to any of their laws; nothing more is necessary to all the praise which they expect, than that the changes of action be so prepared as to be understood, that the incidents be various and affecting, and the characters consistent, natural, and distinct. No other unity is intended, and therefore none is to be sought.

In his other works he has well enough preserved the unity of action. He has not, indeed, an intrigue regularly perplexed and regularly unravelled; he does not endeavour to hide his design only to discover it, for this is seldom the order of real events, and Shakespeare is the poet of nature: but his plan has commonly what Aristotle requires, a beginning, a middle, and an end; one event is concatenated with another, and the conclusion follows by easy consequence. There are perhaps some incidents that might be spared, as in other poets there is much talk that only fills up time upon the stage; but the general system makes gradual advances, and the end of the play is the end of expectation.

To the unities of time and place he has shewn no regard; and perhaps a nearer view of the principles on which they stand will diminish their value, and withdraw from them the veneration which, from the time of Corneille, they have very generally received, by discovering that they have given more trouble to the poet, than pleasure to the auditor.

The necessity of observing the unities of time and place arises from the supposed necessity of making the drama credible. The criticks hold it impossible, that an action of months or years can be possibly believed to pass in three hours; or that the spectator can suppose himself to sit in the theatre, while ambassadors go and return between distant kings, while armies are levied and towns besieged, while an exile wanders and returns, or till he whom they saw courting his mistress, shall lament the untimely fall of his son. The mind revolts from evident falsehood, and fiction loses its force when it departs from the resemblance of reality.

From the narrow limitation of time necessarily arises the contraction of place. The spectator, who knows that he saw the first act at Alexandria, cannot suppose that he sees the next at Rome, at a distance to which not the dragons of Medea could, in so short a time, have transported him; he knows with certainty that he has not changed his place; and he knows that place cannot change itself; that what was a house cannot become a plain; that what was Thebes can never be Persopolis.

Such is the triumphant language with which a critick exults over the misery of an irregular poet, and exults commonly without resistance or reply. It is time therefore to tell him, by the authority of Shakespeare, that he assumes, as an unquestionable principle, a position, which, while his breath is forming it into words, his understanding pronounces to be false. It is false, that any representation is mistaken for reality; that any dramattick fable in its materiality was ever credible, or, for a single moment, was ever credited.

The objection arising from the impossibility of passing the first hour at Alexandria, and the next at Rome, supposes, that when the play opens the spectator really imagines himself at Alexandria, and believes that his walk to the theatre has been a voyage to Egypt, and that he lives in the days of Antony and Cleopatra. Surely he that imagines this may imagine more. He that can take the stage at one time for the palace of the Ptolemies, may take it in half an hour for the promontory of Actium. Delusion, if delusion be admitted, has no certain limitation; if the spectator can be once persuaded, that his old acquaintance are Alexander and Cæsar, that a room illuminated with candles is the plain of Pharsalia, or the bank of Granicus, he is in a state of elevation above the reach of reason, or of truth, and from the heights of empyrean poetry, may despise the circumscriptions of terrestrial nature. There is no reason why a mind thus wandering in ecstacy should count the clock, or why an hour should not be a century in that calenture of the brains that can make the stage a field.

The truth is, that the spectators are always in their senses, and know, from the first act to the last, that the stage is only a stage, and that the players are only players. They come to hear a certain number of lines recited with just gesture and elegant modulation. The lines relate to some action, and an action must be be in some place; but the different actions that complete a story may be in places very remote from each other; and where is the absurdity of allowing that space to represent first Athens, and then Sicily, which was always known to be neither Sicily nor Athens, but a modern theatre.

By supposition, as place is introduced, time may be extended; the time required by the fable elapses for the most part between the acts; for, of so much of the action as is represented, the real and poetical duration is the same. If, in the first act, preparations for war against Mithridates are represented to be made in Rome, the event of the war may, without absurdity, be represented, in the catastrophe, as happening in Pontus; we know that there is neither war, nor preparation for war; we know that we are neither in Rome nor Pontus; that neither Mithridates nor Lucullus are before us. The drama exhibits successive imitations of successive actions, and why may not the second imitation represent an action that happened years after the first; if it be so connected with it, that nothing but time can be supposed to intervene. Time is, of all modes of existence, most obsequious to the imagination; a lapse of years is as easily conceived as a passage of hours. In contemplation we easily contract the time of real actions, and therefore willingly permit it to be contracted when we only see their imitation.

It will be asked, how the drama moves, if it is not credited. It is credited with all the credit due to a drama. It is credited, whenever it moves, as a just picture of a real original; as representing to the auditor what he would himself feel, if he were to do or suffer what is there feigned to be suffered or to be done. The reflection that strikes the heart is not, that the evils before us are real evils, but that they are evils to which we ourselves may be exposed. If there be any fallacy, it is not that we fancy the players, but that we fancy ourselves unhappy for a moment; but we rather lament the possibility than suppose the presence of misery, as a mother weeps over her babe, when she remembers that death may take it from her. The delight of tragedy proceeds from our consciousness of fiction; if we thought murders and treasons real, they would please no more.

Imitations produce pain or pleasure, not because they are mistaken for realities, but because they bring realities to mind. When the imagination is recreated by a painted landscape, the trees are not supposed capable to give us shade, or the fountains coolness; but we consider, how we should be pleased with such fountains playing beside us, and such woods waving over us. We are agitated in reading the history of Henry the Fifth, yet no man takes his book for the field of Agincourt. A dramatick exhibition is a book recited with concomitants that increase or diminish its effect. Familiar comedy is often more powerful on the theatre, than in the page; imperial tragedy is always less. The humour of Petruchio may be heightened by grimace; but what voice or what gesture can hope to add dignity or force to the soliloquy of Cato?

A play read, affects the mind like a play acted. It is therefore evident, that the action is not supposed to be real; and it follows, that between the acts a longer or shorter time may be allowed to pass, and that no more account of space or duration is to be taken by the auditor of a drama, than by the reader of a narrative, before whom may pass in an hour the life of a hero, or the revolutions of an empire.

Whether Shakespeare knew the unities, and rejected them by design, or deviated from them by happy ignorance, it is, I think, impossible to decide, and useless to enquire. We may reasonably suppose, that, when he rose to notice, he did not want the counsels and admonitions of scholars and criticks, and that he at last deliberately persisted in a practice, which he might have begun by chance. As nothing is essential to the fable, but unity of action, and as the unities of time and place arise evidently from false assumptions, and, by circumscribing the extent of the drama, lessen its variety, I cannot think it much to be lamented, that they were not known by him, or not observed: nor, if such another poet could arise, should I very vehemently reproach him, that his first act passed at Venice, and his next in Cyprus. Such violations of rules merely positive, become the comprehensive genius of Shakespeare, and such censures are suitable to the minute and slender criticism of Voltaire:

* *Non usque adeo permisit imis
Longus summa dies, ut non, si voce Metelli Serventur leges, malint a Cesare tolli.*

Yet

Yet when I speak thus slightly of dramatick rules, I cannot but recollect how much wit and learning may be produced against me; before such authorities I am afraid to stand, not that I think the present question one of those that are to be decided by mere authority, but because it is to be suspected, that these precepts have not been so easily received, but for better reasons than I have yet been able to find. The result of my enquiries, in which it would be ludicrous to boast of impartiality, is, that the unities of time and place are not essential to a just drama, that though they may sometimes conduce to pleasure, they are always to be sacrificed to the nobler beauties of variety and instruction; and that a play, written with nice observation of critical rules, is to be contemplated as an elaborate curiosity, as the product of superfluous and ostentatious art, by which is shewn, rather what is possible, than what is necessary.

He that, without diminution of any other excellence, shall preserve all the unities unbroken, deserves the like applause with the architect, who shall display all the orders of architecture in a citadel, without any deduction from its strength; but the principal beauty of a citadel is to exclude the enemy; and the greatest graces of a play are to copy nature, and instruct life.

Perhaps, what I have here not dogmatically but deliberately written, may recal the principles of the drama to a new examination. I am almost frightened at my own temerity; and when I estimate the fame and the strength of those that maintain the contrary opinion, opinion, am ready to sink down in reverential silence; as Aeneas withdrew from the defence of Troy, when he saw Neptune shaking the wall, and Juno heading the besiegers.

• Those whom my arguments cannot persuade to give their approbation to the judgment of Shakespeare, will easily, if they consider the condition of his life, make some allowance for his ignorance.

Every man's performances, to be rightly estimated, must be compared with the state of the age in which he lived, and with his own particular opportunities; and though to a reader a book be not worse or better for the circumstances of the author, yet as there is always a silent reference of human works to human abilities, and as the enquiry, how far man may extend his designs, or how high he may rate his native force, is of far greater dignity than in what rank we shall place any particular performance, curiosity is always busy to discover the instruments, as well as to survey the workmanship, to know how much is to be ascribed to original powers, and how much to casual and adventitious help. The palaces of Peru or Mexico were certainly mean and incommodious habitations, if compared to the houses of European monarchs; yet who could forbear to view them with astonishment, who remembered that they were built without the use of iron?

The English nation, in the time of Shakespeare, was yet struggling to emerge from barbarity. The philology of Italy had been transplanted hither in the reign reign of Henry the Eighth; and the learned languages had been successfully cultivated by Lilly, Linacre, and More; by Pole, Cheke, and Gardiner; and afterwards by Smith, Clerk, Haddon, and Ascham. Greek was now taught to boys in the principal schools; and those who united elegance with learning, read, with great diligence, the Italian and Spanish poets. But literature was yet confined to professed scholars, or to men and women of high rank. The publick was gross and dark; and to be able to read and write, was an accomplishment still valued for its rarity.

P R E F A C E.

Nations, like individuals, have their infancy. A people newly awakened to literary curiosity, being yet unacquainted with the true state of things, knows not how to judge of that which is proposed as its resemblance. Whatever is remote from common appearances is always welcome to vulgar, as to childish credulity; and of a country unenlightened by learning, the whole people is the vulgar. The study of those who then aspired to plebeian learning was laid out upon adventures, giants, dragons, and enchantments. The Death of Arthur was the favourite volume.

The mind, which has feasted on the luxurious wonders of fiction, has no taste of the insipidity of truth. A play, which imitated only the common occurrences of the world, would, upon the admirers of Palmerin and Guy of Warwick, have made little impression; he that wrote for such an audience was under the necessity of looking round for strange events events and fabulous transactions, and that incredibility, by which maturer knowledge is offended, was the chief recommendation of writings, to unskilful curiosity.

- Our author's plots are generally borrowed from novels; and it is reasonable to suppose, that he chose the most popular, such as were read by many, and related by more; for his audience could not have followed him through the intricacies of the drama, had they not held the thread of the story in their hands.

The stories, which we now find only in remoter authors, were in his time accessible and familiar. The fable of As you like it, which is supposed to be copied from Chaucer's Gamelyn, was a little pamphlet of those times; and old Mr. Cibber remembered the tale of Hamlet in plain English prose, which the critics have now to seek in Saxo Grammaticus.

His English histories he took from English chronicles and English ballads; and as the ancient writers were made known to his countrymen by versions, they supplied him with new subjects; he dilated some of Plutarch's lives into plays, when they had been translated by North.

His plots, whether historical or fabulous, are always crowded with incidents, by which the attention of a rude people was more easily caught than by sentiment or argumentation; and such is the power of the marvellous, even over those who despise it, that every

every man finds his mind more strongly seized by the tragedies of Shakespeare than of any other writer ; others please us by particular speeches, but he always makes us anxious for the event, and has perhaps excelled all but Homer in securing the first purpose of a writer, by exciting restless and unquenchable curiosity, and compelling him that reads his work to read it through.

The shows and bustle with which his plays abound have the same original. As knowledge advances, pleasure passes from the eye to the ear, but returns, as it declines, from the ear to the eye. Those to whom our author's labours were exhibited had more skill in pomps or processions than in poetical language, and perhaps wanted some visible and discriminated events, as comments on the dialogue. He knew how he should most please ; and whether his practice is more agreeable to nature, or whether his example has prejudiced the nation, we still find that on our stage something must be done as well as said, and inactive declamation is very coldly heard, however musical or elegant, passionate or sublime.

Voltaire expresses his wonder, that our author's extravagancies are endured by a nation, which has seen the tragedy of Cato. Let him be answered, that Addison speaks the language of poets, and Shakespeare, of men. We find in Cato innumerable beauties which enamour us of its author, but we see nothing that acquaints us with human sentiments or human actions ; we place it with the fairest and the noblest progeny which judgment propagates by conjunction junction with learning; but Othello is the vigorous and vivacious offspring of observation impregnated by genius. Cato affords a splendid exhibition of artificial and fictitious manners, and delivers just and noble sentiments, in diction easy, elevated, and harmonious, but its hopes and fears communicate no vibration to the heart; the composition refers us only to the writer; we pronounce the name of Cato, but we think on Addison.

The work of a correct and regular writer is a garden accurately formed and diligently planted, varied with shades, and scented with flowers; the composition of Shakespeare is a forest, in which oaks extend their branches, and pines tower in the air, interspersed sometimes with weeds and brambles, and sometimes giving shelter to myrtles and to roses; filling the eye with awful pomp, and gratifying the mind with endless diversity. Other poets display cabinets of precious rarities, minutely finished, wrought into shape, and polished into brightness. Shakespeare opens a mine which contains gold and diamonds in unexhaustible plenty, though clouded by incrustations, debased by impurities, and mingled with a mass of meaner minerals.

It has been much disputed, whether Shakespeare owed his excellence to his own native force, or whether he had the common helps of scholastick education, the precepts of critical science, and the examples of ancient authors.

There

There has always prevailed a tradition, that Shakespeare wanted learning, that he had no regular education, nor much skill in the dead languages. Jonson, his friend, affirms, that he had small Latin, and less Greek; who, besides that he had no imaginable temptation to falsehood, wrote at a time when the character and acquisitions of Shakespeare were known to multitudes. His evidence ought therefore to decide the controversy, unless some testimony of equal force could be opposed.

Some have imagined, that they have discovered deep learning in many imitations of old writers; but the examples which I have known urged, were drawn from books translated in his time; or were such easy coincidences of thought, as will happen to all who consider the same subjects; or such remarks on life or axioms of morality as float in conversation, and are transmitted through the world in proverbial sentences.

I have found it remarked, that, in this important sentence, Go before, I'll follow, we read a translation of, I prae, sequar. I have been told, that when Caliban, after a pleasing dream, says, I cry'd to sleep again, the author imitates Anacreon, who had, like every other man, the same wish on the same occasion.

There are a few passages which may pass for imitations, but so few, that the exception only confirms the rule; he obtained them from accidental quotations, or by oral communication, and as he used what he had, would have used more if he had obtained it.

The

The Comedy of Errors is confessedly taken from the Menæchmi of Plautus; from the only play of Plautus which was then in English. What can be more probable, than that he who copied that, would have copied more; but that those which were not translated were inaccessible?

Whether he knew the modern languages is uncertain. That his plays have some French scenes proves but little; he might easily procure them to be written, and probably, even though he had known the language in the common degree, he could not have written it without assistance. In the story of Romeo and Juliet he is observed to have followed the English translation, where it deviates from the Italian; but this on the other part proves nothing against his knowledge of the original. He was to copy, not what he knew himself, but what was known to his audience.

It is most likely that he had learned Latin sufficiently to make him acquainted with construction, but that he never advanced to an easy perusal of the Roman authors. Concerning his skill in modern languages, I can find no sufficient ground of determination; but as no imitations of French or Italian authors have been discovered, though the Italian poetry was then high in esteem, I am inclined to believe, that he read little more than English, and chose for his fables only such tales as he found translated.

That much knowledge is scattered over his works is very justly observed by Pope, but it is often such knowledge as books did not supply. He that will understand Shakespear, must not be content to study him in the closet, he must look for his meaning sometimes among the sports of the field, and sometimes among the manufactures of the shop.

There is however proof enough that he was a very diligent reader, nor was our language then so indigent of books, but that he might very liberally indulge his curiosity without excursion into foreign literature. Many of the Roman authors were translated, and some of the Greek; the Reformation had filled the kingdom with theological learning; most of the topicks of human disquisition had found English writers; and poetry had been cultivated, not only with diligence, but success. This was a stock of knowledge sufficient for a mind so capable of appropriating and improving it.

But the greater part of his excellence was the product of his own genius. He found the English stage in a state of the utmost rudeness; no essay either in tragedy or comedy had appeared, from which it could be discovered to what degree of delight either one or other might be carried. Neither character nor dialogue were yet understood. Shakespear may be truly said to have introduced them both amongst us, and in some of his happier scenes to have carried them both to the utmost height.

By what gradations of improvement he proceeded, is not easily known; for the chronology of his works is yet unsettled. Rowe is of opinion, that perhaps we are not to look for his beginning, like those of other writers, in his least perfect works; art had so little, and nature so large a share in what he did, that for ought I know, says he, the performances of his youth, as they were the most vigorous, were the best. But the power of nature is only the power of using, to any certain purpose the materials which diligence procures, or opportunity supplies. Nature gives no man knowledge, and when images are collected by study and experience, can only assist in combining or applying them. Shakespeare, however favoured by nature, could impart only what he had learned; and as he must increase his ideas, like other mortals, by gradual acquisition, he, like them, grew wiser as he grew older, could display life better, as he knew it more, and instruct with more efficacy, as he was himself more amply instructed.

There is a vigilance of observation and accuracy of distinction which books and precepts cannot confer; from this almost all original and native excellence proceeds. Shakespeare must have looked upon mankind with perspicacity, in the highest degree curious and attentive. Other writers borrow their characters from preceding writers, and diversify them only by the accidental appendages of present manners; the dress is a little varied, but the body is the same. Our author had both matter and form to provide; for, except the characters of Chaucer, to whom I think he is not much indebted, there were no writers in English, and perhaps not many in other modern languages, which shewed life in its native colours.

The contest about the original benevolence or malignity of man had not yet commenced. Speculation had not yet attempted to analyse the mind, to trace the passions to their sources, to unfold the seminal principles of vice and virtue, or sound the depths of the heart for the motives of action. All those enquiries, which from that time that human nature became the fashionable study, have been made sometimes with nice discernment, but often with idle subtilty, were yet unattempted. The tales, with which the infancy of learning was satisfied, exhibited only the superficial appearances of action, related the events, but omitted the causes, and were formed for such as delighted in wonders rather than in truth. Mankind was not then to be studied in the closet; he that would know the world, was under the necessity of gleaning his own remarks, by mingling as he could in its business and amusements.

Boyle congratulated himself upon his high birth, because it favoured his curiosity, by facilitating his access. Shakespeare had no such advantage, he came to London a needy adventurer, and lived for a time by very mean employments. Many works of genius and learning have been performed in states of life that appear very little favourable to thought or to enquiry; so many, that he who considers them is inclined to think that he sees enterprize and perseverance predominating over all external agency, and bidding help and hindrance vanish before them. The genius of Shakespeare was not to be depressed by the weight of poverty, nor limited by the narrow conversation to which men in want are inevitably condemned;

demned; the incumbrances of his fortune were shaken from his mind, as dew-drops from a lion's mane.

Though he had so many difficulties to encounter, and so little assistance to surmount them, he has been able to obtain an exact knowledge of many modes of life, and many casts of native dispositions; to vary them with great multiplicity; to mark them by nice distinctions; and to shew them in full view by proper combinations. In this part of his performances he had none to imitate, but has been himself imitated by all succeeding writers; and it may be doubted, whether from all his successors more maxims of theoretical knowledge, or more rules of practical prudence, can be collected, than he alone has given to his country.

Nor was his attention confined to the actions of men; he was an exact surveyor of the inanimate world; his descriptions have always some peculiarities, gathered by contemplating things as they really exist. It may be observed, that the oldest poets of many nations preserve their reputation, and that the following generations of wit, after a short celebrity, sink into oblivion. The first, whoever they be, must take their sentiments and descriptions immediately from knowledge; the resemblance is therefore just, their descriptions are verified by every eye, and their sentiments acknowledged by every breast: Those whom their fame invites to the same studies, copy partly them, and partly nature, till the books of one age gain such authority, as to stand in the place of nature to another, and imitation, always deviating a little, becomes at last capricious and casual. Shakespeare, whether life or nature be his subject, shews plainly, that he has seen with his own eyes; he gives the image which he receives, not weakened or distorted by the intervention of any other mind; the ignorant feel his representations to be just, and the learned see that they are complete.

Perhaps it would not be easy to find any author, except Homer, who invented so much as Shakespeare, who so much advanced the studies which he cultivated, or effused so much novelty upon his age or country. The form, the characters, the language, and the shows of the English drama are his. He seems, says Dennis, to have been the very original of our English tragical harmony, that is, the harmony of blank verse, diversified often by dissyllable and trissyllable terminations. For the diversity distinguishes the uniform blank harmony, and by bringing it nearer to common prose makes it more proper to gain attention, and more fit for action and dialogue. Such verse we make when we are writing prose; we make such verse in common conversation.

I know not whether this praise is rigorously just. The dissyllable termination, which the critick rightly appropriates to the drama, is to be found, though, I think, not in Gorboduc, which is confessedly before our author; yet in *Hieronymo, of which the date is not certain, but which there is reason to believe at least as old as his earliest plays. This however is certain, that he is the first who taught either tragedy or comedy to please, there being no theatrical piece of any older writer, of which the name is known, except to antiquaries and collectors of books, which are sought because they are scarce, and would not have been scarce, had they been much esteemed.

* It appears from the induction of Ben Jonson's Bartholomew Fair to have been acted before the year 1590. STEEVENS.

To him we must ascribe the praise, unless Spenser may divide it with him, of having first discovered to how much smoothness and harmony the English language could be softened. He has speeches, perhaps sometimes scenes, which have all the delicacy of Rowe, without his effeminacy. He endeavours indeed commonly to strike by the force and vigour of his dialogue, but he never executes his purpose better, than when he tries to sooth by softness.

Yet it must be at last confessed, that as we owe every thing to him, he owes something to us; that, if much of his praise is paid by perception and judgment, much is likewise given by custom and veneration. ~~We fix our eyes upon his graces, and turn them from his deformities, and endure in him what we should in another loath or despise.~~ If we endured without praising, respect for the father of our drama might excuse us; but I have seen, in the book of some modern critick, a collection of anomalies, which shew that he has corrupted language by every mode of depravation, but which his admirer has accumulated as a monument of honour,

He has scenes of undoubted and perpetual excellence, but perhaps not one play, which, if it were now exhibited as the work of a contemporary writer, would be heard to the conclusion. I am indeed far from thinking, that his works were wrought to his own ideas of perfection; when they were such as would satisfy the audience, they satisfied the writer. It is seldom that authors, though more studious of fame than Shakespear, rise much above the standard of their own age; to add a little to what is best will always be sufficient for present praise, and those who find themselves exalted into fame, are willing to credit their encomiasts, and to spare the labour of contending with themselves.

It does not appear, that Shakespear thought his works worthy of posterity, that he levied any ideal tribute upon future times, or had any further prospect, than of present popularity and present profit. When his plays had been acted, his hope was at an end; he solicited no addition of honour from the reader. He therefore made no scruple to repeat the same jests in many dialogues, or to entangle different plots by the same knot of perplexity, which may be at least forgiven him, by those who recollect, that of Congreve's four comedies, two are concluded by a marriage in a mask, by a deception, which perhaps never happened, and which, whether likely or not, he did not invent.

So careless was this great poet of future fame, that, though he retired to ease and plenty, while he was yet little declined into the vale of years, before he could be disgusted with fatigue, or disabled by infirmity, he made no collection of his works, nor desired to rescue

rescue those that had been already published from the depravations that obscured them, or secure to the rest a better destiny, by giving them to the world in their genuine state.

.Of the plays which bear the name of Shakespeare in the late editions, the greater part were not published till about seven years after his death, and the few which appeared in his life are apparently thrust into the world without the care of the author, and therefore probably without his knowledge.

Of all the publishers, clandestine or professed, their negligence and unskilfulness has by the late revisers been sufficiently shewn. The faults of all are indeed numerous and gross, and have not only corrupted many passages perhaps beyond recovery, but have brought others into suspicion, which are only obscured by obsolete phraseology, or by the writer's unskilfulness and affectation. To alter is more easy than to explain, and temerity is a more common quality than diligence. Those who saw that they must employ conjecture to a certain degree, were willing to indulge it a little further. Had the author published his own works, we should have sat quietly down to disentangle his intricacies, and clear his obscurities; but now we tear what we cannot loose, and eject what we happen not to understand.

The faults are more than could have happened without the concurrence of many causes. The style of Shakespeare was in itself ungrammatical, perplexed, and obscure; his works were transcribed for the players by those who may be supposed to have seldom understood them; they were transcribed by copiers equally unskilful, who still multiplied errors; they were perhaps sometimes mutilated by the actors, for the sake of shortening the speeches; and were at last printed without correction of the press.
players

In this state they remained, not as Dr. Warburton supposes, because they were unregarded, but because the editor's art was not yet applied to modern languages, and our ancestors were accustomed to so much negligence of English printers, that they could very patiently endure it. At last an edition was undertaken by Rowe; not because a poet was to be published by a poet, for Rowe seems to have thought very little on correction or explanation, but that our author's works might appear like those of his fraternity, with the appendages of a life and recommendatory preface. Rowe has been clamorously blamed for not performing what he did not undertake; and it is time that justice be done him, by confessing, that though he seems to have had no thought of corruption beyond the printer's errors, yet he has made many emendations, if they were not made before, which his successors have received without acknowledgment, and which, if they had produced them, would have filled pages and pages with censures of the stupidity by which the faults were committed, with displays of the absurdities which they involved, with ostentatious expositions of the new reading, and self-congratulations on the happiness of discovering it.

As of the other editors, I have preserved the prefaces, I have likewise borrowed the author's life from Rowe, though not written with much elegance or spirit; it relates however what is now to be known, and therefore deserves to pass through all succeeding publications.

The nation had been for many years content enough with Mr. Rowe's performance, when Mr. Pope made them acquainted with the true state of Shakespeare's text, shewed that it was extremely corrupt, and gave reason to hope that there were means of reforming it. He collated the old copies, which none had thought to examine before, and restored many lines to their integrity; but, by a very compendious criticism, he rejected whatever he disliked, and thought more of amputation than of cure,

I know not why he is commended by Dr. Warbuton for distinguishing the genuine from the spurious plays. In this choice he exerted no judgment of his own; the plays which he received, were given by Hemings and Condell, the first editors; and those which he rejected, though, according to the licentiousness of the press in those times, they were printed during Shakespeare's life, with his name, had been omitted by his friends, and were never added to his works before the edition of 1664, from which they were copied by the later printers.

This is a work which Pope seems to have thought unworthy of his abilities, being not able to suppress his contempt of the dull duty of an editor. He understood stood but half his undertaking. The duty of a collator is indeed dull, yet, like other tedious tasks, is very necessary; but an emendatory critick would ill discharge his duty, without qualities very different from dulness. In perusing a corrupted piece, he must have before him all possibilities of meaning, with all possibilities of expression. Such must be his comprehension of thought, and such his copiousness of language. Out of many readings possible, he must be able to select that which best suits with the state, opinions, and modes of language prevailing in every age, and with his author's particular cast of thought, and turn of expression. Such must be his knowledge, and such his taste. Conjectural criticism demands more than humanity possesses, and he that exercises it with most praise, has very frequent need of indulgence. Let us now be told no more of the dull duty of an editor.

Confidence is the common consequence of success. They whose excellence of any kind has been loudly celebrated, are ready to conclude, that their powers are universal. Pope's edition fell below his own expectations, and he was so much offended, when he was found to have left any thing for others to do, that he passed the latter part of his life in a state of hostility with verbal criticism.

I have retained all his notes, that no fragment of so great a writer may be lost; his preface, valuable alike for elegance of composition and justness of remark, and containing a general criticism on his author, thor, so extensive that little can be added, and so exact, that little can be disputed, every editor has an interest to suppress, but that every reader would demand its insertion.

Pope was succeeded by Theobald, a man of narrow comprehension, and small acquisitions, with no native and intrinsic splendor of genius, with little of the artificial light of learning, but zealous for minute accuracy, and not negligent in pursuing it. He collated the ancient copies, and rectified many errors. A man so anxiously scrupulous might have been expected to do more, but what little he did was commonly right.

In his reports of copies and editions he is not to be trusted without examination. He speaks sometimes indefinitely of copies, when he has only one. In his enumeration of editions, he mentions the two first folios as of high, and the third folio as of middle authority; but the truth is, that the first is equivalent to all others, and that the rest only deviate from it by the printer's negligence. Whoever has any of the folios has all, excepting those diversities which mere reiteration of editions will produce. I collated them all at the beginning, but afterwards used only the first.

Of his notes I have generally retained those which he retained himself in his second edition, except when they were confuted by subsequent annotators, or were too minute to merit preservation. I have sometimes adopted his restoration of a comma, without inserting the panegyrick in which he celebrated himself for his atchievement. The exuberant excrescence of his diction I have often lopped, his triumphant exultations over Pope and Rowe I have sometimes suppressed, and his contemptible ostentation I have frequently concealed ; but I have in some places shewn him, as he would have shewn himself, for the reader's diversion, that the inflated emptiness of some notes may justify or excuse the contraction of the rest.
the

Theobald, thus weak and ignorant, thus mean and faithless, thus petulant and ostentatious, by the good luck of having Pope for his enemy, has escaped, and escaped alone, with reputation, from this undertaking. So willingly does the world support those who solicit favour, against those who command reverence ; and so easily is he praised, whom no man can envy.

Our author fell then into the hands of Sir Thomas Hanmer, the Oxford editor, a man, in my opinion, eminently qualified by nature for such studies. He had, what is the first requisite to emendatory criticism, that intuition by which the poet's intention is immediately discovered, and that dexterity of intellect which dispatches its work by the easiest means. He had undoubtedly read much ; his acquaintance with customs, opinions, and traditions, seems to have been large ; and he is often learned without shew. He seldom passes what he does not understand, without an attempt to find or to make a meaning, and sometimes hastily makes what a little more attention would have found. He is solicitous to reduce to grammar, what he could not be sure that his author intended to be grammatical. Shakespeare regarded more the series of ideas, than of words ; and his language, not being designed for the reader's desk, was all that he desired it to be, if it conveyed his meaning to the audience.

Hanmer's care of the metre has been too violently censured. He found the measure reformed in so many passages, by the silent labours of some editors, with the silent acquiescence of the rest, that he thought himself allowed to extend a little further the licence, which had already been carried so far without reprehension ; and of his corrections in general, it must be confessed, that they are often just, and made commonly with the least possible violation of the text.

But, by inserting his emendations, whether invented or borrowed, into the page, without any notice of varying copies, he has appropriated the labour of his predecessors, and made his own edition of little authority. His confidence indeed, both in himself and others, was too great ; he supposes all to be right that was done by Pope and Theobald ; he seems not to suspect a critick of fallibility, and it was but reasonable that he should claim what he so liberally granted.

As he never writes without careful enquiry and diligent consideration, I have received all his notes, and believe that every reader will wish for more.

Of the last editor it is more difficult to speak. Respect is due to high place, tenderness to living reputation, and veneration to genius and learning ; but he cannot be justly offended at that liberty of which he has himself so frequently given an example, nor very solicitous what is thought of notes, which he ought never to have considered as part of his serious employments, and which, I suppose, since the ardor of composition is remitted, he no longer numbers among his happy effusions.

The original and predominant error of his commentary, is acquiescence in his first thoughts ; that precipitation which is produced by consciousness of quick discernment ; and that confidence which presumes to do, by surveying the surface, what labour only can perform, by penetrating the bottom. His notes exhibit sometimes perverse interpretations, and sometimes improbable conjectures ; he at one time gives the author more profundity of meaning than the sentence admits, and at another discovers absurdities, where the sense is plain to every other reader. But his emendations are likewise often happy and just ; and his interpretation of obscure passages learned and sagacious.

Of his notes, I have commonly rejected those, against which the general voice of the publick has exclaimed, or which their own incongruity immediately condemns, and which, I suppose the author himself would desire to be forgotten. Of the rest, to part I have given the highest approbation, by inserting serting the offered reading in the text; part I have left to the judgment of the reader, as doubtful, though specious; and part I have censured without reserve, but I am sure without bitterness of malice, and, I hope, without wantonness of insult.

It is no pleasure to me, in revising my volumes, to observe how much paper is wasted in confutation. Whoever considers the revolutions of learning, and the various questions of greater or less importance, upon which wit and reason have exercised their powers, must lament the unsuccessfulness of enquiry, and the slow advances of truth, when he reflects, that great part of the labour of every writer is only the destruction of those that went before him. The first care of the builder of a new system, is to demolish the fabricks which are standing. The chief desire of him that comments an author, is to shew how much other commentators have corrupted and obscured him. The opinions prevalent in one age, as truths above the reach of controversy, are confuted and rejected in another, and rise again to reception in remoter times. Thus the human mind is kept in motion without progress. Thus sometimes truth and error, and sometimes contrarieties of error, take each other's place by reciprocal invasion. The tide of seeming knowledge which is poured over one generation, retires and leaves another naked and barren; the sudden meteors of intelligence, which for a while appear to shoot their beams into the regions of obscurity, on a sudden withdraw their lustre, and leave mortals again to grope their way.

These elevations and depressions of renown, and the contradictions to which all improvers of knowledge must for ever be exposed, since they are not escaped by the highest and brightest of mankind, may surely be endured with patience by criticks and annotators, who can rank themselves but as the satellites of their authors. How canst thou beg for life, says Homer's hero to his captive, when thou knowest that thou art now to suffer only what must another day be suffered by Achilles?

Dr. Warburton had a name sufficient to confer celebrity on those who could exalt themselves into antagonists, and his notes have raised a clamour too loud to be distinct. His chief assailants are the authors of The canons of criticism, and of The revulst of Shakespeare's text; of whom one ridicules his errors with airy petulance, suitable enough to the levity of the controversy; the other attacks them with gloomy malignity, as if he were dragging to justice an assassin or incendiary. The one stings like a fly, sucks a little blood, takes a gay flutter, and returns for more; the other bites like a viper, and would be glad to leave inflammations and gangrene behind him. When I think on one, with his confederates, I remember the danger of Coriolanus, who was afraid that girls with spits, and boys with stones, should slay him in puny battle; when the other crosses my imagination, I remember the prodigy in Macbeth:

*A falcon tow'ring in his pride of place,
Was by a mousing owl hawk'd at and kill'd.*

Let me however do them justice. One is a wit, and one a scholar*. They have both shewn acuteness sufficient in the discovery of faults, and have both advanced some probable interpretations of obscure passages; but when they aspire to conjecture and emendation, it appears how falsely we all estimate our own abilities, and the little which they have been able to perform might have taught them more candour to the endeavours of others.

Before Dr. Warburton's edition, Critical observations on Shakespeare had been published by Mr. Upton†, a man skilled in languages, and acquainted with books, but who seems to have had no great vigour of genius or nicety of taste. Many of his explanations are curious and useful, but he likewise, though he professed to oppose the licentious confidence of editors, and adhere to the old copies, is unable to restrain the rage of emendation, though his ardour is ill seconded by his skill. Every cold empirick, when his heart is expanded by a successful experiment, swells into a theorist, and the laborious collator at some unlucky moment frolicks in conjecture.

Critical, historical, and explanatory notes have been likewise published upon Shakespeare by Dr. Grey,

* It is extraordinary that this gentleman should attempt so voluminous a work, as the Revisal of Shakespeare's text, when he tells us in his preface, "he was not so fortunate as to be furnished with either of the folio editions, much less any of the ancient quartos: and even Sir Thomas Hanmer's performance was known to him only by Dr. Warburton's representation." FARMER.

† Republished by him in 1748, after Dr. Warburton's edition, with alterations, &c. STEEVENS.

whose diligent perusal of the old English writers has enabled him to make some useful observations. What he undertook he has well enough performed, but as he neither attempts judicial nor emendatory criticism, he employs rather his memory than his sagacity. It were to be wished that all would endeavour to imitate his modesty, who have not been able to surpass his knowledge.

I can say with great sincerity of all my predecessors, what I hope will hereafter be said of me, that not one has left Shakespeare without improvement, nor is there one to whom I have not been indebted for assistance and information. Whatever I have taken from them, it was my intention to refer to its original author, and it is certain, that what I have not given to another, I believed when I wrote it to be my own. In some perhaps I have been anticipated; but if I am ever found to encroach upon the remarks of any other commentator, I am willing that the honour, be it more or less, should be transferred to the first claimant, for his right, and his alone, stands above dispute; the second can prove his pretensions only to himself, nor can himself always distinguish invention, with sufficient certainty, from recollection.

They have all been treated by me with candour, which they have not been careful of observing to one another. It is not easy to discover from what cause the acrimony of a scholiast can naturally proceed. The subjects to be discussed by him are of very small importance; they involve neither property nor liberty; nor favour the interest of sect or party. The various readings of copies, and different interpretations of a passage, seem to be questions that might exercise the wit, without engaging the passions. But whether it be, that small things make mean men proud, and vanity catches small occasions; or that all contrariety of opinion, even in those that can defend it no longer, makes proud men angry; there is often found in commentaries a spontaneous strain of invective and contempt, more eager and venomous than is vented by the most furious controvertist in politicks against those whom he is hired to defame.
various

Perhaps the lightness of the matter may conduce to the vehemence of the agency; when the truth to be investigated is so near to inexistence, as to escape attention, its bulk is to be enlarged by rage and exclamation: that to which all would be indifferent in its original state, may attract notice when the fate of a name is appended to it. A commentator has indeed great temptations to supply by turbulence what he wants of dignity, to beat his little gold to a spacious surface, to work that to foam which no art or diligence can exalt to spirit.

The notes which I have borrowed or written are either illustrative, by which difficulties are explained; or judicial, by which faults and beauties are remarked; or emendatory, by which depravations are corrected.

The explanations transcribed from others, if I do not subjoin any other interpretation, I suppose commonly to be right, at least I intend by acquiescence to confess, that I have nothing better to propose,

After the labours of all the editors, I found many passages which appeared to me likely to obstruct the greater number of readers, and thought it my duty, to facilitate their passage. It is impossible for an expositor not to write too little for some, and too much for others. He can only judge what is necessary by his own experience; and how long soever he may deliberate, will at last explain many lines which the learned will think impossible to be mistaken, and omit many for which the ignorant will want his help. These are censures merely relative, and must be quietly endured. I have endeavoured to be neither superfluously copious, nor scrupulously reserved, and hope that I have made my author's meaning accessible to many, who before were frightened from perusing him, and contributed something to the publick, by diffusing innocent and rational pleasure.

The complete explanation of an author not systematick and consequential, but desultory and vagrant, abounding in casual allusions and light hints, is not to be expected from any single scholiast. All personal reflections, when names are suppressed, must be in a few years irrecoverably obliterated; and customs, too minute to attract the notice of law, such as modes of dress, formalities of conversation, rules of visits, disposition of furniture, and practices of ceremony, which naturally find places in familiar dialogue, are so fugitive and unsubstantial, that they are not easily retained or recovered. What can be known will be collected by chance, from the recesses of obscure and obsolete

obsolete papers, perused commonly with some other view. Of this knowledge every man has some, and none has much; but when an author has engaged the publick attention, those who can add any thing to his illustration, communicate their discoveries, and time produces what had eluded diligence.

To time I have been obliged to resign many passages, which, though I did not understand them, will perhaps hereafter be explained, having, I hope, illustrated some, which others have neglected or mistaken, sometimes by short remarks, or marginal directions, such as every editor has added at his will, and often by comments more laborious than the matter will seem to deserve; but that which is most difficult is not always most important, and to an editor nothing is a trifle by which his author is obscured.

The poetical beauties or defects I have not been very diligent to observe. Some plays have more, and some fewer judicious observations, not in proportion to their difference of merit, but because I gave this part of my design to chance and to caprice. The reader, I believe, is seldom pleased to find his opinion anticipated; it is natural to delight more in what we find or make, than in what we receive. Judgment, like other faculties, is improved by practice, and its advancement is hindered by submission to dictatorial decisions, as the memory grows torpid by the use of a table-book. Some initiation is however necessary; of all skill, part is infused by precept, and part is obtained by habit; I have therefore shewn so much as may enable the candidate of criticism to discover the rest.

To the end of most plays I have added short strictures, containing a general censure of faults, or praise of excellence; in which I know not how much I have concurred with the current opinion; but I have not, by any affectation of singularity, deviated from it. Nothing is minutely and particularly examined, and therefore it is to be supposed, that in the plays which are condemned there is much to be praised, and in these which are praised much to be condemned.

The part of criticism in which the whole succession of editors has laboured with the greatest diligence, which has occasioned the most arrogant ostentation, and excited the keenest acrimony, is the emendation of corrupted passages, to which the publick attention having been first drawn by the violence of the contention between Pope and Theobald, has been continued by the persecution, which, with a kind of conspiracy, has been since raised against all the publishers of Shakespeare.

That many passages have passed in a state of depravation through all the editions is indubitably certain; of these the restoration is only to be attempted by collation of copies, or sagacity of conjecture. The collator's province is safe and easy, the conjecrurer's perilous and difficult. Yet as the greater part of the plays are extant only in one copy, the peril must not be avoided, nor the difficulty refused.

Of

Of the readings which this emulation of amendment has hitherto produced, some from the labours of every publisher I have advanced into the text; those are to be considered as in my opinion sufficiently supported; some I have rejected without mention, as evidently erroneous; some I have left in the notes without censure or approbation, as resting in equipoise between objection and defence; and some, which seemed specious but not right, I have inserted with a subsequent animadversion.

Having classed the observations of others, I was at last to try what I could substitute for their mistakes, and how I could supply their omissions. I collated such copies as I could procure, and wished for more, but have not found the collectors of these rarities very communicative. Of the editions which chance or kindness put into my hands I have given an enumeration, that I may not be blamed for neglecting what I had not the power to do.

By examining the old copies, I soon found that the later publishers, with all their boasts of diligence, suffered many passages to stand unauthorized, and contented themselves with Rowe's regulation of the text, even where they knew it to be arbitrary, and with a little consideration might have found it to be wrong. Some of these alterations are only the ejection of a word for one that appeared to him more elegant or more intelligible. These corruptions I have often silently rectified; for the history of our language, and the true force of our words, can only be preserved, by keeping the text of authors free from from

from adulteration. Others, and those very frequent, smoothed the cadence, or regulated the measure; on these I have not exercised the same rigour; if only a word was transposed, or a particle inserted or omitted, I have sometimes suffered the line to stand; for the inconstancy of the copies is such, as that some liberties may be easily permitted. But this practice I have not suffered to proceed far, having restored the primitive diction wherever it could for any reason be preferred.

The emendations, which comparison of copies supplied, I have inserted in the text: sometimes, where the improvement was slight, without notice, and sometimes with an account of the reasons of the change.

Conjecture, though it be sometimes unavoidable, I have not wantonly nor licentiously indulged. It has been my settled principle, that the reading of the ancient books is probably true, and therefore is not to be disturbed for the sake of elegance, perspicuity, or mere improvement of the sense. For though much credit is not due to the fidelity, nor any to the judgment of the first publishers, yet they who had the copy before their eyes were more likely to read it right, than we who read it only by imagination. But it is evident that they have often made strange mistakes by ignorance or negligence, and that therefore something may be properly attempted by criticism, keeping the middle way between presumption and timidity.

Such criticism I have attempted to practise, and, where any passage appeared inextricably perplexed, have endeavoured to discover how it may be recalled to sense, with least violence. But my first labour is, always to turn the old text on every side, and try if there be any interstice, through which light can find its way; nor would Huetius himself condemn me, as refusing the trouble of research, for the ambition of alteration. In this modest industry I have not been unsuccessful. I have rescued many lines from the violations of temerity, and secured many scenes from the inroads of correction. I have adopted the Roman sentiment, that it is more honourable to save a citizen, than to kill an enemy, and have been more careful to protect than to attack.

I have preserved the common distribution of the plays into acts, though I believe it to be in almost all the plays void of authority. Some of those which are divided in the later editions have no division in the first folio, and some that are divided in the folio have no division in the preceding copies. The settled mode of the theatre requires four intervals in the play, but few, if any, of our author's compositions can be properly distributed in that manner. An act is so much of the drama as passes without intervention of time, or change of place. A pause makes a new act. In every real, and therefore in every imitative action, the intervals may be more or fewer, the restriction of five acts being accidental and arbitrary. This Shakespeare knew, and this he practised; his plays were written, and at first printed in one unbroken continuity, and ought now to be exhibited with with short pauses, interposed as often as the scene is changed, or any considerable time is required to pass. This method would at once quell a thousand absurdities.

In restoring the author's works to their integrity, I have considered the punctuation as wholly in my power; for what could be their care of colons and commas, who corrupted words and sentences. Whatever could be done by adjusting points, is therefore silently performed, in some plays, with much diligence, in others with less; it is hard to keep a busy eye steadily fixed upon evanescent atoms, or a discursive mind upon evanescent truth.

The same liberty has been taken with a few particles, or other words of slight effect. I have sometimes inserted or omitted them without notice. I have done that sometimes, which the other editors have done always, and which indeed the state of the text may sufficiently justify.

The greater part of readers, instead of blaming us for passing trifles, will wonder that on mere trifles so much labour is expended, with such importance of debate, and such solemnity of diction. To these I answer with confidence, that they are judging of an art which they do not understand; yet cannot much reproach them with their ignorance, nor promise that they would become in general, by learning criticism, more useful, happier, or wiser.

ENTERING SCENE. LUCIUS & DAMIANUS AND BY I.
Good. • • •

Enter Ferrex at one dore. Porrex at another.
The fight. Ferrex is slayne. To them Videna the Queene. to her Damasus. to him Lucius.

Enter Porrex sad with Dordan his man. R. P.

Enter Progne with the sampler. to her Tereus from hunting wth. his Lords. to them Philomele with Itis hed in a dish. Mercury comes and all vanish. to him 3 Lords. Th. Goodale. Hary. W.
Sly.

Henry speaks. to him Lieutenant Purfevaunt

As I practised conjecture more, I learned to trust it less; and after I had printed a few plays, resolved to insert none of my own readings in the text. Upon this caution I now congratulate myself, for every day increases my doubt of my emendations.

Since I have confined my imagination to the margin, it must not be considered as very reprehensible, if I have suffered it to play some freaks in its own dominion. There is no danger in conjecture, if it be proposed as conjecture; and while the text remains uninjured, those changes may be safely offered, which are not considered even by him that offers them as necessary or safe.

If my readings are of little value, they have not been ostentatiously displayed or importunately obtruded. I could have written longer notes, for the art of writing notes is not of difficult attainment. The work is performed, first by railing at the stupidity, negligence, ignorance, and asinine tastelessness of the former editors, and shewing, from all that goes before and all that follows, the inelegance and absurdity of the old reading; then by proposing something, which to superficial readers would seem specious, but which the editor rejects with indignation; then by producing the true reading, with a long paraphrase, and concluding with loud acclamations on the discovery, and a sober wish for the advancement and prosperity of genuine criticism.

All this may be done, and perhaps done sometimes without impropriety. But I have always suspected that

that the reading is right, which requires many words to prove it wrong; and the emendation wrong, that cannot without so much labour appear to be right. The justness of a happy restoration strikes at once, and the moral precept may be well applied to criticism, quod dubitas ne feceris.

To dread the shore which he sees spread with wrecks, is natural to the sailor. I had before my eye, so many critical adventures ended in miscarriage, that caution was forced upon me. I encountered in every page wit struggling with its own sophistry, and learning confused by the multiplicity of its views. I was forced to censure those whom I admired, and could not but reflect, while I was dispossessing their emendations, how soon the same fate might happen to my own, and how many of the readings which I have corrected may be by some other editor defended and established.

*Criticks I saw, that other's names efface,
And fix their own, with labour, in the place;
Their own, like others, soon their place resign'd,
Or disappear'd, and left the first behind.* POPE.

That a conjectural critick should often be mistaken, cannot be wonderful, either to others or himself, if it be considered, that in his art there is no system, no principal and axiomatical truth that regulates subordinate positions. His chance of error is renewed at every attempt; an oblique view of the passage, a slight misapprehension of a phrase, a casual inattention to the parts connected, is sufficient to make him him not only fail, but fail ridiculously; and when he succeeds best, he produces perhaps but one reading of many probable, and he that suggests another will always be able to dispute his claims.

It is an unhappy state, in which danger is hid under pleasure. The allurements of emendation are scarcely resistible. Conjecture has all the joy and all the pride of invention, and he that has once started a happy change, is too much delighted to consider what objections may rise against it.

Yet conjectural criticism has been of great use in the learned world; nor is it my intention to depreciate a study, that has exercised so many mighty minds, from the revival of learning to our own age, from the bishop of Aleria to English Bentley. The criticks on ancient authors have, in the exercise of their sagacity, many assistances, which the editor of Shakspeare is condemned to want. They are employed upon grammatical and settled languages, whose construction contributes so much to perspicuity, that Homer has fewer passages unintelligible than Chaucer. The words have not only a known regimen, but invariable quantities, which direct and confine the choice. There are commonly more manuscripts than one; and they do not often conspire in the same mistakes. Yet Scaliger could confess to Salmasius how little satisfaction his emendations gave him. Illudunt nobis conjectura nostra, quarum nos pudet, posteaquam in meliores codices incidimus. And Lipsius could complain, that criticks were making faults, by trying to remove them, Ut olim vitiis, ita nunc remediis remediis laboratur. And indeed, where mere conjecture is to be used, the emendations of Scaliger and Lipsius, notwithstanding their wonderful sagacity and erudition, are often vague and disputable, like mine or Theobald's.

Perhaps I may not be more censured for doing wrong, than for doing little; for raising in the publick expectations, which at last I have not answered. The expectation of ignorance is indefinite, and that of knowledge is often tyrannical. It is hard to satisfy those who know not what to demand, or those who demand by design what they think impossible to be done. I have indeed disappointed no opinion more than my own; yet I have endeavoured to perform my task with no slight sollicitude. Not a single passage in the whole work has appeared to me corrupt, which I have not attempted to restore: or obscure, which I have not endeavoured to illustrate. In many I have failed like others; and from many, after all my efforts, I have retreated, and confessed the repulse. I have not passed over, with affected superiority, what is equally difficult to the reader and to myself, but where I could not instruct him, have owned my ignorance. I might easily have accumulated a mass of seeming learning upon easy scenes; but it ought not to be imputed to negligence, that, where nothing was necessary, nothing has been done, or that, where others have said enough, I have said no more.

Notes are often necessary, but they are necessary evils. Let him, that is yet unacquainted with the powers powers of Shakespeare, and who desires to feel the highest pleasure that the drama can give, read every play; from the first scene to the last, with utter negligence of all his commentators. When his fancy is once on the wing, let it not stoop at correction or explanation. When his attention is strongly engaged, let it disdain alike to turn aside to the name of Theobald and of Pope. Let him read on through brightness and obscurity, through integrity and corruption; let him preserve his comprehension of the dialogue and his interest in the fable. And when the pleasures of novelty have ceased, let him attempt exactness, and read the commentators.

Particular passages are cleared by notes, but the general effect of the work is weakened. The mind is refrigerated by interruption; the thoughts are diverted from the principal subject; the reader is weary, he suspects not why; and at last throws away the book which he has too diligently studied.

Parts are not to be examined till the whole has been surveyed; there is a kind of intellectual remoteness necessary for the comprehension of any great work in its full design and in its true proportions; a close approach shews the smaller niceties, but the beauty of the whole is discerned no longer.

It is not very grateful to consider how little the succession of editors has added to this author's power of pleasing. He was read, admired, studied, and imitated, while he was yet deformed with all the improprieties which ignorance and neglect could accumulate upon him; while the reading was yet not rectified, nor his allusions understood; yet then did Dryden pronounce, “ that Shakespeare was the man, “ who, of all modern and perhaps ancient poets, “ had the largest and most comprehensive soul. And “ the images of nature were still present to him, and “ he drew them not laboriously, but luckily: when “ he describes any thing, you more than see it, you “ feel it too. Those, who accuse him to have wanted “ learning, give him the greater commendation: he “ was naturally learned: he needed not the spectacles “ of books to read nature; he looked inwards, and “ found her there. I cannot say he is every where “ alike; were he so, I should do him injury to compare him with the greatest of mankind. He is “ many times flat and insipid; his comick wit degenerating into clenches, his serious swelling into bombast. But he is always great, when some great “ occasion is presented to him: no man can say, he “ ever had a fit subject for his wit, and did not then “ raise himself as high above the rest of poets,

“ Quantum lenta solent inter viburna cypressi.”

It is to be lamented, that such a writer should want a commentary; that his language should become obsolete, or his sentiments obscure. But it is vain to carry wishes beyond the condition of human things; that which must happen to all, has happened to Shakespeare, by accident and time; and more than has been suffered by any other writer since the use of types, has been suffered by him through his own negligence of fame, or perhaps by that superiority riority of mind, which despised its own performances, when it compared them with its powers, and judged those works unworthy to be preserved, which the criticks of following ages were to contend for the fame of restoring and explaining.

Among these candidates of inferior fame, I am now to stand the judgment of the publick; and wish that I could confidently produce my commentary as equal to the encouragement which I have had the honour of receiving. Every work of this kind is by its nature deficient, and I should feel little solicitude about the sentence, were it to be pronounced only by the skilful and the learned.

Of what has been performed in this revival, an account is given in the following pages by Mr. Steevens, who might have spoken both of his own diligence and sagacity, in terms of greater self-approbation, without deviating from modesty or truth.

. JOHNSON.

ADVERTISEMENT

TO THE

R E A D E R.

THE want of adherence to the old copies, which has been complained of, in the text of every modern republication of Shakespeare, is fairly deducible from Mr. Rowe's inattention to one of the first duties of an editor *. Mr. Rowe did not print from the earliest and most correct, but from the most remote and inaccurate of the four folios. Between the years 1623 and 1685 (the dates of the first and last) the errors in every play, at least, were trebled. Several pages in each of these ancient editions have been examined, that the assertion might come more fully supported. It may be added, that as every fresh editor continued to make the text

* " I must not (says Mr. Rowe in his dedication to the duke of Somerset) pretend to have restor'd this work to the exactness of the author's original manuscripts: those are lost, or, at least, are gone beyond any inquiry I could make; so that there was nothing left, but to compare the several editions, and give the true reading as well as I could from thence. This I have endeavour'd to do pretty carefully, and render'd very many places intelligible, that were not so before. In some of the editions, especially the last, there were many lines (and in Hamlet one whole scene) left out together; these are now all supply'd. I fear your grace will find some faults, but I hope they are mostly literal, and the errors of the press." Would not any one, from this declaration, suppose that Mr. Rowe (who does not appear to have consulted a single quarto) had at least compared the folios with each other?

of his predecessor the ground-work of his own (never collating but where difficulties occurred) some deviations from the originals had been handed down, the number of which are lessened in the impression before us, as it has been constantly compared with the most authentic copies, whether collation was absolutely necessary for the recovery of sense, or not. The person who undertook this task may have failed by inadvertency, as well as those who preceded him; but the reader may be assured, that he, who thought it his duty to free an author from such modern and unnecessary innovations as had been censured in others, has not ventured to introduce any of his own.

It is not pretended that a complete body of various readings is here collected; or that all the diversities which the copies exhibit, are pointed out; as near two thirds of them are typographical mistakes, or such a change of insignificant particles, as would crowd the bottom of the page with an ostentation of materials, from which at last nothing useful could be selected.

The dialogue might indeed sometimes be lengthened by other insertions than have hitherto been made, but without advantage either to its spirit or beauty; as in the following instance:

Lear. No.

Kent. Yes.

Lear. No, I say.

Kent. I say, yea.

Here the quartos add:

Lear. No, no, they would not.

Kent. Yes, they have.

70 ADVERTISEMENT to the READER.

By the admission of this negation and affirmation, has any new idea been gained?

The labours of preceding editors have not left room for a boast, that many valuable readings have been retrieved; though it may be fairly asserted, that the text of Shakespeare is restored to the condition in which the author, or rather his first publishers, appear to have left it, such emendations as were absolutely necessary, alone admitted: for where a particle, indispensably necessary to the sense, was wanting, such a supply has been silently adopted from other editions; but where a syllable, or more, had been added for the sake of the metre only, which at first might have been irregular, such interpolations are here constantly retrenched, sometimes with, and sometimes without notice. Those speeches, which in the elder editions are printed as prose, and from their own construction are incapable of being compressed into verse, without the aid of supplemental syllables, are restored to prose again; and the measure is divided afresh in others, where the mass of words had been inharmoniously separated into lines.

The scenery, throughout all the plays, is regulated in conformity to a rule, which the poet, by his general practice seems to have proposed to himself. Several of his pieces are come down to us, divided into scenes as well as acts. These divisions were probably his own, as they are made on settled principles, which would hardly have been the case, had the task been executed by the players. A change of scene, with Shakespeare, most commonly implies a change of place, but always, an entire evacuation of the stage. The custom of distinguishing every entrance or exit by a fresh scene, was adopted, perhaps very idly, from the French theatre.

¹ For the length of many notes, and the accumulation of examples in others, some apology may be likewise expected. An attempt at brevity is often found to be the source of an imperfect explanation. Where a passage has been constantly misunderstood, or where the jest or pleasantry has been suffered to remain long in obscurity, more instances have been brought to clear the one, or elucidate the other, than appear at first sight to have been necessary. For these, it can only be said, that when they prove that phraseology or source of merriment to have been once general, which at present seems particular, they are not quite impertinently intruded; as they may serve to free the author from a suspicion of having employed an affected singularity of expression, or indulged himself in allusions to transient customs, which were not of sufficient notoriety to deserve ridicule or reprehension. When examples in favour of contradictory opinions are assembled, though no attempt is made to decide on either part, such neutral collections should always be regarded as materials for future critics, who may hereafter apply them with success. Authorities, whether in respect of words, or things, are not always producible from the most celebrated writers*; yet such circumstances as fall below the notice

* Mr. T. Warton in his excellent Remarks on the Fairy Queen of Spenser, offers a similar apology for having introduced illustrations from obsolete literature. "I fear (says he) I shall be censured for quoting too many pieces of this sort. But experience has fa-

72 ADVERTISEMENT to the READER.

tice of history, can only be sought in the jest-book, the satire, or the play; and the novel, whose fashion did not outlive a week, is sometimes necessary to throw light on those annals which take in the compass of an age. Those, therefore, who would wish to have the peculiarities of Nym familiarized to their ideas, must excuse the insertion of such an epigram as best suits the purpose, however tedious in itself; and such as would be acquainted with the propriety of Falstaff's allusion to stewed prunes, should not be disgusted at a multitude of instances, which, when tally proved, that the commentator on Spenser, Jonson, and the rest of our elder poets, will in vain give specimens of his classical erudition, unless, at the same time, he brings to his work a mind intimately acquainted with those books, which, though now forgotten, were yet in common use and high repute about the time in which his authors respectively wrote, and which they consequently must have read. While these are unknown, many allusions and many imitations will either remain obscure, or lose half their beauty and propriety: "as the figures vanish when the canvas is decayed."

"Pope laughs at Theobald for giving us, in his edition of SHAKESPEARE, a sample of

— all such READING as was never read.

But these strange and ridiculous books which Theobald quoted, were unluckily the very books which SHAKESPEARE himself had studied; the knowledge of which enabled that useful editor to explain so many difficult allusions and obsolete customs in his poet, which otherwise could never have been understood. For want of this sort of literature, Pope tells us that the dreadful Sagittary in Troilus and Cressida, signifies Teucer, so celebrated for his skill in archery. Had he deigned to consult an old history, called the Destruction of Troy, a book which was the delight of SHAKESPEARE and of his age, he would have found that this formidable archer, was no other than an imaginary beast, which the Grecian army brought against Troy. If SHAKESPEARE is worth reading, he is worth explaining; and the researches used for so valuable and elegant a purpose, merit the thanks of genius and candour, not the satire of prejudice and ignorance. That labour, which so essentially contributes to the service of true taste, deserves a more honourable repository than The Lamp of Darkness."

the

the point is once known to be established, may be diminished by any future editor. An author, who catches (as Pope expresses it) at the Cynthia of a minute, and does not furnish notes to his own works, is sure to lose half the praise which he might have claimed, had he dealt in allusions less temporary, or cleared up for himself those difficulties which lapse of time must inevitably create.

The author of the additional notes has rather been desirous to support old readings, than to claim the merit of introducing new ones. He desires to be regarded as one, who found the task he undertook more arduous than it seemed, while he was yet feeding his vanity with the hopes of introducing himself to the world as an editor in form. He, who has discovered in himself the power to rectify a few mistakes with ease, is naturally led to imagine, that all difficulties must yield to the efforts of future labour; and perhaps feels a reluctance to be undeceived at last.

Mr. Steevens desires it may be observed, that he has strictly complied with the terms exhibited in his proposals, having appropriated all such assistances, as he received, to the use of the present editor, whose judgment has, in every instance, determined on their respective merits. While he enumerates his obligations to his correspondents, it is necessary that one comprehensive remark should be made on such communications as are omitted in this edition, though they might have proved of great advantage to a more daring commentator. The majority of these were founded

74 ADVERTISEMENT to the READER.

founded on the supposition, that Shakespeare was originally an author correct in the utmost degree, but maimed and interpolated by the neglect or presumption of the players. In consequence of this belief, alterations have been proposed wherever a verse could be harmonized, an epithet exchanged for one more apposite, or a sentiment rendered less perplexed. Had the general current of advice been followed, the notes would have been filled with attempts at emendation apparently unnecessary, though sometimes elegant, and as frequently with explanations of what none would have thought difficult. A constant peruser of Shakespeare will suppose whatever is easy to his own apprehension, will prove so to that of others, and consequently may pass over some real perplexities in silence. On the contrary, if in consideration of the different abilities of every class of readers, he should offer a comment on all harsh inversions of phrase, or peculiarities of expression, he will at once excite the disgust and displeasure of such as think their own knowledge or sagacity undervalued. It is difficult to fix a medium between doing too little and too much in the task of mere explanation. There are yet many passages unexplained and unintelligible, which may be reformed, at hazard of whatever licence, for exhibitions on the stage, in which the pleasure of the audience is chiefly to be considered; but must remain untouched by the critical editor, whose conjectures are limited by narrow bounds, and who gives only what he at least supposes his author to have written.

If

If it is not to be expected that each vitiated passage in Shakespeare can be restored, till a greater latitude of experiment shall be allowed; so neither can it be supposed that the force of all his allusions will be pointed out, till such books are thoroughly examined, as cannot easily at present be collected, if at all. Several of the most correct lists of our dramatic pieces exhibit the titles of plays, which are not to be met with in the completest collections. It is almost unnecessary to mention any other than Mr. Garrick's, which, curious and extensive as it is, derives its greatest value from its accessibility *.

To

* There is reason to think that about the time of the Reformation, great numbers of plays were printed, though few of that age are now to be found; for part of queen Elizabeth's INJUNCTIONS in 1559, are particularly directed to the suppressing of "Many pamphlets, PLAYES, and ballads: that no manner of person shall enterprize to print any such, &c. but under certain restrictions." Vid. Sect. V. This observation is taken from Dr. Percy's Additions to his Essay on the Origin of the English Stage. It appears likewise from a page at the conclusion of the second vol. of the entries belonging to the Stationers' company, that in the 41st year of queen Elizabeth, many new restraints on booksellers were laid. Among these are the following, "That no plaies be printed excepte they bee allowed by such as have auctoritee." The records of the Stationers however contain the entries of some which have never yet been met with by the most successful collectors; nor are their titles to be found in any registers of the stage, whether ancient or modern. It should seem from the same volumes that it was customary for the Stationers to seize the whole impression of any work that had given offence, and burn it publicly at their hall, in obedience to the edicts of the archbishop of Canterbury, and the bishop of London, who sometimes enjoyed these literary executions at their respective palaces. Among other works condemned to the flames by these discerning prelates, were the complete satires of bishop Hall.

Mr. Theobald, at the conclusion of the preface to his first edition of Shakespeare, asserts, that exclusive of the dramas of Ben Jonson, and B. and Fletcher, he had read "above 800 of old English plays." He omitted this assertion, however, on the republication

To the other evils of our civil war must be added the interruption of polite learning, and the suppression of many dramatic and poetical names, which were plunged in obscurity by tumults and revolutions, and have never since attracted curiosity. The utter neglect of ancient English literature continued so long, that many books may be supposed to be lost; and that curiosity, which has been now for some years increasing among us, wants materials for its operations. Books and pamphlets, printed originally in small numbers, being thus neglected, were soon destroyed; and though the capital authors were preserved, they were preserved to languish without regard. How little Shakespeare himself was once read, may be understood from Tate†, who, in his dedication to the altered play of King Lear, speaks of the original as of an obscure piece, recommended to his notice by a friend; and the author of the Tatler, having occasion to quote a few lines out of Macbeth, was content to receive them from D'Avenant's alterarepublication of the same work, and, I hope, he did so, through a consciousness of its utter falshood; for if we except the plays of the authors already mentioned, it would be difficult to discover half the number that were written early enough to serve the purpose for which he pretends to have perused this imaginary stock of ancient literature.

I might add, that the private collection of Mr. Theobald, which, including the plays of Jonson, Fletcher and Shakespeare, did not amount to many more than an hundred, remained entire in the hands of the late Mr. Tonson, till the time of his death. It does not appear that any other collection but the Harleian was at that time formed; nor does Mr. Theobald's edition contain any intrinsic evidences of so comprehensive an examination of our eldest dramatic writers, as he assumes to himself the merit of having made.

† In the year 1707 Mr. N. Tate published a tragedy called Injured Love, or the Cruel Husband, and in the title page of it calls himself, “Author of the tragedy called King Lear.”

tion

tion of that celebrated drama, in which almost every original beauty is either awkwardly disguised, or arbitrarily omitted. So little were the defects or peculiarities of the old writers known, even at the beginning of our century, that though the custom of alliteration had prevailed to that degree in the time of Shakespeare, that it became contemptible and ridiculous, yet it is made one of Waller's praises by a writer of his life, that he first introduced this practice into English versification.

It will be expected that some notice should be taken of the last editor of Shakespeare, and that his merits should be estimated with those of his predecessors. Little, however, can be said of a work, to the completion of which, both a large proportion of the commentary and various readings is as yet wanting. The Second Part of King Henry VI. is the only play from that edition, which has been consulted in the course of this work; for as several passages there are arbitrarily omitted, and as no notice is given when other deviations are made from the old copies, it was of little consequence to examine any further. This circumstance is mentioned, lest such accidental coincidences of opinion, as may be discovered hereafter, should be interpreted into plagiarism.

It may occasionally happen, that some of the remarks long ago produced by others, are offered again as recent discoveries. It is likewise absolutely impossible to pronounce with any degree of certainty, whence all the hints, which furnish matter for a commentary, have been collected, as they lay scattered scattered in many books and papers, which were probably never read but once, or the particulars which they contain received only in the course of common conversation; nay, what is called plagiarism, is often no more than the result of having thought alike with others on the same subject.

78 ADVERTISEMENT to the READER.

The dispute about the learning of Shakespeare being now finally settled, a catalogue is added of those translated authors, whom Mr. Pope has thought proper to call

The classics of an age that heard of none.

The reader may not be displeased to have the Greek and Roman poets, orators, &c. who had been rendered accessible to our author, exposed at one view; especially as the list has received the advantage of being corrected and amplified by the Reverend Dr. Farmer, the substance of whose very decisive pamphlet is interspersed through the notes which are added in this revival of Dr. Johnson's Shakespeare.

To those who have advanced the reputation of our Poet, it has been endeavoured, by Dr. Johnson, in the foregoing preface, impartially to allot their dividend of fame; and it is with great regret that we now add to the catalogue, another, the consequence of whose death will perhaps affect not only the works of Shakespeare, but of many other writers. Soon after the first appearance of this edition, a disease, rapid in its progress, deprived the world of Mr. JACOB TONSON;
a man,

a man, whose zeal for the improvement of English literature, and whose liberality to men of learning, gave him a just title to all the honours which men of learning can bestow. To suppose that a person employed in an extensive trade, lived in a state of indifference to loss and gain, would be to conceive a character incredible and romantic; but it may be justly said of Mr. Tonson, that he had enlarged his mind beyond solicitude about petty losses, and refined it from the desire of unreasonable profit. He was willing to admit those with whom he contracted, to the just advantage of their own labours; and had never learned to consider the author as an under-agent to the bookseller. The wealth which he inherited or acquired, he enjoyed like a man conscious of the dignity of a profession subservient to learning. His domestic life was elegant, and his charity was liberal. His manners were soft, and his conversation delicate: nor is, perhaps, any quality in him more to be censured, than that reserve which confined his acquaintance to a small number, and made his example less useful, as it was less extensive. He was the last commercial name of a family which will be long remembered; and if Horace thought it not improper to convey the SOSI to posterity; if rhetoric suffered no dishonour from Quintilian's dedication to TRYPHO; let it not be thought that we disgrace Shakespeare, by appending to his works the name of Tonson.

To this prefatory advertisement I have now subjoined a chapter extracted from the Guls Hornbook; (a satirical pamphlet written by Decker in the year 1609) 1609) as it affords the reader a more complete idea of the customs peculiar to our ancient theatres, than any other publication which has hitherto fallen in my way. See this performance, page 27.

80 ADVERTISEMENT to the READER.

“ C H A P. VI.

How a Gallant should behave himself in a Play house.

The theater is your poet's Royal Exchange, upon which, their muses (that are now turn'd to merchants) meeting, barter away that light commodity of words for a lighter ware than words, plaudities and the breath of the great beast, which (like the threatnings of two cowards) vanish all into aire. Plaiers and their factots, who put away the stuffe and make the best of it they possibly can (as indeed 'tis their parts so to doe) your gallant, your courtier, and your capten, had wont to be the soundest paymasters, and I thinke are still the surest chapmen: and these by meanes that their heades are well stockt, deale upon this comical freight by the grosse; when your groundling, and gallery commoner buyes his sport by the penny, and, like a bugler, is glad to utter it againe by retailing.

Sithence then the place is so free in entertainment, allowing a stoole as well to the farmer's sonne as to your Templar: that your stinkard has the selfe same libertie to be there in his tobacco-fumes, which your sweet courtier hath: and that your carman and tinker claime as strong a voice in their suffrage, and sit to give judgment on the places' life and death, as well as the proudest Momus among the tribe of critick; it is fit that hee, whom the most tailors' bills do make room for, when he comes, should not be basely (like a vy-oll) cas'd up in a corner.

Whether therefore the gatherers of the publike or private play-house stand to receive the afternoone's rent, let our gallant (having paid it) presently advance himselfe up to the throne of the stage. I meane not into the lords' roome (which is now but the stage's suburbs). No, those boxes by the iniquity of custome, conspiracy of waiting-women and gentlemen-ushers, that there sweat together, and the covetous sharers, are contemptibly thrust into the reare, and much

ADVERTISEMENT to the READER. 81

much new fatten is there damnd by being smothered to death in darknesse. But on the very rushes where the comedy is to daunce, yea and under the state of Cambyses himselfe must our feather'd estridge, like a piece of ordnance be planted valiantly (because impudently) beating downe the mewes and hisses of the opposed rascality.

* For do but cast up a reckoning, what large cummings in are purs'd up by sitting on the stage. First a conspicuous eminence is gotten, by which meanes the best and most essentiall parts of a gallant (good cloathes, a proportionable legge, white hand, the Persian locke; and a tollerable beard,) are perfectly revealed.

By sitting on the stage you have a sign'd pattennt to engrosse the whole commodity of censure; may lawfully presume to be a girder; and stand at the helme to steere the passage of scænes, yet no man shall once offer to hinder you from obtaining the title of an insolent over-weening coxcombe.

By sitting on the stage, you may (without traueilling for it) at the very next doore, alke whose play it is: and by that quest of inquiry, the law warrants you to avoid much mistaking: if you know not the author, you may raile against him; and peradventure so behaue yourselfe, that you may enforce the author to know you.

By sitting on the stage, if you be a knight, you may happily get you a mistresse: if a meere Fleet-street gentleman, a wife: but assure yourselfe by continuall residence, you are the first and principall man in election to begin the number of We three.

By spreading your body on the stage, and by being a justice in examining of plaies, you shall put yourselfe into such a true scænicall authority, that some poet shall not dare to present his muse rudely before your eyes, without having first unmaskt her, risled her, and discovered all her bare and most mystical parts before you at a taverne, when you most knightly, shal for his paines, pay for both their suppers.

By sitting on the stage, you may (with small cost) purchase the deere acquaintance of the boyes: have a good stoole for sixpence: at any time know what particular part any of the infants present: get your match lighted, examine the play-suits' lace, and perhaps win wagers upon laying 'tis copper, &c. And to conclude, whether you be a foole or a justice of peace, a cuckold or a capten, a lord maior's sonne or a dawcocke, a knave or an under shrieve, of what stamp soever you be, currant or counterfet, the stagelike time will bring you to most perfect light, and lay you open: neither are you to be hunted from thence though the scar-crowes in the yard hoot you, hiss at you, spit at you, yea throw dirt even in your teeth: 'tis most gentleman-like patience to endure all this, and to laugh at the silly animals. But if the rabble, with a full throat, crie away with the foole, you were worse than a mad-man to tarry by it: for the gentleman and the foole should never sit on the stage together.

82 ADVERTISEMENT to the READER.

Mary, let this observation go hand in hand with the rest: or rather, like a country-serving man, some five yards before them. Present not your selfe on the stage (especially at a new play) untill the quaking prologue hath (by rubbing) got cullor into his cheekes, and is ready to give the trumpets their cue that hees upon point to enter: for then it is time, as though you were one of the properties, or that you dropt of the bangings to creep from behind the arras, with your tripes or three-legged stoole in one hand, and a treston mounted betweene a fore-finger and a thumbe, in the other: for if you should bestow your person upon the vulgar, when the belly of the house is but halfe full, your apparell is quite eaten up, the fashion lost, and the proportion of your body in more danger to be devoured, then if it were served up in the Counter amongst the Poultry: avoid that as you would the bastome. It shall crowne you with rich commendation to laugh alowd in the midst of the most serious and saddest scene of the terriblest tragedy: and to let that clapper (your tongue) be tost so high that all the house may ring of it: your lords use it; your knights are apes to the lords, and do so too: your inne-a-court-man is zany to the knights, and (many very scurvily) comes likewise limping after it: bee thou a beagle to them all, and never lin snuffing till you have sented them: for by talking and laughing (like a ploughman in a morris) you heape Pelion upon Offa, glory upon glory: as first all the eyes in the galleries will leave walking after the players, and onely follow you: the simplest dolt in the house snatches up your name, and when he meetes you in the streetes, or that you fall into his hands in the middle of a watch, his word shall be taken for you: heele cry, Hees such a gallant, and you passe. Secondly you publish your temperance to the world, in that you seeme not to resort thither to taste vaine pleasures with a hungrie appetite; but onely as a gentleman, to spend a foolish houre or two, because because you can doe nothing else. Thirdly you mightily disrelish the audience, and disgrace the author: marry, you take up (though it be at the worst hand) a strong opinion of your owne judgement, and inforce the poet to take pity of your weakenesse, and by some dedicated sonnet to bring you into a better paradise, onely to stop your mouth.

ADVERTISEMENT to the READER. 83

If you can (either for love or money) provide your selfe a lodging by the water side: for above the conveniencie it brings to shun shoulder-clapping, and to ship away your cockatrice betimes in the morning, it addes a kind of state unto you, to be carried from thence to the staires of your play-house: hate a sculler (remember that) worse then to be acquainted with one ath' scullery. No, your oares are your onely sea-crabs, boord them, and take heed you never go twice together with one paire: often shifting is a great credit to gentlemen: and that dividing of your fare will make the poore waterfnaks be ready to pul you in peeces to enjoy your custome. No matter whether upon landing you have money or no; you may swim in twentie of their boates over the river upon tickets: mary, when silver comes in, remember to pay trebble their fare, and it will make your flounder-catchers to send more thankes after you, when you doe not draw, then when you doe: for they know, it will be their owne another day.

Before the play begins, fall to cardes; you may win or loose (as fencers doe in a prize) and beate one another by confederacie, yet share the money when you meete at supper: notwithstanding, to gul the ragga-muflins that stand a loose gaping at you, throw the cards (having first torne foure or five of them) round about the stage, just upon the third sound, as though you had lost: it skils not if the foure knaves ly on their backs, and outface the audience, there's none such fooles as dare take exceptions at them, because ere the play go off, better knaves than they, will fall into the company.

Now, Sir, if the writer be a fellow that hath either epigram'd you, or hath had a flirt at your mistris, or hath brought either your feather, or your red beard, or your little legs, &c. on the stage, you shall disgrace him worse then by tossing him in a blanket, or giving him the bastinado in a taverne, if in the middle of his play, (bee it pastorall or comedy, morall or tragedie) you rise with a skreud and discontented face from your stoole to be gone: no matter whether the scenes be good or no; the better they are, the worse doe you dilast them: and beeing on your feete, sneake not away like a coward, but salute all your gentle acquaintance that are spred either on the rushes or on stooles about you, and draw what troope you can from the stage after you: the mimick are beholden to you, for allowing them elbow room: their poet cries perhaps, a pox go with you, but care not you for that; there's no musick without frets.

84 ADVERTISEMENT to the READER.

Mary, if either the company, or indisposition of the weather binde you to sit it out, my counsell is then that you turne plaine ap: take up a rush and tickle the earnest eares of your fellow gallants, to make other fooles fall a laughing: mew at the passionate speeches, blare at merrie, finde fault with the musick, whewe at the children's action, whistle at the songs; and above all, curse the sharers, that whereas the same day you had bestowed forty shillings on an embroidered felt and feather (Scotch-fashion) for your mistres in the count, or your punk in the cittie, within two houres after, you encounter with the very same block on the stage, when the haberdasher swore to you the impulsion was extant but that morning.

To conclude, hoord up the finest play-seraps you can get, upon which your leane wit may moist savourily feede, for want of other flusse, when the Arædian and Euphuist'd gentlewomen have their tongues sharpened to set upon you: that qualitie (next to your shittlecocke) is the only furniture to a courtier that's but a new beginner, and is but in his ABC of complement. The next places that are fil'd after the play-houses bee emptied, are (or ought to be) tavernes: into a taverne then let us next march, where the braines of one hogshhead must be beaten out to make up another."

I should have attempted on the present occasion to enumerate all other pamphlets, &c. from whence particulars relative to the conduct of our early theatres might be collected, but that Dr. Percy, in his first volume of the Reliques of Ancient English Poetry, (third edit. p. 128, &c.) has extracted such passages from them as tend to the illustration of this subject; to which he has added more accurate remarks than my experience in these matters would have enabled me to supply.

ADVERTISEMENT to the READER. 85

The GLOBE on the BANCKE Side, where SHAKESPEARE acted.

From the long Antwerp View of London in the Pepysian Library.

With the drawing from which this cut was made, I was favoured by the Reverend Mr. Henley, of Harrow on the Hill.

STEEVENS.

ANCIENT TRANSLATIONS

FROM

CLASSIC AUTHORS.

HOMER.

T EN Bookes of the Iliades into English out of French, by Arthur Hall, Esquire. Lond. imprinted by Ralph Newberie, 4to *. —————	1581
The Shield of Achilles, from the 18th Book of Homer, by Geo. Chapman, 8to. Lond. —————	1596
Seven Books of the Iliades, by ditto, 4to †. Lond. —————	1596
D°. —————	1598
Fifteen Books of ditto, thin folio —————	1600
The whole Works of Homer, by d°. printed for Nath. But- ter —————	no date
The Crowne of all Homer's Workes, Batrachomymachia, &c. thin fol. printed by John Bill —————	no date †

* In the first vol. of the books of entries belonging to the Stationers' company is the following:

"Henry Bynneman] Nov. 1580, lycensed unto him under the wardens' hands tennne bookes of the Iliades of Homer." Again, Nov. 14, 1608. "Seven bookes of Homer's Iliades translated into English by Geo. Chapman." Again, April 6, 1611, "A booke called Homer's Iliades in Englishe, containing 24 Bookes" Again, Nov. 2, 1614, "Homer's Odisses 24 bookes translated by George Chapman."

† Meres, in his Second part of Wits Common-wealth, 1598, says that Chapman is "of good note for his inchoate Homer."

‡ In the first volume of the entries of the Stationers' company is the following:

"T. Purtoote.] The Battell of the Frogges and Myce, and certain orations of Ilocrates. Jan. 4th 1579,"

M U.

ANCIENT TRANSLATIONS. 87

MUSEUS.

Marlowe's Hero and Leander, with the first Book of Lucan,	4to.	—	—	—	1600
There must have been a former Edition*, as a second Part was published by Henry Petowe
Musæus's Poem of Hero and Leander, imitated by Christopher Marlow, and finished by Geo. Chapman,	8vo.	—	—	—	1598
Lond.	—	—	—	—	1606

EURIPIDES.

Jocasta, a Tragedy, from the Phœnissa of Euripides, by Geo. Gascoigne, and Mr. Francis Kinwelmershe,	4to.	—	—	—	1556
Lond.	—	—	—	—

PLATO.

Axiochus, a Dialogue, attributed to Plato, by Edm. Spenser,	4to.†	—	—	—	1592
---	-------	---	---	---	------

DEMOSTHENES.

The Three Orations of Demosthenes, chief Orator among the Grecians, in Favour of the Olynthians, with those

* This translation, for at least Marlow's part in it, must have been published before 1599, being twice mentioned in Nash's Lenten Stuff, &c. which bears that date. "Leander and Hero of whom divine Musæus sung, and a diviner muse than him, Kit Marlow." Again, "She sprung after him, and so resigned up her priesthood, and left worke for Musæus and Kit Marlow."

Among the entries at Stationers' hall I find the following made by John Wolfe in 1593, Sept. 8th, "A booke entitled Hero and Leander, being an amorous poem devised by Christopher Marlow."

At the same time, "Lucan's first booke of the famous Cyvill Warr betwixt Pompey and Cæsar. Englished by Christopher Marlow."

Again, in 1597, "A booke in English called Hero and Leander."

Again, April 1598, "The seconde Parte of Hero and Leander by Henry Petowe." Andrew Harris enter'd it.

Again, in 1600, "Hero and Leander by Marlowe."

In 1614 an entire translation of Lucan was published by Sir Arthur Gorges, and enter'd as such on the same books.

† This book was entered in May 1592, at Stationers' hall.

88 ANCIENT TRANSLATIONS.

his fower against Philip of Macedon, &c. by Tho. Wyllson, Doctor of the Civill Lawes, 4to. — 1570

ISOCRATES,

Isoocrates's sage Admonition to Demonicus, by R. Nutthall, 8vo. Lond. 1557, 12mo. and 1585

Isoocrates's Doctrinal of Princes, by Syr Tho. Elliot, Lond.
8vo. — 1554

Isoocrates's Orat. intituled Evagoras, by Jer. Wolte, 8vo. 1581

Three Orations of moral Instructions, one to Demonicus, and two to Nicocias, King of Salamis, translated from Isoocrates, by Tho. Forrest, 4to. — 1580

LUCIAN.

Necromantia, a Dialog of the Poete Lucien between Me-nippus and Philonides, for his Pantefyc saynyd for a mery Pastyme, in English Verse and Latin Prose.

Toxaris, or the Friendship of Lucian, by A.O. Lond. 8vo.
1565

HERODOTUS.

The famous Hystory of Herodotus*, in nine Bookes, &c.
by B. R. Lond. 1584

N. B. *This Piece contains only the two first Books, viz. the Clio and Euterpe. The Translator says in his Preface,
"As these speede, so the rest will follow."* 4to.

THUCYDIDES.

The Hystory writtome by Thucydides, &c. translated out of the Frenche of Claude de Seyssel, Bishop of Marseilles, into the Englishe language, by Tho. Nicolls, Citizeine and Goldsmith of London, fol. — 1550†

POLYBIUS.

Hystories of the most famous and worthy Cronographer,

* Among the entries in the books at Stationers-hall this appears to be one.

“ John Denham.] The famous Historye of Herodotus in Englyshe, June 13, 1581.”

† On the Stationers' books in 1607 either this or some other translation is enter'd, called “ The History of Thucydides the Athenian translated into English.”

Polybius,

ANCIENT TRANSLATIONS. 89

Polybius, by Christopher Watfon, 8vo. — 1568
This Work consists of extracts only.

DIODORUS SICULUS*.

The History of the Successors of Alexander, &c. out of Diodorus Siculus and Plutarch, by Tho. Stocker. Lond. 4to. — — — 1569

APPIAN.

An aunciente Historie, &c. by Appian† of Alexandria, translated out of diverse Languages, &c. by W. B. 4to, Lond. — — — 1578

JOSEPHUS.

Josephus's History, &c. translated into English, by Tho. Lodge, fol. Lond. 1602—1609, &c.

ÆLIAN.

Ælian's Registre of Hystories, by Abraham Fleming, 4to. 1576

HERODIAN.

The Historie of Herodian, &c. transl. oute of Greeke into Latin, by Angelus Politianus, and out of Latin into Englyshe, by Nich. Smyth. Imprinted at London, by William Coplande, 4to‡.

PLUTARCH.

Plutarch's Lives §, by Sir Tho. North, from the Fr. of Amyot, Bishop of Auxerre, fol. 1579, 1602, 1603

* Caxton tells us, that "Skelton had translated Diodorus Siculus, the Epistles of Tulle, and diverse other Workes:" but I know not that they were ever printed.

† In the first volume of the entries in the books of the Stationers' company, Feb. 5, 1577, is the following:

"Henry Binneman. Appianus Alexandrinus of the Romaine Civill Warres."

‡ Oct. 1591, Herodian in English was entered at Stationers-hall by — Adams.

§ Thus entered in the books of the Stationers' company.

"April 1579—Vautrouller—Wright, a booke in Englyshe called Plutarch's Lyves."

Plutarch's

90 ANCIENT TRANSLATIONS

Plutarch's Morals, by Dr. Philemon Holland 1603 *
 Plutarch of the Education of Children, by Sir Tho. Elyott, 4to.

The Preceptes of that excellent Clerke and grave Philosopher
 Plutarche, for the Preservation of Healthe, 8vo. 1543

ARISTOTLE.

The Ethiques of Aristotle, &c. by John Wylkinson. Printed by Grafton, Printer to K. Edw. VI. 8vo. B. L.

1547 †

The Secrete of Secretes of Aristotle, &c. translated out of the Frenche, &c. Lond. 8vo. — 1528

Aristotle's Politiques, &c †. from the Fr. by J. D. fol. Lond.
 1598

XENOPHON.

The eight Bookes of Xenophon, containing the Institution, Schole, and Education of Cyrus, the noble King of Persye, &c. transl. out of Gr. into Engl. by Mr. William Bercher. Lond. 12mo. 1567 and 1569

D^o. by Dr. Philemon Holland.

Xenophon's Treatise of House-hold right, connyngly transl.
 out of the Greke tongue, &c. by Gentian Hervet, &c.
 8vo. Lond. 1532. 8vo. 1534.

1544. 8vo. 1573

The Arte of Riding from Xenophon, &c. Lond. 4to. 1584

EPICTETUS.

The Manuell of Epictetus, transl. out of Greeke into French,

* On the Stationers' books in the year 1600 is the following entry.

"A booke to be translated out of Frenche into Englishe, and so printed, called the Morall Woorkes of Plutarque." Again in 1602. Again in the same year, "The morall worke of Plu-tarque, being translated out of French into English."

† Of the Ethicks of Aristotle some more early translation must have appeared; as Sir Tho. Elyot in his Boke named the Gover-nour, 1537, says, "they are to be learned in Greke; for the translations that we have, be but a rude and grosse shadowe of the eloquence and wysdome of Aristotle."

‡ This translation is entered in the books at Stationers-hall.
 "Adam Islip] Aristotle's Politiques with expositions; to be translated into Englyshe by the Frenche copie, 1598."

§ In the books of the Stationer's company, Feb. 12, 1581, Tho. Easte entered Enchiridion in English.

and

ANCIENT TRANSLATIONS. 91

and now into English, &c. Also the Apothegmes, &c. by James Sandford. Lond. 12mo. 1567

EUNAPIUS SARDIANUS*.

The Lyves of Philosophers and Orators, from the Greek of Eunapius, 4to. ——— 1579

ACHILLES TATIUS.

The most delectable and pleasant Hist. of Clitophon and Leucippe, from the Greek of Achilles Statius, &c. by W. B. 4to ——— 1597†

M. ANTONINUS†.

The Golden Boke of Marcus Aurelius, Emperour and eloquent Orator, 12mo. Lond. ——— 1553
Translated out of Fr. into Eng. by Sir John Bouchier, Kt.
&c. &c.

Other editions of this are in 1534, 1535, 2536, 1537, 15
1586, 15

DIONYSIUS.

Dionysius's Description of the Worlde. Englyshed by Tho.
Twine, 8vo. Lond. ——— 1572

EUCLID.

Euclid's Elements of Geometry, transl. into Eng. by Rich.
Candish, who flourished, A. D. ——— 1556

* Thus entered in the books of the Stationer's company.
"Richard Jones. The Lives of divers excellente Orators and Philosophers written in Greeke by Enapius of the city of Sardis in Lydia, and translated into Englishe by ———"

† This book was entered in the same year by Thomas Creede, on the books of the Stationers' company.

‡ This book is only introduced, that an opportunity may be obtained of excluding it from any future catalogue of translated classics. It was a fraud of Guevara's, but not undetected; for Chapman, in his Gentleman Usher, 1602, speaks of the book as Guevara's own. "It there be not more choice words in that letter, than in any three of Guevara's Golden Epistle, I am a very ass." See his article in Bayle. Our countryman Elyott did somewhat of the same kind. He pretended to translate the Actes and Sentences notable, of the Emperor Alexander Severus, (from the Greek of Encolpius. See Fabricius' and Tanner's Bibliothec. &c.

Euclid's

92 ANCIENT TRANSLATIONS.

Euclid's Elements, Pref. by John Dee. Lond. 1570

HIPPOCRATES.

The Aphorismes of Hippocrates, redacted into a certaine Order, and translated by Humfric Llhyd, 8vo. 1585

G A L E N.

Galen's Two Books of Elements, translated into Engl. by J. Jones, 4to. Lond. 1574

Certaine Workes of Galen, englyshed by Tho. Gale, 4to. 1586

HELIODORUS.

The Beginning of Æthiopicall History in Engl. Hexameters, by Abrah. Fraunce, 8vo. Lond. 1591 *

Heliodorus's Æthiopic Hist. transl. by Tho. Underdown, B. L. 4to. Lond. 1577 and 1587

V I R G I L.

The Booke of Eneydos, &c. by Caxton, fol. Lond. prose 1490

The thirteen Bookes of Eneados in Scottish Metir, by Gawain Douglas, 4to. Lond. 1553

Certain Bookes of Virgile's Æneis † turned into English Metir, by the right honourable Lorde, Henry Earle of Surrey, 4to. Lond. 1557

The first seven Bookes of the Encidos, by Phaer. Lond. 4to. B. L. 1558

This Translation is in rhyme of fourteen syllables.

The nyne first Bookes, &c. by Phaer, 4to. Lond. 1562

The thirteene Bookes of Encidos, by Phaer and Twyne, 4to. Lond. 1584, 1596, 1607, &c. ‡

The first foure Bookes of Virgil's Æneis, translated into

* A translation of the same book is likewise entered at Stationer's hall 1602, and again twice in 1604, for different printers.

† This is a translation of the second and fourth books into blank verse, and is perhaps the oldest specimen of that metre in the English language.

‡ Among the entries in the books of the Stationer's company, is the following. "Tho. Creede.] Virgil's Æneidos in English verse, 1595." Again in 1600. Again his Bucolics and Georgics in the same year.

- Engl. heroic Verse, by Richard Stanyhurst *, &c. 12mo.
 Lond. ————— 1583
- The Bucolickes of Publius Virgilius Maro, &c. by Abraham Fleming, drawn into plaine and familiar Englyshe, Verse for Verse, 4to. B. L. ————— 1575
- Virgil's Eclogues and Georgicks, translated into blank Verse, by the same Author, Lond. ————— 1589
- The Lamentation of Corydon for the Love of Alexis, Verse for Verse, out of Latine.
- This is translated into English Hexameters, and printed at the end of the Countesse of Pembroke's Iuychurch 1591. By Abraham Fraunce.*
- Virgil's Culex paraphrased, by Spenfer. See his works.

H O R A C E.

- Two Bookes of Horace his Satyres Englyshed, accordyng to the Prescription of Saint Hierome, 4to. B. L. Lond. ————— 1566
- Horace his Arte of Poetrie, Pistles † and Satyrs Englyshed, by Tho. Drant, 4to. Lond. ————— 1567

O V I D.

- The fiftene Bookes of Metamorphoseos. In which ben contaynid the Fables of Ovid, by William Caxton, Westm. fol. ————— 1480
- The four first Bookes of Ovid, transl. from the Latin into English Meetre, by Arthur Golding, Gent. 4to. B. L. Lond. ————— 1565
- The fiftene Bookes of P. Ovidius Naso, &c. by Arthur Golding, 4to. Bl. L. Lond. ————— 1576
- Another in 1575 according to Ames, and another earlier than either, in 1567, if we may believe the Date of the Dedication.*
- [A former Edition was in 1572, in Rawlinson's catal.]
- 10°. ————— 1587. D°. 1612.
- The pleasant Fable of Hermaphroditus and Salmacis. 8vo. Lond. ————— 1565

* The copy which I have seen, was in 4to, printed at Leiden, and was entered as such on the books of the Stationers on the 24th of January, 1582.

† There is an entry at Stationer's hall of the Epistles of Horace in 1591.

The

94 ANCIENT TRANSLATIONS.

The Fable of Ovid treating of Narcissus, transl. out of Latin into Eng. Mytre, with a Moral ther unto very plesante to rede, 4to. Lond. ——— 1560

The Heroycall Epistles, &c. set out and translated by Geo. Turberville, Gent. &c. B. L. 4to. Lond *. 1507, 1569, and 1600

The three first Bookes of Ovid de Tristibus, transl. into English, by Tho. Churchyard, 4to. Lond. 1580 †

Ovid his Invective against Ibis, translated into Eng. Meeter, &c. 12mo. Lond. ——— 1569 ‡

And 157, by Tho. Underwood.

Certaine of Ovid's Elegies by C. Marlow §. 12mo. At Middleburgh ——— no date.

All Ovid's Elegies, three Bookes. By C. M. At Middleburgh. 12mo. Somewhat larger than the preceding edition.

Salmacis and Hermaphroditus, by Fra. Beaumont, 4to. 1602

He likewise translated a Part of the Remedy of Love. There was another Translation of the whole, by Sir Tho. Overbury, 8vo. without date ||.

P L A U T U S.

Menæchmi, by W. W. Lond. ¶ ——— 1595

M A R T I A L.

Flowers of Epigrams (from Martial particularly) by Tim. Kendall, 8vo . ——— 1577

* Among the Stationers' entries I find in 1594, "A booke entitled Oenone and Paris, wherein is described the extremity of love, &c." This may be a translation from Ovid.

† This book was enter'd at Stationers' hall by Tho. Easte, July 1, 1577, and by Thomas Orwin in 1591.

‡ Among the entries in the books of the Stationers' company is the following. Henry Bynneman] July 1, 157, Ovid's Invective against Ibis. Bought of Tho. Easte.

§ In the forty-first of Q. Eliz. these translations from Ovid were commanded by the archbishop of Canterbury and the bishop of London, to be burnt at Stationers' hall.

|| On the books of the Stationers' company, Dec. 23, 1599, is entered "Ovidius Naso his Remedy of Love." Again, in the same year, "Ovydes Epistles in Englyshe," and "Ovydes Metamorphosis in Englyshe."

¶ This piece was enter'd at Stationers' hall June 10th 1594. In 1520, viz. the 11th year of Hen. VIII. it appears from Holinshed, that a comedy of Plautus was played before the king.

 Entered at Stationers' hall Feb. 1576.

TERENCE.

Terens in Englysh, or the translatiōn out of Latin into Englysh of the first comedy of Tyrens callyd Andria.
Supposed to be printed by J. Raftell.*

Andria,

* As the following metrical introduction to this play, relates chiefly to the improvements at that time supposed to have been made in the English language, I could not prevail on myself to suppress it.

The Poet.

The famous renown through the worlde is sprong
Of poetys ornat that usyd to indyte
Of dyvers matters in theyr moder tong
Some toke uppon them tranilacions to wryte
Some to compile bokys for theyr delyte
But in our English tong for to speke playn
I rede but of few have take any gret payn.

Except master Gowre which furst began
And of moralite wrote ryght crastely
Than master Chaucer that excellent man
Which wrote as compendious as elyantly
As in any other tong ever dyd any Ludgate also which adournyd our tong
Whose noble famys through the world be sprong.

By these men our tong is amplyfyed so
That we therein now translate as well may
As in eny other tongis other can do
Yet the Greke tong and Laten dyvers men say
Have many wordys can not be Englyshid this day
So lyke wyse in Englysh many wordys do habound
That no Greke nor Laten for them can be found.

And the cause that our tong is so plenteouse now
For we kepe our Englysh continually
And of other tongis many wordis we borow
Which now for Englysh we use and occupy
These thingis have gyven corage gretly
To dyvers and specyally now of late
To them that this comedy have translate.

Which all discrete men now do besech
And specyally lernyd men to take no dysdayn
Though this be compyld in our vulgare spech
Yet lernyng thereby ioune men may attayn
For they that in this comedy have take payn

96 ANCIENT TRANSLATIONS.

Andria, the first Comedy of Terence, by Maurice Kyffin,	4to.	—	—	1588
Terence in English, by Richard Bernard,	4to.	Cambridge *		1598
Flowers of Terence	—	—		1591

SENECA.

Seneca his Tenne Tragedies †, translated into Englysh by different Translators,	4to.	Lond.	—	1581
Seneca's Forme and Rule of Honcst Living, by Rob. Whyttington,	8vo.	—	—	1546
Seven Bookes of Benefyting ‡, by Arthur Golding,	4to.			1577

LIVY.

Livius (Titus §) and other Authores Historie of Annibal and Scipio, translated into English, by Anthony Cope, Esquier,	B. L.	4to.	Lond.	—	1545
--	-------	------	-------	---	------

Pray you to correct where fault shal be found
And of our matter so here is the ground.

In the metrical peroration to this piece, is the following stanza :

Wherefore the translatours now require you this Yf ought be amys ye wold confyder
The Englysh almost as short as the Latyn is
And still to kepe ryme a dyfficult matter
To make the sentence opynly to appere
Which if it had a long expocysion
Then were it a comment and no translacyon.

* At Stationer's hall in 1597, "the second comedy of Terence, called Eunuchus" was entered by W. Leake; and the first and second comedie in 1600.

† In the first volume of the entries of the Stationers' company, Aug. 1579, Rich. Jones, and John Charlewood entered the 4th tragedie of Seneca. And again all the ten in 1581.

‡ In the first volume of the entries in the books of the Stationers' company is the following, "March 26, 1579, Seneca de Beneficiis in Englyshe "

§ In the first volume of the entries in the books of the Stationers' company, anno 1597, is the following note, "Memorandum that Mr. Alexander Nevill, Gent. is appointed to translate Titus Livius into the Englyshe tongue: expresse, the same is not to be printed, by any man, but only such as shall have his translacon." Again, in 1598, "The history of Titus Livius" was entered by Adam Islip.

The

ANCIENT TRANSLATIONS. 97

The Romane Hist. &c. by T. Livius of Padua. Also the Breviaries of L. Florus, &c. by Dr. Philemon Holland, fol. Lond. ——— 1600

T A C I T U S.

The End of Nero and Beginning of Galba. Fower Bookes of the Histories of Cornelius Tacitus. The Life of Agricola, by Sir Hen. Saville, 4to. Lond. 1591
Annales of Tacitus, by Richard Grenaway, fol. 1598

S A L L U S T *.

The Famous Cronycle of the Warre, which the Romyns had against Jugurth, &c. compyled in Lat. by the renowned Romayn Sallust, &c. translated into Englishe, by Sir Alex. Barclay Preeft, &c. Printed by Pynson, fol. D^o.
Lond. pr. by Jol^l Waley, 4to. ——— 1557
The Conspiracie of Lucius Cataline, translated into Eng. by Tho. Paynell, 4to. Lond. 1541 and 1557
The two most Worthy and Notable Histories, &c. Both written by C. C. Sallustius, and translated by Tho. Heywood, Lond. fm. fol. ——— 1608

S U E T O N I U S.

Suetonius, translated by Dr. Phil. Holland, fol. Lond. 1606†

C Æ S A R ‡.

Cæsars Commentaries, as touching British affairs. Without name, printer, place, or date; but by the type it appears to be Rastell's.

Ames, p. 148.

The eight Bookes of Caius Julius Cæsar, translated by Arthur Golding, Gent. 4to. Lond. 1565 and 1590
Cæsar's Commentaries (de Bello Gallico) five Bookes, by Clement Edmundes, with Observations, &c. Fol. 1600

* A translation of Sallust was entered at Stationers' hall in 1588. Again, in 1607, "The historie of Sallust in Englishe."

† This translation was entered at Stationers' hall 1604.

‡ In the entries made in the books of the Stationers' company is the following,

"John Charlewood] Sept. 1581, Abstracte of the historie of Cæsar and Pompeius."

98 ANCIENT TRANSLATIONS.

De Bello Civili, by D^o. three Bookes. Fol. 1609
D^o. by Chapman — — 1604

J U S T I N.

The Hist. of Justine, &c. by A. G. [Arthur Golding] Lond.
4to. — — 1564 and 1578
D^o. by Dr. Phil. Holland — — 1606
D^o. by G. W. with an Epitomie of the Lives, &c. of the Romaine Emperors, from Aurclius Victor, fol. 1606

Q. C U R T I U S.

The Historie of Quintus Curtius, &c. translated, &c. by John Brende, 4to. Lond. — — 1553
Other Editions were in 1561, 1584, 1570, 1592*

E U T R O P I U S.

Eutropius englished, by Nic. Haward, 8vo. 1564

A. M A R C E L L I N U S.

Ammianus Marcellinus, translated by Dr. P. Holland, Lond.
fol. — — 1609

C I C E R O.

Cicero's Familiar Epistles, by J. Webbe, n. 8vo. ' no date Certain select Epistles into English, by A. Fleming, 4to.
Lond. — — 1576
Those Fyve Questions which Marke Tullye Cicero disputed in his Manor of Tusculanum, &c. &c. Englished by John Dolman, fm. 8vo. Lond. — — 1561
† Marcus Tullius Cicero, three Bookes of Duties, tourned

* In the Stationers' books this or some other translation of the same author was entered by Richard Tottell, Feb. 1582, and again by Tho. Creede, &c. 1599.

† Mattaire says [Ann. Typog. B. 5. 290.] "In florulentâ tituli margunculâ (vulgo vignette) superiore, inscribitur 1534." This was a wooden Block used by the Printer Tottel, for many Books in small 8vo. and by no means determines their Date. There may however, have been some earlier translation than any here enumerated, as in Sir Tho. Elyot's Booke named the Governour, 7th is mentioned "the worke of Cicero, called in Latine De officiis, whereunto yet is no propre English worde, &c."

out

ANCIENT TRANSLATIONS. 99

out of Latin into English, by Nic. Grimalde 1555, 1556, 1558, 1574

Ames says 1553; perhaps by mistake.

The three Bokes of Tullius Offyce, &c. translated, &c. by R.

• Whyttington, Poet Laureat, 12mo. Lond. 1533, 1534,
1540, and 1553†

The Boke of Tulle of Old Age, translated by Will. Wyr-cestre, alias Botaner. Caxton, 4to. 1481

De Senectute, by Whyttington, 8vo. — no date

• The worthe Booke of Old Age, otherwise intituled The elder Cato, &c. 12mo. Lond. 1569

• Tullius Cicero on Old Age, by Tho. Newton, 8vo. Lond.
1569

Tullies Friendship, Olde Age, Paradoxe, and Scipio's Dream, by Tho. Newton, 4to. — 1577

Tullius de Amicitia, translated into our maternal Englyshe Tongue, by the E. of Worcester. Printed by Caxton, with the Translation of De Senectute, fol.

The Paradoxe of M. T. Cicero, &c. by Rob. Whyttington,
Poet Laureat. Printed in Southwarke, 12mo. 1540

Webbe translated all the sixteen Bokes of Cicero's Epistles, but probably they were not printed together in Shakespeare's Lifetime. I suppose this, from a Passage in his Dedication, in which he seems to mean Bacon, by a Great Lord Chancellor.

B O E T H I U S.

Boethius, by Chaucer. Printed by Caxton, fol.

Boethius in English Verse, by Tho. Ryehard. Imprinted in the exempt Monastery of Tavistock, 4to. — 1525

Eng. and Lat. by Geo. Colville, 4to. — 1556†

A P U L E I U S.

Apuleius's Golden Asse, translated into Eng. by Wm. Ad-

† In the book belonging to Stationers' hall, "Tullies Offices in Latin and English" is entered Feb. 1582, for R. Tottell. Again, by Tho. Orwin, 1591.

• These are perhaps the same as the two foregoing Translations.

† In the Stationers' books Jan. 13th 1608, Matthew Lownes entered "Anitius Manlius Torquatus Severinus Boethius, a Christian Consul of Rome, newly translated out of Latin, together with original notes explaining the obscurest places."

100 ANCIENT TRANSLATIONS.

lington, 4to. Lond. — 1566 and 1571 *

FRONTINUS.

Stratagemes, Sleights, and Policies of Warre, gathered by
S. Julius Frontinus. Translated by Richard Morisine, 8vo. Printed by Tho. Berthelet — 1539

PLINY JUNR.

Some select Epistles of Pliny the Younger into Eng. by Abr.
Flemming, 4to. Lond. — — 1576

POMPONIUS MELA.

Pomponius Mela, by A. Golding, 4to. — 1590

PLINY.

Pliny's Nat. Hist. by Dr. Phil. Holland, fol †. 1601

SOLINUS.

Julius Solinus Polyhistor, by A. Golding, 4to. 1587

VEGETIUS.

The four Bookes of Flavius Vegetius, concerning martial
Policye, by John Sadler, 4to. — 1572

RUTILIUS RUFUS.

A View of Valiaunce, translated from Rutilius Rufus, by Tho. Newton, 8vo. — — 1580

DARES Phryg. and DICTYS Cret.

Dares and Dictys's Trojan War, in Verse 1555

CATO and P. SYRUS.

Caton †, translated into Englyshe by Mayster Benet Burgh,
&c. mentioned by Caxton. •

* There is an entry of this translation in the books at Stationers' hall in 1595. Valentine Simes is the name of the printer who entered it. It is again entered by Clement Knight in 1600.

† On the books of the Stationers' company is this entry. "Adam Islip, 1600. The xxxvii bookes of C. Plinius Secundus his historie of the worlde. To be translated out of Latin into Englyshe and so printed."

‡ Probably this was never printed.

Cathon [Parvus and Magnus] transl. &c. by Caxton 1483*
Preceptes of Cato, with Annotations of Erasmus, &c. 24mo.
Lond. ————— 1560 and 1562

Ames mentions a Discourse of Human Nature, translated from Hippocrates, p. 428; an Extract from Pliny, translated from the French, p. 312; Æsop †, &c. by Caxton and others; and there is no doubt, but many Translations at present unknown, may be gradually recovered, either by Industry or Accident.

* There is an entry of Caton at Stationers' hall in 1591 by — Adams, Eng. and Lat. Again in the year 1591 by Tho. Orwin. Again in 1605, "Four bookes of morall sentences entitled Cato, translated out of Latin into English by J. M. Master of Arts."

† "Æsop's Fables in Englyshe" were entered May 7th 1590, on the books of the Stationers' company. Again, Oct. 1591. Again Æsop's Fables in Meter, Nov. 1598. Some few of them had been paraphrased by Wyldgate, and I believe are still unpublished. See the Brit. Mus. MSS. Harl. 2251.

It is much to be lamented that Andrew Maunsell, a bookseller in Lothbury, who published two parts of a catalogue of English printed books, fol. 1595, did not proceed to his third collection. This, according to his own account of it, would have consisted of "Grammar, Logick, and Rhetoricke, Lawe, Historie, Poetrie, Policie, &c." which, as he tells us, "for the most part concerne matters of delight and pleasure."

A P P E N D I X,

To Mr. Colmán's Translation of Terence, Octavo Edition.

THE reverend and ingenious Mr. Farmer, in his curious and entertaining Essay on the Learning of Shakespeare, having done me the honour to animadvert on some passages in the preface to this translation, I cannot dismiss this edition without declaring how far I coincide with that gentleman; although what I then threw out carelessly on the subject of his pamphlet was merely incidental, nor did I mean to enter the lists as a champion to defend either side of the question.

It is most true, as Mr. Farmer takes for granted, that I had never met with the old comedy called The Supposes, nor has it ever yet fallen into my hands; yet I am willing to grant, on Mr. Farmer's authority, that Shakespeare borrowed part of the plot of The Taming of the Shrew, from that old translation of Ariosto's play, by George Gascoign, and had no obligations to Plautus. I will accede also to the truth of Dr. Johnson's and Mr. Farmer's observation, that the line from Terence, exactly as it stands in Shakespeare, is extant in Lilly and Udall's Floures for Latin Speaking. Still, however, Shakespeare's total ignorance of the learned languages remains to be proved; for it must be granted, that such books are put into the hands of those who are learning those languages, in which class we must necessarily rank Shakespeare, or he could not even have quoted Terence from Udall or Lilly; nor is it likely, that so rapid a genius should not have made some further progress. "Our author," (says Dr. Johnson, as quoted by Mr. Farmer) had this line "from Lilly; which I mention, that it may not be brought "as an argument of his learning." It is, however, an argument that he read Lilly; and a few pages further it seems seems pretty certain, that the author of The Taming of the Shrew, had at least read Ovid; from whose Epistles we find these lines :

*Hæc ibat Simois; hic est Sigeia tellus;
Hic steterat Priami regia celsa senis.*

And what does Dr. Johnson say on this occasion? Nothing. And what does Mr. Farmer say on this occasion? Nothing.

In Love's Labour Lost, which, bad as it is, is ascribed by Dr. Johnson himself to Shakespeare, there occurs the word thrasenical; another argument which seems to shew that he was not unacquainted with the comedies of Terence; not to mention, that the character of the schoolmaster in the same play could not possibly be written by a man who had travelled no further in Latin than hic, hæc, hoc.

In Henry the Sixth we meet with a quotation from Virgil, Tantæ animis caelestibus iræ?

But this, it seems, proves nothing, any more than the lines from Terence and Ovid, in the Taming of the Shrew; for Mr. Farmer looks on Shakespeare's property in the comedy to be extremely disputable; and he has no doubt but Henry the Sixth had the same author with Edward the Third, which hath been recovered to the world in Mr. Capell's Prolusions.

If any play in the collection bears internal evidence of Shakespeare's hand, we may fairly give him Timon of Athens. In this play we have a familiar quotation from Horace,

Ira furor brevis est.

I will not maintain but this hemistich may be found in Lilly or Udall; or that it is not in the Palace of Pleasure, or the English Plutarch; or that it was not originally foisted in by the players: It stands, however, in the play of Timon of Athens.

The world in general, and those who purpose to comment on Shakespeare in particular, will owe much to Mr. Farmer, whose researches into our old authors throw a lustre on many passages, the obscurity of which must else have been impenetrable. No future Upton or Gildon will go further than North's translation for Shakespeare's acquaintance with Plutarch, or balance between Dares Phrygius, and the Troie booke of Lydgate. The History of Hamblet, in black letter, will for ever supersede Saxo Grammaticus; translated novels and ballads will, perhaps, be allowed the sources of Romeo, Lear, and the Merchant of Venice; and Shakespeare himself, however unlike Bayes in other particulars, will stand convicted of having transversed the prose of Holingshead; and at the same time, to prove "that his studies lay in his "own language," the translations of Ovid are determined to be the production of Heywood.

"That his studies were most demonstratively confined to "nature, and his own language," I readily allow: but does it hence follow that he was so deplorably ignorant of every other tongue, living or dead, that he only "remembered, "perhaps, enough of his schoolboy learning to put the big, "bag, hog, into the mouth of Sam H. Evans; and might pick "up in the writers of the time, or the course of his conversation, a familiar phrase or two of French or Italian?" In Shakespeare's plays both these last languages are plentifully scattered; but then, we are told, they might be impertinent additions of the players. Undoubtedly they might: but there they are, and, perhaps, few of the players had much more learning than Shakespeare.

Mr. Farmer himself will allow that Shakespeare began to learn Latin: I will allow that his studies lay in English: but why insist that he neither made any progress at school; nor improved his acquisitions there? The general encomiums of Suckling, Denham, &c. on his *native genius, prove nothing; and Ben Jonson's celebrated charge of Shakespeare's small Latin, and less Greek†, seems absolutely to decide that he had

* Mr. Farmer closes these general testimonies of Shakespeare's having been only indebted to nature, by saying, "He came out "of her hand, as some one else expresses it, like Pallas out of Jove's "head, at full growth and mature." It is whimsical enough, that this some one else, whose expression is here quoted to countenance the general notion of Shakespeare's want of literature, should be no other than myself. Mr. Farmer does not chuse to mention where he met with this expression of some one else; and some one else does not chuse to mention where he dropt it.

† In defence of the various reading of this passage, given in the preface to the last edition of Shakespeare, "small Latin, and "no Greek," Mr. Farmer tells us, that "it was adopted above "a century ago by W. Towers, in a panegyrick on Cartwright," had some knowledge of both ; and if we may judge by our own time, a man, who has any Greek, is seldom without a very competent share of Latin ; and yet such a man is very likely to study Plutarch in English, and to read translations of Ovid.

Surely

See Dr. Farmer's reply to these remarks by Mr. Colman, in a note on LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST, Act IV. Sc. ii. p. 435.

Surely, Towers having said that Cartwright had no Greek, is no proof that Ben Jonson said so of Shakespeare.

THE

THE
DEDICATION of the PLAYERS.

TO THE
MOST NOBLE AND INCOMPARABLE PAIRE OF BRETHREN,

W I L L I A M

Earle of PEMBROKE, &c. Lord Chamberlaine to the Kings
most Excellent Majestie;

AND

P H I L I P

Earle of MONTGOMERY, &c. Gentleman of his Majesties Bed-chamber.

Both Knights of the Most Noble Order of the Garter, and our singular good LORDS.

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

WHILST we studie to be thankfull in our particular, for the many favors we have received from your L. L. we are false upon the ill fortune, to mingle two the most diverse things that can be, feare, and rashnesse; rash-nesse in the enterprize, and feare of the successe. For, when we value the places your H. H. sustaine, wee cannot but know the dignity greater, than to descend to the reading of these trifles: and, while we name them trifles, we have deprived ourselves of the defence of our dedication. But since your L. L. have been pleased to thinke these trifles something, heeretofore; and have prosequuted both them, and their authour living, with so much favour: we hope (that they out-living him, and he not having the fate, common with some, to be exequutor to his owne writings) you will use the same indulgence toward them, you have done unto their parent. There is a great difference, whether any booke

booke choose his patrones, or finde them: this hath done both. For, so much were your L. L. likings of the severall parts, when they were acted, as before they were published, the volume asked to be yours. We have but collected them, and done an office to the dead, to procure his orphans, guardians; without ambition either of selfe-profit, or fame: onely to keepe the memory of so worthy a friend, and fellow alive, as was our SHAKESPEARE, by humble offer of his playes, to your most noble patronage. Wherein, as we have justly observed, no man to come neere your L. L. but with a kind of religious addresse; it hath bin the height of our care, who are the presenters, to make the present worthy of your H. H. by the perfection. But, there we must also crave our abilities to be considerd, my Lords. We cannot goe beyond our owne powers. Country hands reach forth milke, creame, fruits, or what they have: and many nations (we have heard) that had not gummes and incense, obtained their requests with a leavened cake. It was no fault to approch their gods by what meanes they could: and the most, though nearest, of things are made more precious, when they are dedicated to temples. In that name therefore, we most humbly consecrate to your H. H. these remaines of your servant SHAKESPEARE; that what delight is in them may be ever your L. L. the reputation his, and the faults ours, if any be committed, by a paire so carefull to shew their gratitude both to the living, and the dead, as is

Your Lordshippes most bounden,

JOHN HEMINGE,

HENRY CONDELL.

THE
P R E F A C E
OF THE
P L A Y E R S.

To the great Variety of READERS.

FROM the most able, to him who can but spell: there you are number'd, we you were weigh'd. Especially, when the fate of a depends upon your capacities: and not of your head; but of your purses. Well! it is now publique, and will stand for your priviledges, wee know: to read, and censure. Doe so, but buy it first. That doth best commend a booke, the stationer saies. Then, how odde soever your braines be, or your wisdomes, make your licence the same, and spare not. Judge your sixe-pen'orth, your shillings worth, your five shillings worth at a time, or higher, so you rise to the just rates, and welcome. But, whatever you doe, buy. Censure will not drive a trade, or make the jacke goc. And though you be a magistrate of wit, and sit on the stage at Black-friars, or the Cock-pit, to arraigne plays dailie, know, these playes have had their triall already, and stood out all appeales; and do now come forth quitted rather by a decree of court, than any purchas'd letters of commendation.

It had bene a thing, we confesse, worthie to have been wished, that the author himselfe had liv'd to have set forth, and overseen his owne writings; but since it hath been ordain'd otherwise, and he by death departed from that right, we pray you doe not envie his friends, the office of their care and paine, to have collected and publish'd them; and so to have publish'd them, as where (before) you were abus'd with divers stolne and surreptitious copies, maimed and deformed by the frauds and stealthes of injurious impostors, that expos'd them: even those are now offer'd to your view cur'd, and and perfect of their limbes; and all the rest, absolute in their numbers as he conceived them. Who, as he was a happy imitator of nature, was a most gentle expresse of it. His mind and hand went together: and what he thought, he uttered with that easinesse, that wee have scarce received from him a blot in his papers. But it is not our province, who onely gather his workes, and give them you, to praise him. It is yours that reade him. And there we hope, to your divers capacities, you will finde enough, both to draw, and hold you: for his wit can no more lie hid, then it could be lost. Reade him, therefore, and againe, and againe: and if then you doe not like him, surely you are in some manifest danger, not to understand him. And so we leave you to other of his friends who, if you need, can bee your guides: if you neede them not, you can leade yourselves, and others. And such aders we wish him.

JOHN HEMINGE,
HENRIE CONDELL.

MR. POPE'S

Mr. P O P E:

P R E F A C E.

IT is not my design to enter into a criticism upon this author; though to do it effectually, and not superficially, would be the best occasion that any just writer could take, to form the judgment and taste of our nation. For of all English poets Shakespeare must be confessed to be the fairest and fullest subject for criticism, and to afford the most numerous, as well as most conspicuous instances, both of beauties and faults of all sorts. But this far exceeds the bounds of a preface, the business of which is only to give an account of the fate of his works, and the disadvantages under which they have been transmitted to us. We shall hereby extenuate many faults which are his, and clear him from the imputation of many which are not: a design, which, though it can be no guide to future criticks to do him justice in one way, will at least be sufficient to prevent their doing him an injustice in the other.

I cannot however but mention some of his principal and characteristick excellencies, for which (notwithstanding his defects) he is justly and universally elevated above all other dramatick writers. Not that this is the proper place of praising him, but because I would not omit any occasion of doing it.

If ever any author deserved the name of an original, it was Shakespeare. Homer himself drew not his art so immediately from the fountains of nature, it proceeded through Ægyptian strainers and channels, and came to him not without some tincture of the learning, or some cast of the models, of those before him. The poetry of Shakespeare was inspiration indeed: he is not so much an imitator, as an instrument, of nature; and it is not so just to say that he speaks from her, as that she speaks through him.

His

His characters are so much nature itself, that it is a sort of injury to call them by so distant a name as copies of her. Those of other poets have a constant resemblance, which shews that they received them from one another, and were but multipliers of the same image: each picture, like a mock-rainbow, is but the reflexion of a reflexion. But every single character in Shakespeare is as much an individual, as those in life itself; it is as impossible to find any two alike; and such as from their relation or affinity in any respect appear most to be twins, will, upon comparison, be found remarkably distinct. To this life and variety of character, we must add the wonderful preservation of it; which is such throughout his plays, that had all the speeches been printed without the very names of the persons, I believe one might have applied them with certainty to every speaker.

The power over our passions was never possessed in a more eminent degree, or displayed in so different instances. Yet all along, there is seen no labour, no pains to raise them; no preparation to guide our guests to the effect, or be perceived to lead toward it: but the heart swells, and the tears burst out, just at the proper places: we are surpris'd the moment we weep; and yet upon reflexion find the passion so just, that we should be surpris'd if we had not wept, and wept at that very moment.

How astonishing is it again, that the passions directly opposite to these, laughter and spleen, are no less at his command! that he is not more a master of the great than of the ridiculous in human nature; of our noblest tenderesses, than of our vainest foibles; of our strongest emotions, than of our idlest sensations!

Nor does he only excel in the passions: in the coolness of reflexion and reasoning he is full as admirable. His sentiments are not only in general the most pertinent and judicious upon every subject; but by a talent very peculiar, something between penetration and felicity, he hits upon that particular point on which the bent of each argument turns, or the force of each motive depends. This is perfectly amazing, from a man of no education or experience in those great and publick scenes of life which are usually the subject of his thoughts: so that he seems to have known the world by intuition, to have looked through human nature at one glance, and to be the only author that gives ground for a very new opinion, that the philosopher, and even the man of the world, may be born, as well as the poet.

It must be owned, that with all these great excellencies, he has almost as great defects; and that as he has certainly written better, so he has perhaps written worse than any other. But I think I can in some measure account for these defects, from several causes and accidents; without which it is hard to imagine that so large and so enlightened a mind could ever have been susceptible of them. That all these contingencies should unite to his disadvantage seems to me almost as singularly unlucky, as that so many various (nay contrary) talents should meet in one man, was happy and extraordinary.

It must be allowed that stage-poetry, of all other, is more particularly levelled to please the populace, and its success more immediately depending upon the common suffrage. One cannot therefore wonder, if Shakespeare, having at his first appearance no other aim in his writings than to procure a subsistence, directed his endeavours solely to hit the taste and humour that then prevailed. The audience was generally composed of the meaner sort of people; and therefore the images of life were to be drawn from those of their own rank: accordingly we find, that not our author's only, but almost all the old comedies have their scene among tradesmen and mechanicks: and even their historical plays strictly follow the common old stories or vulgar traditions of that kind of people. In tragedy, nothing was so sure to surprize and cause admiration, as the most strange, unexpected, and consequently most unnatural, events and incidents; the most exaggerated thoughts; the most verbose and bombast expression; the most pompous rhymes, and thundering versification. In comedy, nothing was so sure to please, as mean buffoonry, vile ribaldry, and unmannerly jests of fools and clowns. Yet even in these our author's wit buoys up, and is borne above his subject: his genius in those low parts is like some prince of a romance in the disguise of a shepherd or peasant; a certain greatness and spirit now and then break out, which manifest his higher extraction and qualities.

It may be added, that not only the common audience had no notion of the rules of writing, but few even of the better sort piqued themselves upon any great degree of knowledge or nicety that way; till Ben Jonson getting possession of the stage, brought critical learning into vogue: and that this was not done without difficulty, may appear from those frequent lessons (and indeed almost declamations) which he was forced to prefix to his first plays, and put into the mouth of his actors, the grææ, chorus, &c. to remove the prejudices, and inform the judgment of his hearers. 'Till then, our authors had no thoughts of writing on the model of the ancients: their tragedies were only histories in dialogue; and their comedies followed the thread of any novel as they found it, no less implicitly than if it had been true history.
of

To judge therefore of Shakespeare by Aristotle's rules, is like trying a man by the laws of one country, who acted under those of another. He writ to the people; and writ at first without patronage from the better sort, and therefore without aims of pleasing them: without assistance or advice from the learned, as without the advantage of education or acquaintance among them: without that knowledge of the best models, the ancients, to inspire him with an emulation of them; in a word, without any views of reputation, and of what poets are pleased to call immortality: some or all of which have encouraged the vanity, or animated the ambition, of other writers.

Yet it must be observed, that when his performances had merited the protection of his prince, and when the encouragement of the court had succeeded to that of the town; the works of his riper years are manifestly raised above those of his former. The dates of his plays sufficiently evidence that his productions improved, in proportion to the respect he had for his auditors. And I make no doubt this observation would be found true in every instance, were but editions extant from which we might learn the exact time when every piece was composed, and whether writ for the town, or the court.

Another cause (and no less strong than the former) may be deduced from our author's being a player, and forming himself first upon the judgments of that body of men whereof he was a member. They have ever had a standard to themselves, upon other principles than those of Aristotle. As they live by the majority, they know no rule but that of pleasing the 'present humour, and complying with the wit in fashion; a consideration which brings all their judgment to a short point. Players are just such judges of what is right, as taylor's are of what is grateful. And in this view it will be but fair to allow, that most of our author's faults are less to be ascribed to his wrong judgment as a poet, than to his right judgment as a player.

By these men it was thought a praise to Shakespeare, that he scarce ever blotted a line. This they industriously propagated, as appears from what we are told by Ben Jonson in his Discoveries, and from the preface of Heminges and Condell to the first folio edition. But in reality (however it has prevailed) there never was a more groundless report, or to the contrary of which there are more undeniable evidences. As, the comedy of The Merry Wives of Windsor, which he entirely new writ; The History of Henry the Sixth, which was first published under the title of The Contention of York and Lancaster; and that of Henry the Fifth, extremely improved; that of Hamlet enlarged to almost as much again as at first, and many others. I believe the common opinion of his want of learning proceeded from no better ground. This too might be thought a praise by some, and to this his errors have as injudiciously been ascribed by others. For it is certain, were it true, it could concern but a small part of them; the most are such as are not properly defects, but supererogations: and arise not from want of learning or reading, but from want of thinking or judging: or rather (to be more just to our author) from a compliance to those wants in others. As to a wrong choice of the subject, a wrong conduct of the incidents, false thoughts, forced expressions, &c. if these are not to be ascribed to the fore said accidental reasons, they must be charged upon the poet himself, and there is no help for it. But I think the two disadvantages which I have mentioned (to be obliged to please the lowest of the people, and to keep the worst of company) if the consideration be extended as far as it reasonably may, will appear sufficient to mislead and depress the greatest genius upon earth. Nay, the more modesty with which such a one is endued, the more he is in danger of submitting and conforming to others, against his own better judgment.

But as to his want of learning, it may be necessary to say something more: there is certainly a vast difference between learning and languages. How far he was ignorant of the latter, I cannot determine; but it is plain he had much reading at least, if they will not call it learning. Nor is it any great matter, if a man has knowledge, whether he has it from one language or from another. Nothing is more evident than that he had a taste of natural philosophy, mechanicks, ancient and modern history, poetical learning, and mythology: we find him very knowing in the customs, rites, and manners of antiquity. In Coriolanus and Julius Cæsar, not only the spirit, but manners, of the Romans are exactly drawn; and still a nicer distinction is shewn between the

the manners of the Romans in the time of the former, and of the latter. His reading in the ancient historians is no less conspicuous, in many references to particular passages: and the speeches copied from Plutarch in Coriolanus, may, I think, as well be made an instance of his learning, as those copied from Cicero in Catiline, of Ben Jonson's. The manners of other nations in general, the Egyptians, Venetians, French, &c. are drawn with equal propriety. Whatever object of nature, or branch of science, he either speaks of or describes; it is always with competent, if not extensive knowledge: his descriptions are still exact; all his metaphors appropriated, and remarkably drawn from the true nature and inherent qualities of each subject. When he treats of ethick or politick, we may constantly observe a wonderful justness of distinction, as well as extent of comprehension. No one is more a master of the poetical story, or has more frequent allusions to the various parts of it: Mr. Waller (who has been celebrated for this last particular) has not shewn more learning this way than Shakespeare. We have translations from Ovid published in his name, among those poems which pass for his, and for some of which we have undoubted authority (being published by himself, and dedicated to his noble patron the earl of Southampton): he appears also to have been conversant in Plautus, from whom he has taken the plot of one of his plays: he follows the Greek authors, and particularly Dares Phrygius, in another: (although I will not pretend to say in what language he read them). The modern Italian writers of novels he was manifestly acquainted with; and we may conclude him to be no less conversant with the ancients of his own country, from the use he has made of Chaucer in Troilus and Cressida, and in The Two Noble Kinsmen, if that play be his, as there goes a tradition it was (and indeed it has little resemblance of Fletcher, and more of our author than some of those which have been received as genuine).

I am inclined to think this opinion proceeded originally from the zeal of the partizans of our author and Ben Jonson; as they endeavoured to exalt the one at the expence of the other. It is ever the nature of parties to be in extremes; and nothing is so probable, as that because Ben Jonson had much the more learning, it was said on the one hand that Shakespeare had none at all; and because Shakespeare had much the most wit and fancy, it was retorted on the other, that Jonson wanted both. Because Shakespeare borrowed nothing, it was said that Ben Jonson borrowed every thing. Because Jonson did not write extempore, he was reproached with being a year about every piece; and because Shakespeare wrote with ease and rapidity, they cried, he never once made a blot. Nay, the spirit of opposition ran so high, that whatever those of the one side objected to the other, was taken at the rebound, and turned into praises; as injudiciously, as their antagonists before had made them objections.

Poets are always afraid of envy; but sure they have as much reason to be afraid of admiration. They are the Scylla and Charybdis of authors; those who escape one, often fall by the other. Pessimus genus inimicorum laudantes, says Tacitus: and Virgil desires to wear a charm against those who praise a poet without rule or reason.

—Si ultra placitum laudârit baccare frontem
Cingito, ne vati noceat—

But however this contention might be carried on by the the partizans on either side, I cannot help thinking these two great poets were good friends, and lived on amicable terms and in offices of society with each other. It is an acknowledged fact, that Ben Jonson was introduced upon the stage, and his first works encouraged, by Shakespeare. And after his death, that author writes, To the memory of his beloved Mr. William Shakespeare*, which shews as if the friendship had continued through life. I cannot for my own part find any thing invidious or sparing in those verses, but wonder Mr. Dryden* was of that opinion. He exalts him not only above all his contemporaries, but above Chaucer and Spenser, whom he will not allow to be great enough to be ranked with him; and challenges the names of Sophocles, Euripides, and Æschylus, nay, all Greece and Rome at once, to equal him; and (which is very particular) expressly vindicates him from the imputation of wanting art, not enduring that all his excellencies should be attributed to nature. It is remarkable too, that the praise he gives him in his Discoveries seems to proceed from a personal kindness; he tells us, that he loved the man, as well as honoured his memory; celebrates the honesty, openness, and frankness of his temper; and only distinguishes, as he reasonably ought, between the real merit of the author, and the silly and derogatory applauses of the players. Ben Jonson might indeed be sparing

In his commendations (though certainly he is not so in this instance) partly from his own nature, and partly from judgment. For men of judgment think they do any man more service in praising him justly, than lavishly. I say, I would fain believe they were friends, though the violence and ill-breeding of their followers and flatterers were enough to give rise to the contrary report. I hope that it may be with parties, both in wit and state, as with those monsters described by the poets; and that their heads at least may have something human, though their bodies and tails are wild beasts and serpents.

As I believe that what I have mentioned gave rise to the opinion of Shakespeare's want of learning; so what has continued it down to us may have been the many blunders and illiteracies of the first publishers of his works. In these editions their ignorance shins in almost every page; nothing is more common than Actus tertia. Exit omnes. Enter three Witches solus *. Their French is as bad as their Latin, both in construction and spelling: their very Welsh is false. Nothing is more likely than that those palpable blunders of Hector's quoting Aristotle, with others of that gross kind, sprung from the same root: it not being at all credible that these could be the errors of any man who had the least tincture of a school, or the least conversation with such as had. Ben Jonson (whom they will not think partial to him) allows him at least to have had some Latin; which is utterly inconsistent with mistakes like these. Nay, the constant blunders in proper names of persons and places, are such as must have proceeded from a man, who had not so much as read any history in any language: so could not be Shakespeare's.

I shall now lay before the reader some of those almost innumerable errors, which have risen from one source, the ignorance of the players, both as his actors, and as his editors. When the nature and kinds of these are enumerated and considered, I dare to say that not Shakespeare only, but Aristotle or Cicero, had their works undergone the same fate, might have appeared to want sense as well as learning.

* Enter three witches solus.] This blunder appears to be of Mr. Pope's own invention. It is not to be found in any one of the four folio copies of Macbeth, and there is no quarto edition of it extant.

It is not certain that any one of his plays was published by himself. During the time of his employment in the theatre, several of his pieces were printed separately in quarto. What makes me think that most of these were not published by him, is the excessive carelessness of the presses: every page is so scandalously false spelled, and almost all the learned or unusual words so intolerably mangled, that it is plain there either was no corrector to the press at all, or one totally illiterate. If any were supervised by himself, I should fancy The Two Parts of Henry the Fourth, and Midsummer-Night's Dream might have been so: because I find no other printed with any exactness; and (contrary to the rest) there is very little variation in all the subsequent editions of them. There are extant two prefaces to the first quarto edition of Troilus and Cressida in 1609, and to that of Othello; by which it appears, that the first was published without his knowledge or consent, or even before it was acted, so late as seven or eight years before he died; and that the latter was not printed till after his death. The whole number of genuine plays, which we have been able to find printed in his life-time, amounts but to eleven. And of some of these, we meet with two or more editions by different printers, each of which has whole heaps of trash different from the other: which I should fancy was occasioned by their being taken from different copies belonging to different play-houses.

The folio edition (in which all the plays we now receive as his were first collected) was published by two players, Heminges and Condell, in 1623, seven years after his decease. They declare, that all the other editions were stolen and surreptitious, and affirm theirs to be purged from the errors of the former. This is true as to the literal errors, and no other; for in all respects else it is far worse than the quartos.

First, because the additions of trifling and bombast passages are in this edition far more numerous. For whatever had been added, since those quartos, by the actors, or had stolen from their mouths into the written parts, were from thence conveyed into the printed text, and all stand charged upon the author. He himself complained of this usage in Hamlet, where he wishes that those who play the clowns would speak no more than is set down for them. (Act. iii. Sc. 4.) But as a proof that he could not escape it, in the old editions of Romeo and Juliet there is no hint of a great number of the mean conceits and ribaldries now to be found there.

In others, the low scenes of mobs, plebeians, and clowns, are vastly shorter, than at present: and I have seen one in particular (which seems to have belonged to the play-house, by having the parts divided with lines, and the actors names in the margin) where several of those very passages were added in a written hand, which are since to be found in the folio.

In the next place, a number of beautiful passages, which are extant in the first single editions, are omitted in this: as it seems, without any other reason, than their willingness to shorten some scenes: these men (as it was said of Procrustes) either lopping, or stretching an author, to make him just fit for their stage.

This edition is said to be printed from the original copies; I believe they meant those which had lain ever since the author's days in the play-house, and had from time to time been cut, or added to, arbitrarily. It appears that this edition, as well as the quartos, was printed (at least partly) from no better copies than the prompter's book, or piece-meal parts written out for the use of the actors: for in some places their very * names are through carelessness set down instead of the Personæ Dramatis; and in others the notes of direction to the property-men for their moveables, and to the players for their entries, are inserted into the text through the ignorance of the transcribers.

The plays not having been before so much as distinguished by Acts and Scenes, they are in this edition divided according as they played them; often when there is no pause in the action, or where they thought fit to make a breach in it, for the sake of musick, masques, or monsters.

Sometimes the scenes are transposed and shuffled backward and forward; a thing which could no otherwise happen, but by their being taken from separate and piece-meal written parts.

Many verses are omitted entirely, and others transposed; from whence invincible obscurities have arisen, past the guess of any commentator to clear up, but just where the accidental glimpse of an old edition enlightens us.

* Much Ado about Nothing, Act ii. Enter Prince Leonato, Claudio, and Jack Wilson, instead of Balisbazar. And in Act iv. Cowley and Kemp constantly through a whole scene.

Edit. fol. of 1623, and 1632.

Some characters were confounded and mixed, or two put into one, for want of a competent number of actors. Thus in the quarto edition of Midsummer-Night's Dream, Act v. Shakespeare introduces a kind of master of the revels called Philostrate, all whose part is given to another character (that of Egeus) in the subsequent editions: so also in Hamlet and King Lear. This too makes it probable that the prompter's books were what they called the original copies.

From liberties of this kind, many speeches also were put into the mouths of wrong persons, where the author now seems chargeable with making them speak out of character: or sometimes perhaps for no better reason, than that a governing player, to have the mouthing of some favourite speech himself, would snatch it from the unworthy lips of an underling.

Prose from verse they did not know, and they accordingly printed one for the other throughout the volume.

Having been forced to say so much of the players, I think I ought in justice to remark, that the judgment, as well as condition of that class of people was then far inferior to what it is in our days. As then the best play-houses were inns and taverns (the Globe, the Hope, the Red Bull, the Fortune, &c.) so the top of the profession were then mere players, not gentlemen of the stage: they were led into the buttery by the steward, not placed at the lord's table, or lady's toilette: and consequently were entirely deprived of those advantages they now enjoy in the familiar conversation of our nobility, and an intimacy (not to say dearness) with people of the first condition.

From what has been said, there can be no question but had Shakespeare published his works himself (especially in his latter time, and after his retreat from the stage) we should not only be certain which are genuine, but should find in those that are, the errors lessened by some thousands. If I may judge from all the distinguishing marks of his style, and his manner of thinking and writing, I make no doubt to declare that those wretched plays Pericles, Lochrine, Sir John Oldcastle, Yorkshire Tragedy, Lord Cromwell, The Puritan, and London Prodigal, cannot be admitted as his. And I should conjecture of some of the others (particularly Love's Labour's Lost, The Winter's Tale, and Titus Andronicus) that only some characters, single scenes, or perhaps a few particular passages, were of his hand. It is very probable what occasioned some plays to be supposed Shakespeare's was only this; that they were pieces produced by unknown authors, or fitted up for the theatre while it was under his administration; and no owner claiming them, they were adjudged to him, as they give strays to the lord of the manor: a mistake which (one may also observe) it was not for the interest of the house to remove. Yet the players themselves, Heminges and Condell, afterwards did Shakespeare the justice to reject those eight plays in their edition; though they were then printed in his name, in every body's hands, and acted with some applause (as we learn from what Ben Jonson says of Pericles in his ode on the New Inn). That Titus Andronicus is one of this class I am the rather induced to believe, by finding the same author openly express his contempt of it in the induction to Bartholomew-Fair, in the year 1614, when Shakespeare was yet living. And there is no better authority for these latter sort, than for the former, which were equally published in his life-time.
plays

If we give into this opinion, how many low and vicious parts and passages might no longer reflect upon this great genius, but appear unworthily charged upon him? And even in those which are really his, how many faults may have been unjustly laid to his account from arbitrary additions, expunctions, transpositions of scenes and lines, confusion of characters and persons, wrong application of speeches, corruptions of innumerable passages by the ignorance, and wrong corrections of them again by the impertinence, of his first editors? From one or other of these considerations, I am verily persuaded, that the greatest and the grossest part of what are thought his errors would vanish, and leave his character in a light very different from that disadvantageous one, in which it now appears to us.

This is the state in which Shakespeare's writings lie at present; for since the above-mentioned folio edition, all the rest have implicitly followed it, without having recourse to any of the former, or ever making the comparison between them. It is impossible to repair the injuries already done him; too much time has elapsed, and the materials are too few. In what I have done I have rather given a proof of my willingness and desire, than of my ability, to do him justice. I have discharged the dull duty of an editor, to my best judgment, with more labour than I expect thanks, with a religious abhorrence of all innovation, and without any

any indulgence to my private sense or conjecture. The method taken in this edition will shew itself. The various readings are fairly put in the margin, so that every one may compare them; and those I have preferred into the text are constantly ex fide codicum, upon authority. The alterations or additions, which Shakespearc himself made, are taken notice of as they occur. Some suspected passages, which are excessively bad (and which seem interpolations by being so inserted, that one can entirely omit them without any chasm, or deficiency in the context) are degraded to the bottom of the page; with an asterisk referring to the places of their insertion. The scenes are marked distinctly, that every removal of place is specified; which is more necessary in this author than any other, since he shifts them more frequently; and sometimes, without attending to this particular, the reader would have met with obscurities. The more obsolete or unusual words are explained. Some of the most shining passages are distinguished by commas in the margin; and where the beauty lay not in particulars, but in the whole, a star is prefixed to the scene. This seems to me a shorter and less ostentatious method of performing the better half of criticism (namely, the pointing out an author's excellencies) than to fill a whole paper with citations of fine passages, with general applauses, or empty exclamations at the tail of them. There is also subjoined a catalogue of those first editions, by which the greater part of the various readings and of the corrected passages are authorized (most of which are such as carry their own evidence along with them). These editions now hold the place of originals, and are the only materials left to repair the deficiencies or restore the corrupted sense of the author: I can only wish that a greater number of them (if a greater were ever published) may yet be found, by a search more successful than mine, for the better accomplishment of this end.

I will conclude by saying of Shakespearc, that with all his faults, and with all the irregularity of his drama, one may look upon his works, in comparison of those that are more finished and regular, as upon an ancient majestic piece of Gothick architecture, compar'd with a neat modern building: the latter is more elegant and glaring, but the former is more strong and more solemn. It must be allowed that in one of these there are materials enough to make many of the other. It has much the greater variety, and much the nobler apartments; though we are often conducted to them by dark, odd, and uncooth passages. Nor does the whole fail to strike us with greater reverence, though many of the parts are childish, ill-placed, and unequal to its grandeur.

Mr. THEO-

Mr. THEOBALD'S
P R E F A C E.

THE attempt to write upon SHAKESPEARE is like going into a large, a spacious, and a splendid dome through the conveyance of a narrow and obscure entry. A glare of light suddenly breaks upon you beyond what the avenue at first promised: and a thousand beauties of genius and character, like so many gaudy apartments pouring at once upon the eye, diffuse and throw themselves out to the mind. The prospect is too wide to come within the compass of a single view: it is a gay confusion of pleasing objects, too various to be enjoyed but in a general admiration: and they must be separated, and eyed distinctly, in order to give the proper entertainment.

And as in great piles of building, some parts are often finished up to hit the taste of the connoisseur; others more negligently put together, to strike the fancy of a common and unlearned beholder: some parts are made stupendously magnificent and grand, to surprise with the vast design and execution of the architect; others are contracted, to amuse you with his neatness and elegance in little. So, in Shakespeare, we may find traits that will stand the test of the severest judgment; and strokes as carelessly hit off, to the level of the more ordinary capacities: some descriptions raised to that pitch of grandeur, as to astonish you with the compass and elevation of his thought: and others copying nature within so narrow, so confined a circle, as if the author's talent lay only at drawing in miniature.

In how many points of light must we be obliged to gaze at this great poet! In how many branches of excellence to

* This is Mr. Theobald's preface to his second edition in 1740, and had been much curtailed by himself after its appearance before the impression in 1733.

STEEVENS.

consider

consider and admire him! Whether we view him on the side of art or nature, he ought equally to engage our attention: whether we respect the force and greatness of his genius, the extent of his knowledge and reading, the power and address with which he throws out and applies either nature or learning, there is ample scope both for our wonder and pleasure. If his diction, and the cloathing of his thoughts attract us, how much more must we be charmed with the richness and variety of his images and ideas! If his images and ideas steal into our souls, and strike upon our fancy, how much are they improved in price, when we come to reflect with what propriety and justness they are applied to character! If we look into his characters, and how they are furnished and proportioned to the employment he cuts out for them, how are we taken up with the mastery of his portraits! What draughts of nature! What variety of originals, and how differing each from the other! How are they dressed from the stores of his own luxurious imagination; without being the apes of mode, or borrowing from any foreign wardrobe! Each of them are the standards of fashion for themselves: like gentlemen that are above the direction of their taylor, and can adorn themselves without the aid of imitation. If other poets draw more than one fool or coxcomb, there is the same resemblance in them, as in that painter's draughts, who was happy only at forming a rose: you find them all younger brothers of the same family, and all of them have a pretence to give the same crest: but Shakespeare's clowns and fops come all of a different house: they are no farther allied to one another than as man to man, members of the same species; but as different in features and lineaments of character, as we are from one another in face or complexion. But I am unawares lanching into his character as a writer, before I have said what I intended of him as a private member of the republick. —

Mr. Rowe has very justly observed, that people are fond of discovering any little personal story of the great men of antiquity; and that the common accidents of their lives naturally become the subject of our critical enquiries: that however trifling such a curiosity at the first view may appear, yet, as for what relates to men of letters, the knowledge of an author may, perhaps, sometimes conduce to the better understanding his works; and, indeed, this author's works, from the bad treatment he has met with from copyists and editors, have so long wanted a comment, that one

126 Mr. THEOBALD'S PREFACE.

one would zealously embrace every method of information that could contribute to recover them from the injuries with which they have so long lain overwhelmed.

It is certain, that if we have first admired the man in his writings, his case is so circumstanced, that we must naturally admire the writings in the man: that if we go back to take a view of his education, and the employment in life which fortune had cut out for him, we shall retain the stronger ideas of his extensive genius.

His father, we are told, was a considerable dealer in wool; but having no fewer than ten children, of whom our Shakespeare was the eldest, the best education he could afford him was no better than to qualify him for his own business and employment. I cannot affirm with any certainty how long his father lived; but I take him to be the same Mr. John Shakespeare who was living in the year 1599, and who then, in honour of his son, took out an extract of his family-arms from the herald's office; by which it appears, that he had been officer and bailiff of Stratford upon Avon in Warwickshire; and that he enjoyed some hereditary lands and tenements, the reward of his great grandfather's faithful and approved service to king Henry VII.

Be this as it will, our Shakespeare, it seems, was bred for some time at a free-school; the very free-school, I presume, founded at Stratford: where, we are told, he acquired what Latin he was master of: but that his father being obliged, through narrowness of circumstance, to withdraw him too soon from thence, he was thereby unhappily prevented from making any proficiency in the dead languages: a point that will deserve some little discussion in the sequel of this dissertation.

How long he continued in his father's way of business, either as an assistant to him, or on his own proper account, no notices are left to inform us: nor have I been able to learn precisely at what period of life he quitted his native Stratford, and began his acquaintance with London and the stage.

In order to settle in the world after a family-manner, he thought fit, Mr. Rowe acquaints us, to marry while he was yet very young. It is certain, he did so: for by the monument in Stratford church, erected to the memory of his daughter Susanna, the wife of John Hall, gentleman, it appears, that she died on the 2d of July, in the year 1649, aged aged 66. So that she was born in 1583, when her father could not be full 19 years old; who was himself born in the year 1564. Nor was she his eldest child, for he had another daughter, Judith, who was born before her*, and who was married to one Mr. Thomas Quiney. So that Shakespeare must have entered into wedlock by that time he was turned of seventeen years.

Mr. THEOBALD's PREEACE. 127

Whether the force of inclination merely, or some concurring circumstances of convenience in the match, prompted him to marry so early, is not easy to be determined at this distance: but it is probable, a view of interest might partly sway his conduct in this point: for he married the daughter of one Hathaway, a substantial yeoman in his neighbourhood, and she had the start of him in age no less than eight years. She survived him notwithstanding, seven seasons, and died that very year the players published the first edition of his works in folio, anno Dom. 1623, at the age of 67 years, as we likewise learn from her monument in Stratford church.

How long he continued in this kind of settlement, upon his own native spot, is not more easily to be determined. But if the tradition be true, of that extravagance which forced him both to quit his country and way of living; to wit, his being engaged, with a knot of young deer-stealers, to rob the park of Sir Thomas Lucy of Cherlecot near Stratford: the enterprize favours so much of youth and levity, we may reasonably suppose it was before he could write full man. Besides, considering he has left us six and thirty plays at least, avowed to be genuine; and considering too, that he had retired from the stage, to spend the latter part of his days at his own native Stratford: the interval of time necessarily required for the finishing so many dramatick pieces, obliges us to suppose he threw himself very early upon the play-house. And as he could, probably, contract no acquaintance with the drama, while he was driving on the affair of wool at home; some time must be lost, even after he had commenced player, before he could attain knowledge enough in the science to qualify himself for turning author.

It has been observed by Mr. Rowe, that, amongst other extravagancies, which our author has given to his Sir John Falstaff in The Merry Wives of Windsor, he has made him a deer-stealer; and that he might at the same time remember his Warwickshire prosecutor, under the name of Justice Shallow, he has given him very near the same coat of arms, which Dugdale, in his Antiquities of that county, describes for a family there. There are two coats, I observe, in Dugdale, where three silver fishes are borne in the name of Lucy; and another coat, to the monument of Thomas Lucy, son of Sir William Lucy, in which are quartered in four several divisions, twelve little fishes, three in each division, probably Luces. This very coat, indeed, seems alluded to in Shallow's giving the dozen white Luces, and, in Slender saying he may quarter. When I consider the exceeding candour and good nature of our author (which inclined all the gentler part of the world to love him; as the power of his wit obliged the men of the most delicate knowledge and polite learning to admire him); and that he should throw this humorous piece of satire at his prosecutor, at least twenty years after the provocation given; I am confidently persuaded it must be owing to an unforgiving rancour on the prosecutor's side: and if this was the case, it were pity but the disgrace of such an inveteracy should remain as a lasting reproach, and Shallow stand as a mark of ridicule to stigmatize his malice.

* This is a mistake. Susanna was the poet's eldest daughter. See the extracts from the register-book of the parish of Stratford, in one of the following pages.

It is said, our author spent some years before his death, in ease, retirement, and the conversation of his friends, at his native Stratford. I could never pick up any certain intelligence, when he relinquished the stage. I know, it has been mistakenly thought by some, that Spenser's Thalia, in his Tears of his Muses, where she laments the loss of her Willy in the comick scene, has been applied to our author's quitting the stage. But Spenser himself, it is well known, quitted the stage of life in the year 1598; and, five years after this, we find Shakespeare's name among the actors in Ben Jonson's Sejanus, which first made its appearance in the year 1603. Nor, surely, could he then have any thoughts of retiring, since, that very year, a licence under the privy-seal was granted by K. James I. to him and Fletcher, Burbage, Phillippes, Hemings, Condel, &c. authorizing them to exercise the art of playing comedies, tragedies, &c. as well at their usual house called The Globe on the other side of the water, as in any other parts of the kingdom, during his majesty's pleasure (a copy of which licence is preserved in in Rymer's Fædera). Again, it is certain, that Shakespeare did not exhibit his Macbeth, till after the union was brought about, and till after K. James I. had begun to touch for the evil: for it is plain, he has inserted compliments, on both those accounts, upon his royal master in that tragedy. Nor, indeed, could the number of the dramattick pieces, he produced, admit of his retiring near so early as that period. So that what Spenser there says, if it relate at all to Shakespeare, must hint at some occasional recess he made for a time upon a disgust taken: or the Willy, there mentioned, must relate to some other favourite poet. I believe, we may safely determine, that he had not quitted in the year 1610. For in his Tempest, our author makes mention of the Bermuda islands, which were unknown to the English, till, in 1609, Sir John Summers made a voyage to North-America, and discovered them: and afterwards invited some of his countrymen to settle a plantation there. That he became the private gentleman, at least three years before his decease, is pretty obvious from another circumstance: I mean, from that remarkable and well-known story, which Mr. Rowe has given us of our author's intimacy with Mr. John Combe, an old gentleman noted thereabouts for his wealth and usury: and upon whom Shakespeare made the following facetious epitaph.

*Ten in the hundred lies here ingrav'd,
'Tis a hundred to ten his soul is not sav'd;
If any man ask, who lies in this tomb,
Oh! oh! quoth the devil, 'tis my John-a-Combe.*

This farcaistical piece of wit was, at the gentleman's own request, thrown out extemporally in his company. And this Mr. John Combe I take to be the same, who, by Dugdale in his Antiquities of Warwickshire, is said to have died in the year 1614, and for whom, at the upper end of the quire of the Guild of the Holy Cross at Stratford, a fair monument is erected, having a statue thereon cut in alabaster, and in a gown, with this epitaph. "Here lieth interred the body
"of John Combe, esq; who died the 10th of July, 1614,
"who bequeathed several annual charities to the parish of "Stratford, and 100l. to be lent to fifteen poor tradesmen
"from three years to three years, changing the parties every "third year, at the rate of fifty shillings per annum, the in-
VOL. I. [1] "crease

"crease to be distributed to the almes-poor there."—The donation has all the air of a rich and sagacious usurer.

Shakespeare himself did not survive Mr. Combe long, for he died in the year 1616, the 53d of his age. He lies buried on the north side of the chancel in the great church at Stratford; where a monument, decent enough for the time, is erected to him, and placed against the wall. He is represented under an arch in a sitting posture, a cushion spread before him, with a pen in his right hand, and his left rested on a scrawl of paper. The Latin distich, which is placed under the cushion, has been given us by Mr. Pope, or his graver, in this manner.

INGENIO Pylium, genio Socratem, arte Maronem, Tertia tegit, populus mæret, Olympus habet.

I confess, I do not conceive the difference betwixt ingenio and genio in the first verse. They seem to me intirely synonymous terms; nor was the Pylian sage Nestor celebrated for his ingenuity, but for an experience and judgment owing to his long age. Dugdale, in his Antiquities of Warwickshire, has copied this distich with a distinction which Mr. Rowe has followed, and which certainly restores us the true meaning of the epitaph.

*JUDICIO Pylium, genio Socratem , &c.

In

* The first syllable in Socratem is here made short, which can not be allowed. Perhaps we should read Sophoclem. Shakespeare is then appositely compared with a dramatic author among the ancients: but still it should be remembered that the elogium is lessened while the metre is reform'd; and it is well known that some of our early writers of Latin poetry were uncommonly negligent in their prosody, especially in proper names. The thought of this distich, as Mr. Tollet observes, might have been taken from the Faëry Queene of Spenser, b. ii. c. 9. st. 48, and c. 10. st. 3.

To this Latin inscription on Shakespeare should be added the lines which are found underneath it on his monument.

Stay, passenger, why dost thou go so fast?
Read, if thou canst, whom envious death hath plac'd
Within this monument; Shakespeare, with whom
Quick nature dy'd, whose name doth deck the tomb
Far more than cost; since all that he hath writ
Leaves living art but page to serve his wit.

Again,

Mr. THEOBALD's PREFACE. 131

In 1614, the greater part of the town of Stratford was consumed by fire; but our Shakespeare's house, among some others, escaped the flames. This house was first built by Sir Hugh Clopton, a younger brother of an ancient family in that neighbourhood, who took their name from the manor of Clopton. Sir Hugh was Sheriff of London, in the reign of Richard III. and lord-mayor in the reign of king Henry VII. To this gentleman the town of Stratford is indebted for the fine stone-bridge, consisting of fourteen arches, which, at an extraordinary expence, he built over the Avon, together with a causeway running at the west-end thereof; as also for rebuilding the chapel adjoining to his house, and the cross-isle in the church there. It is remarkable of him, that, though he lived and died a bachelor, among the other extensive charities which he left both to the city of London and town of Stratford, he bequeathed considerable legacies for the marriage of poor maidens of good name and fame both in London and at Stratford. Notwithstanding which large donations in his life, and bequests at his death, as he had purchased the manor of Clopton, and all the estate of the family, so he left the same again to his elder brother's son with a very great addition (a proof how well beneficence and œconomy may walk hand in hand in wise families): good part of which estate is yet in the possession of Edward Clopton, esq; and Sir Hugh Clopton, knt. lineally descended from the elder brother of the first Sir Hugh: who particularly bequeathed to his nephew, by his will, his house, by the name of his Great House in Stratford.

The estate had now been sold out of the Clopton family for above a century, at the time when Shakespeare became the purchaser: who, having repaired and modelled it to his own mind, changed the name to New-place; which the mansion-house, since erected upon the same spot, at this day retains. The house and lands, which attended it, continued in Shakespeare's descendants to the time of the Restoration: when they were repurchased by the Clopton family, and the mansion now belongs to Sir Hugh Clopton, knt.

Again, near the wall on which this monument is erected, is a plain free-stone, under which his body is buried, with another epitaph, expressed in the following uncouth mixture of small and capital letters:

Good Frend for Iesus SAKE forbear
To digg THE Dust Enclōsed HERE
Blese be THE Man ¶ spares THEs Stones
And curst be He ¶ moves my Bones.

STEEVENS.

To the favour of this worthy gentleman I owe the knowledge of one particular, in honour of our poet's once dwelling-house, of which, I presume, Mr. Rowe never was apprized. When the civil war raged in England, and king Charles the First's queen was driven by the necessity of affairs to make a recess in Warwickshire, she kept her court for three weeks in New-place. We may reasonably suppose it then the best private house in the town; and her majesty preferred it to the college, which was in the possession of the Combe family, who did not so strongly favour the king's party.

How much our author employed himself in poetry, after his retirement from the stage, does not so evidently appear: very few posthumous sketches of his pen have been recovered to ascertain that point. We have been told, indeed, in print, but not till very lately, that two large chests full of this great man's loose papers and manuscript, in the hands of an ignorant baker of Warwick (who married one of the descendants from our Shakspeare) were carelessly flattered and thrown about as garret-lumber and litter, to the particular knowledge of the late Sir William Bishop, till they were all consumed in the general fire and destruction of that town. I cannot help being a little apt to distrust the authority of this tradition: because his wife survived him seven years, and as his favourite daughter Susanna survived her twenty-six years, it is very improbable they should suffer such a treasure to be removed, and translated into a remoter branch of the family, without a scrutiny first made into the value of it. This, I say, inclines me to distrust the authority of the relation: but, notwithstanding such an apparent improbability, if we really lost such a treasure, by whatever fatality or caprice of fortune they came into such ignorant and neglectful hands, I agree with the relater, the misfortune is wholly irreparable.

To these particulars, which regard his person and private life, some few more are to be gleaned from Mr. Rowe's Account of his Life and Writings: let us now take a short view of him in his public capacity as a writer: and, from thence, the transition will be easy to the state in which his writings have been handed down to us.

No age, perhaps, can produce an author more various from himself, than Shakspeare has been universally acknowledged to be. The diversity in style, and other parts of composition, so obvious in him, is as variously to be accounted for. His education, we find, was at best but begun: and he

he started early into a science from the force of genius, unequally assisted by acquired improvements. His fire, spirit, and exuberance of imagination gave an impetuosity to his pen: his ideas flowed from him in a stream rapid, but not turbulent; copious, but not ever overbearing its shores. The ease and sweetness of his temper might not a little contribute to his facility in writing: as his employment, as a player, gave him an advantage and habit of fancying himself the very character he meant to delineate. He used the helps of his function in forming himself to create and express that sublime, which other actors can only copy, and throw out, in action and graceful attitude. But, Nullum sine venia placuit ingenium, says, Seneca. The genius, that gives us the greatest pleasure, sometimes stands in need of our indulgence. Whenever this happens with regard to Shakespeare, I would willingly impute it to a vice of his times. We see complaisance enough, in our days, paid to a bad taste. So that his clutches, false wit, and descending beneath himself, may have proceeded from a deference paid to the then reigning barbarism.

I have not thought it out of my province, whenever occasion offered, to take notice of some of our poet's grand touches of nature: some, that do not appear sufficiently such; but in which he seems the most deeply instructed; and to which, no doubt, he has so much owed that happy preservation of his characters, for which he is justly celebrated. Great genius's, like his, naturally unambitious, are satisfied to conceal their art in these points. It is the foible of your wrier poets to make a parade and ostentation of that little science they have; and to throw it out in the most ambitious colours. And whenever a writer of this class shall attempt to copy these artful concealments of our author, and shall either think them easy, or practised by a writer for his ease, he will soon be convinced of his mistake by the difficulty of reaching the imitation of them.

Speret idem, sudet multum, frustraqué labore,
Ausus idem: ———

Indeed, to point out and exclaim upon all the beauties of Shakespeare, as they come singly in review, would be as insipid, as endless; as tedious, as unnecessary: but the explanation of those beauties that are less obvious to common readers, and whose illustration depends on the rules of just criticism, and an exact knowledge of human life, should deservedly have a share in a general critick upon the author. But to pass over at once to another subject:—

It has been allowed on all hands, how far our author was indebted to nature; it is not so well agreed, how much he owed to languages and acquired learning. The decisions on this subject were certainly set on foot by the hint from Ben Jonson, that he had small Latin and less Greek: and from this tradition, as it were, Mr. Rowe has thought fit peremptorily to declare, that, “It is without controversy, “ he had no knowledge of the writings of the ancient poets, “ for that in his works we find no traces of any thing which “ looks like an imitation of the ancients. For the delicacy “ of his taste (continues he) and the natural bent of his own “ great genius (equal, if not superior, to some of the best “ of theirs) would certainly have led him to read and study them with so much pleasure, that some of their fine “ images would naturally have insinuated themselves into, “ and been mixed with his own writings: and so his not “ copying, at least, something from them, may be an argument of his never having read them.” I shall leave it to the determination of my learned readers, from the numerous passages which I have occasionally quoted in my notes, in which our poet seems closely to have imitated the classics, whether Mr. Rowe’s assertion be so absolutely to be depended on. The result of the controversy must certainly, either way, terminate to our author’s honour: how happily he could imitate them, if that point be allowed; or how gloriously he could think like them, without owing any thing to imitation.

Though I should be very unwilling to allow Shakespeare so poor a scholar, as many have laboured to represent him, yet I shall be very cautious of declaring too positively on the other side of the question; that is, with regard to my opinion of his knowledge in the dead languages. And therefore the passages, that I occasionally quote from the classics, shall not be urged as proofs that he knowingly imitated those originals; but brought to shew how happily he has expressed himself upon the same topics. A very learned critick of our own nation has declared, that a sameness of thought and sameness of expression too, in two writers of a different age, can hardly happen, without a violent suspicion of the latter copying from his predecessor. I shall not therefore run any great risque of a censure, though I should should venture to hint, that the resemblances in thought and expression of our author and an ancient (which we should allow to be imitation in the one, whose learning was not questioned) may sometimes take its rise from strength of memory, and those impressions which he owed to the school. And if we may allow a possibility of this, considering that, when he quitted the school, he gave into his father's profession and way of living, and had, it is likely, but a slender library of classical learning; and considering what a number of translations, romances, and legends started about his time, and a little before (most of which, it is very evident, he read) I think it may easily be reconciled, why he rather schemed his plots and characters from these more latter informations, than went back to those fountains, for which he might entertain a sincere veneration, but to which he could not have so ready a recourse.

In touching on another part of his learning, as it related to the knowledge of history and books, I shall advance something, that, at first sight, will very much wear the appearance of a paradox. For I shall find it no hard matter to prove, that, from the grossest blunders in history, we are not to infer his real ignorance of it: nor from a greater use of Latin words, than ever any other English author used, must we infer his intimate acquaintance with that language.

A reader of taste may easily observe, that though Shakspeare, almost in every scene of his historical plays, commits the grossest offences against chronology, history, and ancient politicks; yet this was not through ignorance, as is generally supposed, but through the too powerful blaze of his imagination; which, when once raised, made all acquired knowledge vanish and disappear before it. But this licence in him, as I have said, must not be imputed to ignorance: since as often we may find him, when occasion serves, reasoning up to the truth of history; and throwing out sentiments as justly adapted to the circumstances of his subject, as to the dignity of his characters, or dictates of nature in general.

Then to come to his knowledge of the Latin tongue, it is certain, there is a surprising effusion of Latin words made English, far more than in any one English author I have seen; but we must be cautious to imagine, this was of his own doing. For the English tongue, in his age, began extremely to suffer by an inundation of Latin: and this, to be sure, was occasioned by the pedantry of those two monarchs, Elizabeth and James, both great Latinists. For it is not to be wondered at, if both the court and schools, equal flatterers of power, should adapt themselves to the royal taste.

But now I am touching on the question (which has been so frequently agitated, yet so entirely undecided) of his learning and acquaintance with the languages; an additional word or two naturally falls in here upon the genius of our author, as compared with that of Jonson his contemporary. They are confessedly the greatest writers our nation could ever boast of in the drama. The first, we say, owed all to his prodigious natural genius; and the other a great deal to his art and learning. This, if attended to, will explain a very remarkable appearance in their writings. Besides those wonderful master-pieces of art and genius, which each has given us; they are the authors of other works very unworthy of them: but with this difference; that in Jonson's bad pieces we do not discover one single trace of the author of The Fox and Alchymist: but in the wild extravagant notes of Shakespeare you every now and then encounter strains that recognize the divine composer. This difference may be thus accounted for. Jonson, as we said before, owing all his excellence to his art, by which he sometimes strained himself to an uncommon pitch, when at other times he unbent and played with his subject, having nothing then to support him, it is no wonder that he wrote so far beneath himself. But Shakespeare, indebted more largely to nature, than the other to acquired talents, in his most negligent hours could never so totally divert himself of his genius, but that it would frequently break out with astonishing force and splendor.

As I have never proposed to dilate farther on the character of my author, than was necessary to explain the nature and use of this edition, I shall proceed to consider him as a genius in possession of an everlasting name. And how great that merit must be, which could gain it against all the disadvantages of the horrid condition in which he has hitherto appeared! Had Homer, or any other admired author, first started into publick so maimed and deformed, we cannot determine whether they had not sunk for ever under the ignominy of such an ill appearance. The mangled condition of Shakespeare has been acknowledged by Mr. Rowe, who published him indeed, but neither corrected his text, nor collated the old copies. This gentleman had abilities, and sufficient

sufficient knowledge of his author, had but his industry been equal to his talents. The same mangled condition has been acknowledged too by Mr. Pope, who published him likewise, pretended to have collated the old copies, and yet seldom has corrected the text but to its injury. I congratulate with the manes of our poet, that this gentleman has been sparing in indulging his private sense, as he phrases it; for he, who tampers with an author, whom he does not understand, must do it at the expence of his subject. I have made it evident throughout my remarks, that he has frequently inflicted a wound where he intended a cure. He has acted with regard to our author, as an editor, whom LIPSIVS mentions, did with regard to MARTIAL; Inventus est nescio quis Popa, qui non vitia ejus, sed ipsum excidit. He has attacked him like an unhandy slaughterman; and not lopped off the errors, but the poet.

When this is found to be the fact, how absurd must appear the praises of such an editor? It seems a moot point, whether Mr. Pope has done most injury to Shakespeare, as his editor and encomiast; or Mr. Rymer done him service, as his rival and censurer. They have both shewn themselves in an equal impuissance of suspecting or amending the corrupted passages: and though it be neither prudence to censure, or commend what one does not understand; yet if a man must do one when he plays the critick, the latter is the more ridiculous office; and by that Shakespeare suffers most. For the natural veneration which we have for him, makes us apt to swallow whatever is given us as his, and set off with encomiums; and hence we quit all suspicions of depravity: on the contrary, the censure of so divine an author sets us upon his defence; and this produces an exact scrutiny and examination, which ends in finding out and discriminating the true from the spurious.

It is not with any secret pleasure, that I so frequently animadvert on Mr. Pope as a critick; but there are provocations, which a man can never quite forget. His libels have been thrown out with so much inveteracy, that, not to dispute whether they should come from a christian, they leave it a question whether they could come from a man. I should be loth to doubt, as Quintus Serenus did in a like case:

*Sive homo, seu similis turpissima bestia nobis
Vulnere dente dedit.*

The indignation, perhaps, for being represented a blockhead, may be as strong in us, as it is in the ladies for a reflexion on their beauties. It is certain, I am indebted to him for some flagrant civilities; and I shall willingly devote a part of my life to the honest endeavour of quitting scores: with this exception however, that I will not return those civilities in his peculiar strain, but confine myself, at least, to the limits of common decency. I shall ever think it better to want wit, than to want humanity: and impartial posterity may, perhaps, be of my opinion.

But to return to my subject, which now calls upon me to enquire into those causes, to which the depravations of my author originally may be assigned. We are to consider him as a writer, of whom no authentick manuscript was left extant; as a writer, whose pieces were dispersedly performed on the several stages then in being. And it was the custom of those days for the poets to take a price of the players for the pieces they from time to time furnished; and thereupon it was supposed they had no farther right to print them without the consent of the players. As it was the interest of the companies to keep their plays unpublished, when any one succeeded, there was a contest betwixt the curiosity of the town, who demanded to see it in print, and the policy of the stagers, who wished to secrete it within their own walls. Hence, many pieces were taken down in short-hand, and imperfectly copied by ear from a representation: others were printed from piece-meal parts surreptitiously obtained from the theatres, uncorrect, and without the poet's knowledge. To some of these causes we owe the train of blemishes, that deform those pieces which stole singly into the world in our author's life-time.

There are still other reasons, which may be supposed to have affected the whole set. When the players took upon them to publish his works entire, every theatre was ransacked to supply the copy; and parts collected, which had gone through as many changes as performers, either from mutilations or additions made to them. Hence we derive many chasms and incoherences in the sense and matter. Scenes were frequently transposed, and shuffled out of their true place, to humour the caprice, or supposed convenience of some particular actor. Hence much confusion and impropriety has attended, and embarrassed the business and fable. To these obvious causes of corruption it must be added, that our author has lain under the disadvantage of having his errors now propagated and multiplied by time: because, for near a century, his works were published from the faulty copies, without the assistance of any intelligent editor: which has been the case likewise of many a classick writer.

MR. THEOBALD'S PREFACE. 139

The nature of any distemper once found has generally been the immediate step to a cure. Shakespeare's case has in a great measure resembled that of a corrupt classick; and, consequently, the method of cure was likewise to bear a resemblance. By what means, and with what success, this cure has been effected on ancient writers, is too well known, and needs no formal illustration. The reputation, consequent on tasks of that nature, invited me to attempt the method here; with this view, the hopes of restoring to the publick their greatest poet in his original purity: after having so long lain in a condition that was a disgrace to common sense. To this end I have ventured on a labour, that is the first assay of the kind on any modern author whatsoever. For the late edition of Milton by the learned Dr. Bentley is, in the main, a performance of another species. It is plain, it was the intention of that great man rather to correct and pare off the excrescencies of the Paradise Lost, in the manner that Tucca and Varius were employed to criticise the Æneis of Virgil, than to restore corrupted passages. Hence, therefore, may be seen either the iniquity or ignorance of his censurers, who, from some expressions, would make us believe, the doctor every where gives us his corrections as the original text of the author; whereas the chief turn of his criticism is plainly to shew the world, that if Milton did not write as he would have him, he ought to have wrote so.

I thought proper to premise this observation to the readers, as it will shew that the critick on Shakespeare is of a quite different kind. His genuine text is for the most part religiously adhered to, and the numerous faults and blemishes, purely his own, are left as they were found. Nothing is altered, but what by the clearest reasoning can be proved a corruption of the true text; and the alteration, a real restoration of the genuine reading. Nay, so strictly have I strove to give the true reading, though sometimes not to the advantage of my author, that I have been ridiculously ridiculed for it by those, who either were iniquitously for turning every thing to my disadvantage; or else were totally ignorant of the true duty of an editor.

The science of criticism, as far as it affects an editor, seems to be reduced to these three classes; the emendation of corrupt passages; the explanation of obscure and difficult ones; and an enquiry into the beauties and defects of composition. This work is principally confined to the two former parts: though there are some specimens interspersed of the latter kind, as several of the emendations were best supported, and several of the difficulties best explained, by taking notice of the beauties and defects of the composition peculiar to this immortal poet. But this was but occasional, and for the sake only of perfecting the two other parts, which were the proper objects of the editor's labour. The third lies open for every willing undertaker: and I shall be pleased to see it the employment of a masterly pen.

It must necessarily happen, as I have formerly observed, that where the assistance of manuscripts is wanting to set an author's meaning right, and rescue him from those errors which have been transmitted down through a series of incorrect editions, and a long intervention of time, many passages must be desperate, and past a cure; and their true sense irretrievable either to care or the sagacity of conjecture. But is there any reason therefore to say, that because all cannot be retrieved, all ought to be left desperate? We should shew very little honesty, or wisdom, to play the tyrants with an author's text; to raze, alter, innovate, and overturn, at all adventures, and to the utter detriment of his sense and meaning: but to be so very reserved and cautious, as to interpose no relief or conjecture, where it manifestly labours and cries out for assistance, seems, on the other hand, an indolent absurdity.

As there are very few pages in Shakespeare, upon which some suspicions of depravity do not reasonably arise; I have thought it my duty in the first place, by a diligent and laborious collation, to take in the assistances of all the older copies.

In his historical plays, whenever our English chronicles, and in his tragedies, when Greek or Roman story could give any light, no pains have been omitted to set passages right, by comparing my author with his originals; for, as I have frequently observed, he was a close and accurate copier where-ever his fable was founded on history.

Where-ever the author's sense is clear and discoverable (though, perchance, low and trivial) I have not by any innovation tampered with his text, out of an ostentation of endea.

endeavouring to make him speak better than the old copies have done.

Where, through all the former editions, a passage has laboured under flat nonsense and invincible darkness, if, by the addition or alteration of a letter or two, or a transposition in the pointing, I have restored to him both sense and sentiment; such corrections, I am persuaded, will need no indulgence.

And whenever I have taken a greater latitude and liberty in amending, I have constantly endeavoured to support my corrections and conjectures by parallel passages and authorities from himself, the surest means of expounding any author whatsoever. Cette voie d'interpréter un auteur par lui-même est plus sûre que tous les commentaires, says a very learned French critick.

As to my notes (from which the common and learned readers of our author, I hope, will derive some satisfaction) I have endeavoured to give them a variety in some proportion to their number. Wherever I have ventured at an emendation, a note is constantly subjoined to justify and assert the reason of it. Where I only offer a conjecture, and do not disturb the text, I fairly set forth my grounds for such conjecture, and submit it to judgment. Some remarks are spent in explaining passages, where the wit or satire depends on an obscure point of history: others, where allusions are to divinity, philosophy, or other branches of science. Some are added to shew, where there is a suspicion of our author having borrowed from the ancients: others, to shew where he is rallying his contemporaries; or where he himself is rallied by them. And some are necessarily thrown in, to explain an obscure and obsolete term, phrase, or idea. I once intended to have added a complete and copious glossary; but as I have been importuned, and am prepared to give a correct edition of our author's POEMS, (in which many terms occur that are not to be met with in his plays) I thought a glossary to all Shakespeare's works more proper to attend that volume.

In reforming an infinite number of passages in the pointing, where the sense was before quite lost, I have frequently subjoined notes to shew the depraved, and to prove the reformed, pointing: a part of labour in this work which I could very willingly have spared myself. May it not be objected, why then have you burdened us with these notes? The answer is obvious, and, if I mistake not, very material.

terial. Without such notes, these passages in subsequent editions would be liable, through the ignorance of printers and correctors, to fall into the old confusion : whereas, a note on every one hinders all possible return to depravity ; and for ever secures them in a state of purity and integrity not to be lost or forfeited.

Again, as some notes have been necessary to point out the detection of the corrupted text, and establish the restoration of the genuine readings ; some others have been as necessary for the explanation of passages obscure and difficult. To understand the necessity and use of this part of my task, some particulars of my author's character are previously to be explained. There are obscurities in him, which are common to him with all poets of the same species ; there are others, the issue of the times he lived in ; and there are others, again, peculiar to himself. The nature of comick poetry being entirely satirical, it busies itself more in exposing what we call caprice and humour, than vices cognizable to the laws. The English, from the happiness of a free constitution, and a turn of mind peculiarly speculative and inquisitive, are observed to produce more humourists, and a greater variety of original characters, than any other people whatsoever : and these owing their immediate birth to the peculiar genius of each age, an infinite number of things alluded to, glanced at, and exposed, must needs become obscure, as the characters themselves are antiquated and disused. An editor therefore should be well versed in the history and manners of his author's age, if he aims at doing him a service in this respect.

Besides, wit lying mostly in the assemblage of ideas, and in putting those together with quickness and variety, wherein can be found any resemblance, or congruity, to make up pleasant pictures, and agreeable visions in the fancy ; the writer, who aims at wit, must of course range far and wide for materials. Now the age in which Shakspeare lived, having, above all others, a wonderful affection to appear learned, they declined vulgar images, such as are immediately fetched from nature, and ranged through the circle of the sciences to fetch their ideas from thence. But as the resemblances of such ideas to the subject must necessarily lie very much out of the common way, and every piece of wit appear a riddle to the vulgar ; this, that should have taught them the forced, quaint, unnatural tract they were in (and induce them to follow a more natural one) was the very thing that kept them attached to it. The ostentatious affectation of abstruse learning, peculiar to that time, the love that men naturally have to every thing that looks like mystery, fixed them down to the habit of obscurity. Thus became the poetry of DONNE (though the wittiest man of that age) nothing but a continued heap of riddles. And our Shakespeare, with all his easy nature about him, for want of the knowledge of the true rules of art, falls frequently into this vicious manner.

was

The third species of obscurities which deform our author, as the effects of his own genius and character, are those that proceed from his peculiar manner of thinking, and as peculiar a manner of clothing those thoughts. With regard to his thinking, it is certain, that he had a general knowledge of all the sciences: but his acquaintance was rather that of a traveller than a native. Nothing in philosophy was unknown to him; but every thing in it had the grace and force of novelty. And as novelty is one main source of admiration, we are not to wonder that he has perpetual allusions to the most recondite parts of the sciences: and this was done not so much out of affectation, as the effect of admiration begot by novelty. Then, as to his style and diction, we may much more justly apply to SHAKESPEARE, what a celebrated writer said of MILTON: Our language sunk under him, and was unequal to that greatness of soul which furnished him with such glorious conceptions. He therefore frequently uses old words, to give his diction an air of solemnity; as he coins others, to express the novelty and variety of his ideas.

Upon every distinct species of these obscurities, I have thought it my province to employ a note for the service of my author, and the entertainment of my readers. A few transient remarks too I have not scrupled to intermix, upon the poet's negligences and omissions in point of art; but I have done it, always in such a manner, as will testify my deference and veneration for the immortal author. Some censurers of Shakespeare, and particularly Mr. Rymer, have taught me to distinguish betwixt the railer and critick. The outrage of his quotations is so remarkably violent, so pushed beyond all bounds of decency and sober reasoning, that it quite carries over the mark at which it was levelled. Extravagant abuse throws off the edge of the intended disparagement, and turns the madman's weapon into his own bosom. In short, as to Rymer, this is my opinion of him, from his criticisms on the tragedies of the last age. He writes with great vivacity, and appears to have been a scholar: but as for his knowledge of the art of poetry, I cannot perceive it was any deeper than his acquaintance with Bossu and Dacier, from whom he has transcribed many of his best reflexions. The late Mr. Gildon was one attached to Rymer by a similar way of thinking and studies. They were both of that species of critics who are desirous of displaying their powers rather in finding faults, than in consulting the improvement of the world: the hyper-critical part of the science of criticism.
of

144 Mr. THEOBALD'S PREFACE.

I had not mentioned the modest liberty I have here and there taken of animadverting on my author, but that I was willing to obviate in time the spleenetic exaggerations of my adversaries on this head. From past experiments I have reason to be conscious, in what light this attempt may be placed: and that what I call a modest liberty, will, by a little of their dexterity, be inverted into downright impudence. From a hundred mean and dishonest artifices employed to discredit this edition, and to cry down its editor, I have all the grounds in nature to beware of attacks. But though the malice of wit, joined to the smoothness of versification, may furnish some ridicule; fact, I hope, will be able to stand its ground against banter and gaiety.

It has been my fate, it seems, as I thought it my duty, to discover some anachronisms in our author; which might have slept in obscurity but for this Restorer, as Mr. Pope is pleased affectionately to stile me; as for instance, where Aristotle is mentioned by Hector in Troilus and Cressida: and Galen, Cato; and Alexander the Great, in Coriolanus. These, in Mr. Pope's opinion, are blunders, which the illiteracy of the first publishers of his works has fathered upon the poet's memory: it not being at all credible, that these could be the errors of any man who had the least tincture of a school, or the least conversation with such as had. But I have sufficiently proved, in the course of my notes, that such anachronisms were the effect of poetick licence, rather than of ignorance in our poet. And if I may be permitted to ask a modest question by the way, why may not I restore an anachronism really made by our author, as well as Mr. Pope take the privilege to fix others upon him, which he never had it in his head to make: as I may venture to affirm he had not, in the instance of Sir Francis Drake, to which I have spoke in the proper place?

But

But who shall dare make any words about this freedom of Mr. Pope's towards Shakespeare, if it can be proved, that, in his fits of criticism, he makes no more ceremony with good Homer himself? To try, then, a criticism of his own advancing; in the 8th book of the Odyssey, where Demodocus sings the episode of the loves of Mars and Venus; and that, upon their being taken in the net by Vulcan,

*The god of arms
" Must pay the penalty for lawless charms ;"*

Mr. Pope is so kind gravely to inform us, " That Homer " in this, as in many other places, seems to allude to the " laws of Athens, where death was the punishment of " adultery." But how is this significant observation made out? Why, who can possibly object any thing to the contrary?—Does not Pausanias relate, that Draco, the lawgiver to the Athenians, granted impunity to any person that took revenge upon an adulterer? And was it not also the institution of Solon, that if any one took an adulterer in the fact, he might use him as he pleased? These things are very true: and to see what a good memory, and sound judgment in conjunction can achieve! Though Homer's date is not determined down to a single year, yet it is pretty generally agreed that he lived above 300 years before Draco and Solon: and that, it seems, has made him seem to allude to the very laws, which these two legislators propounded above 300 years after. If this inference be not something like an anachronism or prolepsis, I will look once more into my lexicons for the true meaning of the words. It appears to me, that somebody besides Mars and Venus has been caught in a net by this episode: and I could call in other instances to confirm what treacherous tackle this net-work is, if not cautiously handled.

How just, notwithstanding, I have been in detecting the anachronisms of my author, and in defending him for the use of them, our late editor seems to think, they should rather have slept in obscurity: and the having discovered them is sneered at, as a sort of wrong-headed sagacity.

The numerous corrections which I have made of the poet's text in my SHAKESPEARE Restored, and which the publick have been so kind to think well of, are, in the appendix of Mr. Pope's last edition, slightly called various reasonings, guesses, &c. He confesses to have inserted as many of them as he judged of any the least advantage to the poet; but says, that the whole amounted to about 25 words: and pretends to have annexed a complete list of the rest, which were not worth his embracing. Whoever has read my book will, at one glance, see how in both these points veracity is strained, so an injury might but be done. Mulus, etsi obesse non potest, tamen cogitat.

146 Mr. THEOBALD's PREFACE.

Another expedient, to make my work appear of a trifling nature, has been an attempt to depreciate literal criticism. To this end, and to pay a servile compliment to Mr. Pope, an anonymous writer has, like a Scotch pedlar in wit, unbraced his pack on the subject. But, that his virulence might not seem to be levelled singly at me, he has done me the honour to join Dr. Bentley in the libel. I was in hopes we should have been both abused with smartness of satire at least, though not with solidity of argument: that it might have been worth some reply in defence of the science attacked. But I may fairly say of this author, as Falstaff does of Poins; — Hang him, baboon! his wit is as thick as Tewksbury mustard; there is no more conceit in him, than is in a Mallet. If it be not prophanation to set the opinion of the divine Longinus against such a scribler, he tells us expressly, “That to make “a judgment upon words (and writings) is the most consummate fruit of much experience. ἡ γὰρ τῶν λόγων κρίσις πολλῆς ἐστὶ πείρας τελευταίον ἐπιγένημα. Whenever words are depraved, the sense of course must be corrupted; and thence the reader is betrayed into a false meaning.”

If the Latin and Greek languages have received the greatest advantages imaginable from the labours of the editors and critics of the two last ages, by whose aid and assistance the grammarians have been enabled to write infinitely better in that art than even the preceding grammarians, who wrote when those tongues flourished as living languages; I should account it a peculiar happiness, that, by the faint essay I have made in this work, a path might be chalked out for abler hands, by which to derive the same advantages to our own tongue: a tongue, which, though it wants none of the fundamental qualities of an universal language, yet, as a noble writer says, lisps and stammers as in its cradle; and has produced little more towards its polishing than complaints of its barbarity.

Having now run through all those points, which I intended should make any part of this dissertation, and having in my former edition made publick acknowledgments of the assistances.

Mr. THEOBALD's PREFACE. 147.

assurances lent me, I shall conclude with a brief account of the methods taken in this.

It was thought proper, in order to reduce the bulk and price of the impression, that the notes, wherever they would admit of it, might be abridged: for which reason I have curtailed a great quantity of such, in which explanations were too prolix, or authorities in support of an emendation too numerous: and many I have entirely expunged, which were judged rather verbose and declamatory (and so notes merely of ostentation) than necessary or instructive.

The few literal errors which had escaped notice, for want of revisals, in the former edition, are here reformed; and the pointing of innumerable passages is regulated, with all the accuracy I am capable of.

I shall decline making any farther declaration of the pains I have taken upon my author, because it was my duty, as his editor, to publish him with my best care and judgment; and because I am sensible, all such declarations are construed to be laying a sort of a debt on the publick. As the former edition has been received with much indulgence, I ought to make my acknowledgments to the town for their favourable opinion of it; and I shall always be proud to think that encouragement the best payment I can hope to receive from my poor studies.

Sir T. H A N M E R's
P R E F A C E,

WHAT the publick is here to expect is a true and correct edition of Shakespear's works, cleared from the corruptions with which they have hitherto abounded. One of the great admirers of this incomparable author hath made it the amusement of his leisure hours for many years past to look over his writings with a careful eye, to note the obscurities and absurdities introduced into the text, and according to the best of his judgment to restore the genuine sense and purity of it. In this he proposed nothing to himself, but his private satisfaction in making his own copy as perfect as he could; but as the emendations multiplied upon his hands, other gentlemen, equally fond of the author, desired to see them, and some were so kind as to give their assistance, by communicating their observations and conjectures upon difficult passages which had occurred to them. Thus by degrees the work growing more considerable than was at first expected, they who had the opportunity of looking into it, too partial perhaps in their judgment, thought it worth being made publick; and he, who hath with difficulty yielded to their persuasions, is far from desiring to reflect upon the late editors for the omissions and defects which they left to be supplied by others who should follow them in the same province. On the contrary, he thinks the world much obliged to them for the progress they made in weeding out so great a number of blunders and mistakes as they have done, and probably he who hath carried on the work might never have thought of such an undertaking, if he had not found a considerable part so done to his hands.

From what causes it proceeded that the works of this author, in the first publication of them, were more injured and abused than perhaps any that ever passed the press, hath been sufficiently explained in the preface to Mr. Pope's edition, tion, which is here subjoined, and there needs no more to be said upon that subject. This only the reader is desired to bear in mind, that as the corruptions are more numerous, and of a grosser kind than can well be conceived, but by those who have looked nearly into them; so in the correcting them this rule hath been most strictly observed, not to give a loose to fancy, or indulge a licentious spirit of criticism, as if it were fit for any one to presume to judge what Shakespeare ought to have written, instead of endeavouring to discover truly and retrieve what he did write: and so great caution hath been used in this respect, that no alterations have been made, but what the sense necessarily required, what the measure of the verse often helped to point out, and what the similitude of words in the false reading and in the true, generally speaking, appeared very well to justify.

Most of those passages are here thrown to the bottom of the page, and rejected as spurious, which were stigmatized as such in Mr. Pope's edition; and it were to be wished that more had then undergone the same sentence. The promoter of the present edition hath ventured to discard but few more upon his own judgment, the most considerable of which is that wretched piece of ribaldry in King Henry the Fifth, put into the mouths of the French princess and an old gentlewoman, improper enough as it is all in French, and not intelligible to an English audience, and yet that perhaps is the best thing that can be said of it. There can be no doubt but a great deal more of that low stuff, which disgraces the works of this great author, was foisted in by the players after his death, to please the vulgar audience; by which they subsisted: and though some of the poor witticisms and conceits must be supposed to have fallen from his pen, yet as he hath put them generally into the mouths of low and ignorant people, so it is to be remembered that he wrote for the stage, rude and unpolished as it then was; and the vicious taste of the age must stand condemned for them, since he hath left upon record a signal proof how much he despised them. In his play of The Merchant of Venice, a clown is introduced quibbling in a miserable manner; upon which one, who bears the character of a man of sense, makes the following reflexion: How every fool can play upon a word! I think the best grace of wit will shortly turn into silence, and discourse grow commendable in none but parrots. He could hardly have found stronger words to express his indignation at those false pretences to wit then in vogue; and therefore though such trash is frequently interspersed in his writings, it would be unjust to cast it as an imputation upon his taste and judgment and character as a writer.

There being many words in Shakespeare which are grown out of use and obsolete, and many borrowed from other languages which are not enough naturalized or known among us, a glossary is added at the end of the work, for the explanation of all those terms which have hitherto been so many stumbling-blocks to the generality of readers; and where there is any obscurity in the text, not arising from the words, but from a reference to some antiquated customs now forgotten, or other causes of that kind, a note is put at the bottom of the page to clear up the difficulty.

With these several helps, if that rich vein of sense which runs through the works of this author can be retrieved in every part, and brought to appear in its true light, and if it may be hoped, without presumption, that this is here effected; they who love and admire him will receive a new pleasure, and all probably will be more ready to join in doing him justice, who does great honour to his country as a rare and perhaps a singular genius: one who hath attained an high degree of perfection in those two great branches of poetry, tragedy and comedy, different as they are in their natures from each other; and who may be said without partiality to have equalled, if not excelled, in both kinds, the best writers of any age or country, who have thought it glory enough to distinguish themselves in either.

Since therefore other nations have taken care to dignify the works of their most celebrated poets with the fairest impressions beautified with the ornaments of sculpture, well may our Shakespeare be thought to deserve no less consideration: and as a fresh acknowledgment hath lately been paid to his merit, and a high regard to his name and memory, by erecting his statue at a publick expence; so it is desired that this new edition of his works, which hath cost some attention and care, may be looked upon as another small monument designed and dedicated to his honour.

Dr. W A R B U R T O N's

P R E F A C E.

IT hath been no unusual thing for writers, when dissatisfied with the patronage or judgment of their own times, to appeal to posterity for a fair hearing. Some have even thought fit to apply to it in the first instance; and to decline acquaintance with the publick, till envy and prejudice had quite subsided. But, of all the trusters to futurity, commend me to the author of the following poems, who not only left it to time to do him justice as it would, but to find him out as it could. For, what between too great attention to his profit as a player, and too little to his reputation as a poet, his works, left to the care of door-keepers and prompters, hardly escaped the common fate of those writings, how good soever, which are abandoned to their own fortune; and unprotected by party or cabal. At length, indeed, they struggled into light; but so disguised and travestied, that no clastick author, after having run ten secular stages through the blind cloisters of monks and canons, ever came out in half so maimed and mangled a condition. But for a full account of his disorders, I refer the reader to the excellent discourse which follows, and turn myself to consider the remedies that have been applied to them.

Shakespeare's works, when they escaped the players, did not fall into much better hands when they came amongst printers and booksellers; who, to say the truth, had at first but small encouragement for putting him into a better condition. The stubborn nonsense, with which he was incrust-ed, occasioned his lying long neglected amongst the common lumber of the stage. And when that resistless splendor, which now shoots all around him, had, by degrees, broke through the shell of those impurities, his dazzled admirers became as suddenly insensible to the extraneous scurf that still stuck upon him, as they had been before to the native beauties that lay under it. So that, as then he was thought not to deserve a cure, he was now supposed not to need any.

His growing eminence, however, required that he should be used with ceremony; and he soon had his appointment of an editor in form. But the bookseller, whose dealing was with wits, having learnt of them, I know not what silly maxim, that none but a poet should presume to meddle with a poet, engaged the ingenious Mr. Rowe to undertake this employment. A wit indeed he was; but so utterly unacquainted with the whole business of criticism, that he did not even collate or consult the first editions of the work he undertook to publish; but contented himself with giving us a meagre account of the author's life, interlarded with some commonplace scraps from his writings. The truth is, Shakespeare's condition was yet but ill understood. The nonsense, now, by consent, received for his own, was held in a kind of reverence for its age and author; and thus it continued, till another great poet broke the charm, by shewing us, that the higher we went, the less of it was still to be found.

For the proprietors, not discouraged by their first unsuccessful effort, in due time, made a second; and, though they still stuck to their poets, with infinitely more success in their choice of Mr. Pope, who, by the mere force of an uncommon genius, without any particular study or profession of this art, discharged the great parts of it so well, as to make his edition the best foundation for all further improvements. He separated the genuine from the spurious plays; and, with equal judgment, though not always with the same success, attempted to clear the genuine plays from the interpolated scenes: he then consulted the old editions; and, by a careful collation of them, rectified the faulty, and supplied the imperfect reading in a great number of places: and lastly, in an admirable preface, hath drawn a general, but very lively sketch of Shakespeare's poetick character: and, in the corrected text, marked out those peculiar strokes of genius which were most proper to support and illustrate that character. Thus far Mr. Pope. And although much more was to be done before Shakespeare could be retored to himself (such as amending the corrupted text where the printed books afford no assistance; explaining his licentious phraseology and obscure allusions; and illustrating the beauties of his poetry) yet, with great modesty and prudence, our illustrious editor left this to the critick by profession.

But

But nothing will give the common reader a better idea of the value of Mr. Pope's edition, than the two attempts which have been since made by Mr. Theobald and Sir Thomas Hanmer in opposition to it; who, although they concerned themselves only in the first of these three parts of criticism, the restoring the text (without any conception of the second, or venturing even to touch upon the third) yet succeeded so very ill in it, that they left their author in ten times a worse condition than they found him. But, as it was my ill fortune to have some accidental connexions with these two gentlemen, it will be incumbent on me to be a little more particular concerning them.

The one was recommended to me as a poor man; the other as a poor critick: and to each of them, at different times, I communicated a great number of observations, which they managed, as they saw fit, to the relief of their several distresses. As to Mr. Theobald, who wanted money, I allowed him to print what I gave him for his own advantage; and he allowed himself in the liberty of taking one part for his own, and sequestering another for the benefit, as I supposed, of some future edition. But, as to the Oxford editor, who wanted nothing, but what he might very well be without, the reputation of a critick, I could not so easily forgive him for trafficking with my papers without my knowledge; and, when that project failed, for employing a number of my conjectures in his edition against my express desire not to have that honour done unto me.

Mr. Theobald was naturally turned to industry and labour. What he read he could transcribe: but, as what he thought, if ever he did think, he could but ill express, so he read on; and by that means got a character of learning, without risking, to every observer, the imputation of wanting a better talent. By a punctilious collation of the old books, he corrected what was manifestly wrong in the latter editions, by what was manifestly right in the earlier. And this is his real merit; and the whole of it. For where the phrase was very obsolete or licentious in the common books, or only slightly corrupted in the other, he wanted sufficient knowledge of the progress and various stages of the English tongue, as well as acquaintance with the peculiarity of Shakespeare's language, to understand what was right; nor had he either common judgment to see, or critical sagacity to amend, what was manifestly faulty. Hence he generally exerts his conjectural talent in the wrong place: he tampers tampers with what is found in the common books; and, in the old ones, omits all notice of variations, the sense of which he did not understand.

How the Oxford editor came to think himself qualified for this office, from which his whole course of life had been so remote, is still more difficult to conceive. For whatever parts he might have either of genius or erudition, he was absolutely ignorant of the art of criticism, as well as of the poetry of that time, and the language of his author. And so far from a thought of examining the first editions, that he even neglected to compare Mr. Pope's, from which he printed his own, with Mr. Theobald's; whereby he lost the advantage of many fine lines, which the other had recovered from the old quartos. Where he trusts to his own sagacity, in what affects the sense, his conjectures are generally absurd and extravagant, and violating every rule of criticism. Though, in this rage of correcting, he was not absolutely destitute of all art. For, having a number of my conjectures before him, he took as many of them as he saw fit, to work upon; and by changing them to something, he thought, synonymous or similar, he made them his own; and so became a critick at a cheap expence. But how well he hath succeeded in this, as likewise in his conjectures, which are properly his own, will be seen in the course of my remarks: though, as he hath declined to give the reasons for his interpolations, he hath not afforded me so fair a hold of him as Mr. Theobald hath done, who was less cautious. But his principal object was to reform his author's numbers; and this, which he hath done, on every occasion, by the insertion or omission of a set of harmless unconcerning expletives, makes up the gross body of his innocent corrections. And so, in spite of that extreme negligence in numbers, which distinguishes the first dramattick writers, he hath tricked up the old bard, from head to foot, in all the finical exactness of a modern measurer of syllables.

For the rest, all the corrections, which these two editors have made on any reasonable foundation, are here admitted into the text; and carefully assigned to their respective authors. A piece of justice which the Oxford editor never did; and which the other was not always scrupulous in observing towards me. To conclude with them in a word, they separately possessed those two qualities which, more than any other, have contributed to bring the art of criticism ism into difrepute, dulness of apprehension, and extravagance of conjecture.

I am now to give some account of the present undertaking. For as to all those things which have been published under the titles of Essays, Remarks, Observations, &c. on Shakespeare (if you except some critical notes on Macbeth, given as a specimen of a projected edition, and written, as appears, by a man of parts and genius) the rest are absolutely below a serious notice.

The whole a critick can do for an author, who deserves his service, is to correct the faulty text; to remark the peculiarities of language; to illustrate the obscure allusions; and to explain the beauties and defects of sentiment or composition. And surely, if ever author had a claim to this service, it was our Shakespeare; who, widely excelling in the knowledge of human nature, hath given to his infinitely varied pictures of it, such truth of design, such force of drawing, such beauty of colouring, as was hardly ever equalled by any writer, whether his aim was the use, or only the entertainment of mankind. The notes in this edition, therefore, take in the whole compass of criticism.

I. The first sort is employed in restoring the poet's genuine text; but in those places only where it labours with inextricable nonsense. In which, how much soever I may have given scope to critical conjecture, where the old copies failed me, I have indulged nothing to fancy or imagination; but have religiously observed the severe canons of literal criticism, as may be seen from the reasons accompanying every alteration of the common text. Nor would a different conduct have become a critick, whose greatest attention, in this part, was to vindicate the established reading from interpolations occasioned by the fanciful extravagancies of others. I once intended to have given the reader a body of canons, for literal criticism, drawn out in form; as well such as concern the art in general, as those that arise from the nature and circumstances of our author's works in particular. And this for two reasons. First, to give the unlearned reader a just idea, and consequently a better opinion of the art of criticism, now sunk very low in the popular esteem, by the attempts of some who would needs exercise it without either natural or acquired talents; and by the ill success of others, who seemed to have lost both, when they came to try them upon English authors. Secondly, To deter the unlearned writer from wantonly trifling with an art he is a stranger to, at the expence of his own reputation, and the integrity of the text of established authors. But these uses may be well supplied by what is occasionally said upon the subject, in the course of the following remarks.

II. The second sort of notes consists in an explanation of the author's meaning, when, by one or more of these causes, it becomes obscure; either from a licentious use of terms, or a hard or ungrammatical construction; or lastly, from far-fetched or quaint allusions.

I. This licentious use of words is almost peculiar to the language of Shakspeare. To common terms he hath affixed meanings of his own, unauthorized by use, and not to be justified by analogy. And this liberty he hath taken with the noblest parts of speech, such as mixed modes; which, as they are most susceptible of abuse, so their abuse most hurts the clearness of the discourse. The critics (to whom Shakspeare's licence was still as much a secret as his meaning, which that licence had obscured) fell into two contrary mistakes; but equally injurious to his reputation and his writings. For some of them, observing a darkness that pervaded his whole expression, have censured him for confusion of ideas and inaccuracy of reasoning. In the neighing of a horse (says Rymer) or in the growling of a mastiff, there is a meaning, there is a lively expression, and, may I say, more humanity than many times in the tragical flights of Shakspeare. The ignorance of which censure is of a piece with its brutality. The truth is, no one thought clearer, or argued more closely than this immortal bard. But his superiority of genius lets needing the intervention of words in the act of thinking, when he came to draw out his contemplations into discourse, he took up (as he was hurried on by the torrent of his matter) with the first words that lay in his way; and if, amongst these, there were two mixed modes that had but a principal idea in common, it was enough for him; he regarded them as synonymous, and would use the one for the other without fear or scruple.—Again, there have been others, such as the two last editors, who have fallen into a contrary extreme; and regarded Shakspeare's anomalies (as we may call them) amongst the corruptions of his text; which, therefore, they have cashiered in great numbers, to make room for a jargon of their own. This hath put me to additional trouble; for I had not only their interpolations to throw out again, but the genuine text to replace, and establish in its stead; which, in many cases, could not be done without shewing shewing the peculiar sense of the terms, and explaining the causes which led the poet to so perverse an use of them. I had it once, indeed, in my design, to give a general alphabetick glossary of those terms; but as each of them is explained in its proper place, there seemed the less occasion for such an index.

2. The poet's hard and unnatural construction had a different original. This was the effect of mistaken art and design. The publick taste was in its infancy; and delighted (as it always does during that state) in the high and turgid; which leads the writer to disguise a vulgar expression with hard and forced construction, whereby the sentence frequently becomes cloudy and dark. Here his criticks shew their modesty, and leave him to himself. For the arbitrary change of a word doth little towards dispelling an obscurity that ariseth, not from the licentious use of a single term, but from the unnatural arrangement of a whole sentence. And they risqued nothing by their silence. For Shakespeare was too clear in fame to be suspected of a want of meaning; and too high in fashion for any one to own he needed a critick to find it out. Not but, in his best works, we must allow, he is often so natural and flowing, so pure and correct, that he is even a model for stile and language.

3. As to his far-fetched and quaint allusions, these are often a cover to common thoughts; just as his hard construction is to common expression. When they are not so, the explanation of them has this further advantage, that, in clearing the obscurity, you frequently discover some latent conceit not unworthy of his genius.

III. The third and last sort of notes is concerned in a critical explanation of the author's beauties and defects; but chiefly of his beauties, whether in stile, thought, sentiment, character, or composition. An odd humour of finding fault hath long prevailed amongst the criticks; as if nothing were worth remarking, that did not, at the same time, deserve to be reprov'd. Whereas the publick judgment hath less need to be assisted in what it shall reject, than in what it ought to prize; men being generally more ready at spying faults than in discovering beauties. Nor is the value they set upon a work, a certain proof that they understand it. For it is ever seen, that half a dozen voices of credit give the lead: and if the public chance to be in good humour, or the author much in their favour, the people are sure to follow. Hence it is that the true critick hath so frequently attached himself himself to works of established reputation; not to teach the world to admire, which, in those circumstances, to say the truth, they are apt enough to do of themselves; but to teach them how, with reason to admire: no easy matter, I will assure you, on the subject in question: for though it be very true, as Mr. Pope hath observed, that Shakespeare is the fairest and fullest subject for criticism, yet it is not such a sort of criticism as may be raised mechanically on the rules which Dacier, Rapin, and Bosiu have collected from antiquity; and of which, such kind of writers as Rymer, Gildon, Dennis, and Oldmixon, have only gathered and chewed the husks: nor on the other hand is it to be formed on the plan of those crude and superficial judgments, on books and things, with which a certain celebrated paper so much abounds; too good indeed to be named with the writers last mentioned, but being unluckily mistaken for a model, because it was an original, it hath given rise to a deluge of the worst sort of critical jargon; I mean that which looks most like sense. But the kind of criticism here required, is such as judgeth our author by those only laws and principles on which he wrote, NATURE, and COMMON-SENSE.

Our observations, therefore, being thus extensive, will, I presume, enable the reader to form a right judgment of this favourite poet, without drawing out his character, as was once intended, in a continued discourse.

These, such, as they are, were among my younger amusements, when many years ago, I used to turn over these sort of writers to unbend myself from more serious applications: and what, certainly, the publick, at this time of day, had never been troubled with, but for the conduct of the two last editors, and the persuasions of dear Mr. Pope; whose memory and name,

- semper acerbum,
Semper honoratum (sic Dī voluisti) habebo.

He was desirous I should give a new edition of this poet, as he thought it might contribute to put a stop to a prevailing folly of altering the text of celebrated authors without talents or judgment. And he was willing that his edition should be melted down into mine, as it would, he said, afford him (so great is the modesty of an ingenuous temper) a fit opportunity of confessing his mistakes*. In memory of our friendship, I have, therefore, made it our joint edition. His admirable preface is here added; all his notes are given, with his name annexed; the scenes are divided according to his regulation; and the most beautiful passages distinguished, as in his book, with inverted commas. In imitation of him, I have done the same by as many others as I thought most deserving of the reader's attention, and have marked them with double commas.

* See his Letters to me.

If, from all this, Shakespeare or good letters have received any advantage, and the publick any benefit, or entertainment, the thanks are due to the proprietors, who have been at the expence of procuring this edition. And I should be unjust to several deserving men of a reputable and useful profession, if I did not, on this occasion, acknowledge the fair dealing I have always found amongst them; and profess my sense of the unjust prejudice which lies against them; whereby they have been, hitherto, unable to procure that security for their property, which they see the rest of their fellow-citizens enjoy. A prejudice in part arising from the frequent piracies (as they are called) committed by members of their own body. But such kind of members no body is without. And it would be hard that this should be turned to the discredit of the honest part of the profession, who suffer more from such injuries than any other men. It hath, in part too, arisen from the clamours of profligate scribblers, ever ready, for a piece of money, to prostitute their bad sense for or against any cause prophane or sacred; or in any scandal publick or private: these meeting with little encouragement from men of account in the trade (who, even in this enlightened age, are not the very worst judges or rewarders of merit) apply themselves to people of condition; and support their importunities by false complaints against booksellers.

But I should now, perhaps, rather think of my own apology, than busy myself in the defence of others. I shall have some Tartuffe ready, on the first appearance of this edition, to call out again, and tell me, that I suffer myself to be wholly diverted from my purpose by these matters less suitable to my clerical profession. "Well, but (says a friend) why not take so candid an intimation in good part? Withdraw yourself again, as you are bid, into the clerical pale: examine the records of sacred and prophane antiquity; and, on them, erect a work to the confusion of infidelity." Why, I have done all this, and more: and hear
now

now what the same men have said to it. They tell me, I have wrote to the wrong and injury of religion, and furnished out more handles for unbelievers. "Oh! now the secret is out; "and you may have your pardon, I find, upon easier terms. "It is only to write no more."—Good gentlemen! and shall I not oblige them? They would gladly obstruct my way to those things which every man, who endeavours well in his profession, must needs think he has some claim to, when he sees them given to those who never did endeavour; at the same time that they would deter me from taking those advantages which letters enable me to procure for myself. If then I am to write no more (though as much out of my profession as they may please to represent this work, I suspect their modesty would not insist on a scrutiny of our several applications of this prophane profit and their purer gains) if, I say, I am to write no more, let me at least give the publick, who have a better pretence to demand it of me, some reason for my presenting them with these amusements; which, if I am not much mistaken, may be excused by the best and fairest examples; and, what is more, may be justified on the surer reason of things.

The great Saint CHRYSOSTOM, a name consecrated to immortality by his virtue and eloquence, is known to have been so fond of Aristophanes, as to wake with him at his studies, and to sleep with him under his pillow: and I never heard that this was objected either to his piety or his preaching, not even in those times of pure zeal and primitive religion. Yet, in respect of Shakespeare's great sense, Aristophanes's best wit is but buffoonery, and, in comparison of Aristophanes's freedoms, Shakespeare writes with the purity of a vestal. But they will say, St. Chrysostom contracted a fondness for the comick poet for the sake of his Greek. To this, indeed, I have nothing to reply. Far be it from me to insinuate so unscholarlike a thing, as if we had the same use for good English, that a Greek had for his Attick elegance. Critick Kuster, in a taste and language peculiar to grammarians of a certain order, hath decreed, that the history and chronology of Greek words is the most SOLID entertainment of a man of letters.

I fly then to a higher example, much nearer home, and still more in point, the famous university of OXFORD. This illustrious body, which hath long so justly held, and with such equity dispensed, the chief honours of the learned world, thought good letters so much interested in correct editions editions of the best English writers, that they, very lately, in their publick capacity, undertook one of this very author by subscription. And if the editor hath not discharged his task with suitable abilities for one so much honoured by them, this was not their fault, but his, who thrust himself into the employment. After such an example, it would be weakening any defence to seek further for authorities. All that can be now decently urged, is the reason of the thing; and this I shall do, more for the sake of that truly venerable body than my own.

Of all the literary exertitions of speculative men, whether designed for the use or entertainment of the world, there are none of so much importance, or what are more our immediate concern, than those which let us into the knowledge of our nature. Others may exercise the reason, or amuse the imagination; but these only can improve the heart, and form the human mind to wisdom. Now, in this science, our Shakespeare is confessed to occupy the foremost place; whether we consider the amazing sagacity with which he investigates every hidden spring and wheel of human action; or his happy manner of communicating this knowledge, in the just and living paintings which he has given us of all our passions, appetites, and pursuits. These afford a lesson which can never be too often repeated, or too constantly inculcated; and, to engage the reader's due attention to it, hath been one of the principal objects of this edition.

As this science (whatever profound philosophers may think) is, to the rest, in things; so, in words, (whatever supercilious pedants may talk) every one's mother tongue is to all other languages. This hath still been the sentiment of nature and true wisdom. Hence, the greatest men of antiquity never thought themselves better employed, than in cultivating their own country idiom. So Lycurgus did honour to Sparta, in giving the first complete edition of Homer; and Cicero to Rome, in correcting the works of Lucretius. Nor do we want examples of the same good sense in modern times, even amidst the cruel inroads that art and fashion have made upon nature and the simplicity of wisdom. Ménage, the greatest name in France for all kinds of philologick learning, prided himself in writing critical notes on their best lyrick poet Malherbe: and our greater Selden, when he thought it might reflect credit on his country, did not disdain even to comment a very ordinary poet, one Michael Drayton. But the English tongue, at this juncture, deserves and demands our particular regard. It hath, by means of the many excellent works of different kinds compos'd in it, engag'd the notice, and become the study, of almost every curious and learned foreigner, so as to be thought even a part of literary accomplishment. This must needs make it deserving of a critical attention: and its being yet destitute of a test or standard to apply to, in cases of doubt or difficulty, shews how much it wants that attention. For we have neither GRAMMAR nor DICTIONARY, neither chart nor compass, to guide us through this wide sea of words. And indeed how should we? since both are to be compos'd and finish'd on the authority of our best establish'd writers. But their authority can be of little use, till the text hath been correctly settled, and the phraseology critically examined. As then, by these aids, a Grammar and Dictionary, planned upon the best rules of logick and philosophy (and none but such will deserve the name) are to be procur'd; the forwarding of this will be a general concern: for, as Quintilian observes, "Verborum proprietas ac differentia omnibus, qui sermonem curæ habent, debet esse communis." By this way, the Italians have brought their tongue to a degree of purity and stability, which no living language ever attained unto before. It is with pleasure I observe, that these things now begin to be understood among ourselves; and that I can acquaint the publick, we may soon expect very elegant editions of Fletcher and Milton's Paradise Lost from gentlemen of distinguished abilities and learning. But this interval of good sense, as it may be short, is indeed but new. For I remember to have heard of a very learned man, who, not long since, form'd a design, of giving a more correct edition of Spenser; and, without doubt, would have perform'd it well; but he was dissuaded from his purpose by his friends, as beneath the dignity of a professor of the occult sciences. Yet these very friends, I suppose, would have thought it had added lustre to his high station, to have new-ferbished out some dull northern chronicle, or dark Sibylline enigma. But let it not be thought that what is here said insinuates any thing to the discredit of Greek and Latin criticism. If the follies of particular men were sufficient to bring any branch of learning into disrepute, I do not know any that would stand in a worse situation than that for which I now apologize. For I hardly think there ever appeared, in any learned language, so execrable crable a heap of nonsense, under the name of commentaries, as hath been lately given us on a certain satirick poet, of the last age, by his editor and coadjutor.

I am sensible how unjustly the very best classical criticks have been treated. It is said, that our great philosopher spoke with much contempt of the two finest scholars of this age, Dr. Bentley and Bishop Hare, for squabbling, as he expressed it, about an old play-book; meaning, I suppose, Terence's comedies. But this story is unworthy of him; though well enough suiting the fanatick turn of the wild writer that relates it; such censures are amongst the follies of men immoderately given over to one science, and ignorantly undervaluing all the rest. Those learned criticks might, and perhaps did, laugh in their turn (though still, sure, with the same indecency and indiscretion) at that incomparable man, for wearing out a long life in poring through a telescope. Indeed, the weakneses of such are to be mentioned with reverence. But who can bear, without indignation, the fashionable cant of every trifling writer, whose insipidity passes, with himself, for politeness, for pretending to be shocked, forsooth, with the rude and savage air of vulgar criticks; meaning such as Muretus, Scaliger, Casaubon, Salmasius, Spanheim, Bentley. When, had it not been for the deathless labours of such as these, the western world, at the revival of letters, had soon fallen back again into a state of ignorance and barbarity, as deplorable as that from which Providence had just redeemed it.

To conclude with an observation of a fine writer and great philosopher of our own; which I would gladly bind, though with all honour, as a phylactery, on the brow of every awful grammarian, to teach him at once the use and limits of his art: WORDS ARE THE MONEY OF FOOLS, AND THE COUNTERS OF WISE MEN.

A D V E R T I S E M E N T

T O T H E

R E A D E R.

[Prefixed to Mr. STEEVENS's Edition of Twenty of the old Quarto Copies of SHAKESPEARE, &c. in 4 Vols. 8vo. 1766.]

THE plays of SHAKESPEARE have been so often republished, with every seeming advantage which the joint labours of men of the first abilities could procure for them, that one would hardly imagine they could stand in need of any thing beyond the illustration of some few dark passages. Modes of expression must remain in obscurity, or be retrieved from time to time, as chance may throw the books of that age into the hands of critics who shall make a proper use of them. Many have been of opinion that his language will continue difficult to all those who are unacquainted with the provincial expressions which they suppose him to have used; but, for my own part, I cannot believe but that those which are now local may once have been universal, and must have been the language of those persons before whom his plays were represented. However, it is certain that the instances of obscurity from this source are very few.

Some have been of opinion that even a particular syntax prevailed in the time of Shakespeare; but, as I do not recollect that any proofs were ever brought in support of that sentiment, I own I am of the contrary opinion.

In his time indeed a different arrangement of syllables had been introduced in imitation of the Latin, as we find in Ascham; tham; and the verb was very frequently kept back in the sentence; but in Shakespeare no marks of it are discernible: and though the rules of syntax were more strictly observed by the writers of that age than they have been since, he of all the number is perhaps the most ungrammatical. To make his meaning intelligible to his audience seems to have been his only care, and with the ease of conversation he has adopted its incorrectness.

The past editors, eminently qualified as they were by genius and learning for this undertaking, wanted industry; to cover which they published catalogues, transcribed at random, of a greater number of old copies than ever they can be supposed to have had in their possession; when, at the same time, they never examined the few which we know they had, with any degree of accuracy. The last editor alone has dealt fairly with the world in this particular; he professes to have made use of no more than he had really seen, and has annexed a list of such to every play, together with a complete one of those supposed to be in being, at the conclusion of his work, whether he had been able to procure them for the service of it or not.

For these reasons I thought it would not be unacceptable to the lovers of Shakespeare to collate all the quartos I could find, comparing one copy with the rest, where there were more than one of the same play; and to multiply the chances of their being preserved, by collecting them into volumes, instead of leaving the few that have escaped, to share the fate of the rest, which was probably hastened by their remaining in the form of pamphlets, their use and value being equally unknown to those into whose hands they fell.

Of some I have printed more than one copy; as there are many persons, who, not contented with the possession of a finished picture of some great master, are desirous to procure the first sketch that was made for it, that they may have the pleasure of tracing the progress of the artist from the first light colouring to the finishing stroke. To such the earlier editions of King John, Henry the Fifth, Henry the Sixth, The Merry Wives of Windsor, and Romeo and Juliet, will, I apprehend, not be unwelcome; since in these we may discern as much as will be found in the hasty outlines of the pencil, with a fair prospect of that perfection to which he brought every performance he took the pains to retouch.

The general character of the quarto editions may more advantageously be taken from the words of Mr. Pope, than from any recommendation of my own.

166 ADVERTISEMENT to the READER.

“ The folio edition (says he) in which all the plays we now receive as his were first collected, was published by two players, Heminges and Condell, in 1623, seven years after his decease. They declare that all the other editions were stolen and surreptitious*, and affirm theirs to be purged from the errors of the former. This is true as to the literal errors, and no other; for in all respects else it is far worse than the quartos.

“ First, because the additions of trifling and bombast passages are in this edition far more numerous. For whatever had been added since those quartos by the actors, or had stolen from their mouths into the written parts, were from thence conveyed into the printed text, and all stand charged upon the author. He himself complained of this usage in Hamlet, where he wishes those who play the clowns would speak no more than is set down for them (Act iii. Sc. iv.) But as a proof that he could not escape it, in the old editions of Romeo and Juliet, there is no hint of the mean conceits and ribaldries now to be found there. In others the scenes of the mobs, plebeians, and clowns, are vastly shorter than at present; and I have seen one in particular (which seems to have belonged to the play-house, by having the parts divided by lines, and the actors names in the margin) where several of those very passages were added in a written hand, which since are to be found in the folio.

“ In the next place, a number of beautiful passages were omitted, which were extant in the first single editions; as it seems without any other reason than their willingness to shorten some scenes.”

To this I must add, that I cannot help looking on the folio as having suffered other injuries from the licentious alteration of the players; as we frequently find in it an unusual word changed into one more popular; sometimes to the weakening of the sense, which rather seems to have been their work, who knew that plainness was necessary for the

* It may be proper on this occasion to observe, that the actors printed several of the plays in their folio edition from the very quarto copies which they are here striving to depreciate; and additional depravation is the utmost that these copies gained by passing through their hands.

audience

ADVERTISEMENT to the READER. 167

audience of an illiterate age, than that it was done by the consent of the author: for he would hardly have unnerved a line in his written copy, which they pretend to have transcribed, however he might have permitted many to have been familiarized in the representation. Were I to indulge my own private conjecture, I should suppose that his blotted manuscripts were read over by one to another among those who were appointed to transcribe them; and hence it would easily happen, that words of similar sound, though of senses directly opposite, might be confounded with each other. They themselves declare that Shakespear's time of blotting was past, and yet half the errors we find in their edition could not be merely typographical. Many of the quartos (as our own printers assure me) were far from being unskilfully executed, and some of them were much more correctly printed than the folio, which was published at the charge of the same proprietors, whose names we find prefixed to the older copies; and I cannot join with Mr. Pope in acquitting that edition of more literal errors than those which went before it. The particles in it seem to be as fortuitously disposed, and proper names as frequently undistinguished by Italick or capital letters from the rest of the text. The punctuation is equally accidental; nor do I see on the whole any greater marks of a skilful revival, or the advantage of being printed from unblotted originals in the one, than in the other. One reformation indeed there seems to have been made, and that very laudable; I mean the substitution of more general terms for a name too often unnecessarily invoked on the stage; but no jot of obscenity is omitted: and their caution against prophaneness is, in my opinion, the only thing for which we are indebted to the judgment of the editors of the folio.

How much may be done by the assistance of the old copies will now be easily known; but a more difficult task remains behind, which calls for other abilities than are requisite in the laborious collator.

From a diligent perusal of the comedies of contemporary authors, I am persuaded that the meaning of many expressions in Shakespear might be retrieved; for the language of conversation can only be expected to be preserved in works, which in their time assumed the merit of being pictures of men and manners. The stile of conversation we may suppose to be as much altered as that of books; and in consequence of the change, we have no other authorities to recur to in either case. Should our language ever be recalled to a strict examination, and the fashion become general of striving to maintain our old acquisitions, instead of gaining new ones, which we shall be at last obliged to give up, or be incumbered with their weight; it will then be lamented that no regular collection was ever formed of the old English books; from which, as from ancient repositories, we might recover words and phrases as often as caprice or wantonness should call for variety; instead of thinking it necessary to adopt new ones, or barter solid strength for feeble splendour, which no language has long admitted, and retained its purity.

168 ADVERTISEMENT to the READER,

We wonder that, before the time of Shakespeare, we find the stage in a state so barren of productions, but forget that we have hardly any acquaintance with the authors of that period, though some few of their dramatick pieces may remain. The same might be almost said of the interval between that age and the age of Dryden, the performances of which, not being preserved in sets, or diffused as now, by the greater number printed, must lapse apace into the same obscurity.

Vixere fortes ante Agamemnona Multi——

And yet we are contented, from a few specimens only, to form our opinions of the genius of ages gone before us. Even while we are blaming the taste of that audience which received with applause the worst plays in the reign of Charles the Second, we should consider that the few in possession of our theatre, which would never have been heard a second time had they been written now, were probably the best of hundreds which had been dismissed with general censure. The collection of plays, interludes, &c. made by Mr. Garrick, with an intent to deposit them hereafter in some publick library, will be considered as a valuable acquisition; for pamphlets have never yet been examined with a proper regard to posterity. Most of the obsolete pieces will be found on enquiry to have been introduced into libraries but some few years since; and yet those of the present age, which may one time or other prove as useful, are still entirely neglected. I should be remiss, I am sure, were I to forget my acknowledgments to the gentleman I have just mentioned, to whose benevolence I owe the use of several of the scarcest quartos, which

ADVERTISEMENT to the READER. 169

which I could not otherwise have obtained; though I advertised for them, with sufficient offers, as I thought, either to tempt the casual owner to sell, or the curious to communicate them; but Mr. Garrick's zeal would not permit him to withhold any thing that might ever so remotely tend to show the perfections of that author who could only have enabled him to display his own.

It is not merely to obtain justice to Shakespeare, that I have made this collection, and advise others to be made. The general interest of English literature, and the attention due to our own language and history, require that our ancient writings should be diligently reviewed. There is no age which has not produced some works that deserved to be remembered; and as words and phrases are only understood by comparing them in different places, the lower writers must be read for the explanation of the highest. No language can be ascertained and settled, but by deducing its words from their original sources, and tracing them through their successive varieties of signification; and this deduction can only be performed by consulting the earliest and intermediate authors.

Enough has been already done to encourage us to do more. Dr. Hickes, by reviving the study of the Saxon language, seems to have excited a stronger curiosity after old English writers, than ever had appeared before. Many volumes which were mouldering in dust have been collected; many authors which were forgotten have been revived; many laborious catalogues have been formed; and many judicious glossaries compiled: the literary transactions of the darker ages are now open to discovery; and the language in its intermediate gradations, from the Conquest to the Restoration, is better understood than in any former time.

To incite the continuance, and encourage the extension of this domestick curiosity, is one of the purposes of the present publication. In the plays it contains, the poet's first thoughts as well as words are preserved; the additions made in subsequent impressions distinguished in Italicks, and the performances themselves make their appearance with every typographical error, such as they were before they fell into the hands of the player-editors. The various readings, which can only be attributed to chance, are set down among the rest, as I did not choose arbitrarily to determine for others which were useless, or which were valuable. And many words words differing only by the spelling, or serving merely to shew the difficulties which they to whose lot it first fell to disentangle their perplexities must have encountered, are exhibited with the rest. I must acknowledge that some few readings have slipped in by mistake, which can pretend to serve no purpose of illustration, but were introduced by confining myself to note the minutest variations of the copies, which soon convinced me that the oldest were in general the most correct. Though no proof can be given that the poet superintended the publication of any one of these himself, yet we have little reason to suppose that he who wrote at the command of Elizabeth, and under the patronage of Southampton, was so very negligent of his fame, as to permit the most incompetent judges, such as the players were, to vary at their pleasure what he had set down for the first single editions; and we have better grounds for a suspicion that his works did materially suffer from their presumptuous corrections after his death.

170 ADVERTISEMENT to the READER:

It is very well known, that before the time of Shakespeare, the art of making title-pages was practised with as much, or perhaps more success than it has been since. Accordingly, to all his plays we find long and descriptive ones, which, when they were first published, were of great service to the venders of them. Pamphlets of every kind were hawked about the streets by a set of people resembling his own Autolycus, who proclaimed aloud the qualities of what they offered to sale, and might draw in many a purchaser by the mirth he was taught to expect from the humours of Corporal Nym, or the swaggering vaine of Auncient Pistoll, who was not to be tempted by the representation of a fact merely historical. The players, however, laid aside the whole of this garniture, not finding it so necessary to procure success to a bulky volume, when the author's reputation was established, as it had been to bespeak attention to a few straggling pamphlets while it was yet uncertain.

The sixteen plays, which are not in these volumes, remained unpublished till the folio in the year 1623, though the compiler of a work, called Theatrical Records, mentions different single editions of them all before that time. But as no one of the editors could ever meet with such, nor has any one else pretended to have seen them, I think myself at liberty to suppose the compiler supplied the defects of the list out of his own imagination; since he must have had singular

ADVERTISEMENT to the READER. 171

singular good fortune to have been possessed of two or three different copies of all, when neither editors nor collectors, in the course of near fifty years, have been able so much as to obtain the sight of one of the number*.

At the end of the last volume I have added a tragedy of King Leir, published before that of Shakespeare, which it is not improbable he might have seen, as the father kneeling to the daughter, when she kneels to ask his blessing is found in it; a circumstance two poets were not very likely to have hit on separately; and which seems borrowed by the latter with his usual judgment, it being the most natural passage in the whole play; and is introduced in such a manner, as to make it fairly his own. The ingenious editor of The Reliques of Ancient English Poetry having never met with this play, and as it is not preserved in Mr. Garrick's collection, I thought it a curiosity worthy the notice of the publick.

I have likewise reprinted Shakespeare's Sonnets, from a copy published in 1609, by G. Eld, one of the printers of his plays; which, added to the consideration that they made their appearance with his name, and in his life-time, seems to be no slender proof of their authenticity. The same evidence might operate in favour of several more plays which are omitted here, out of respect to the judgment of those who had omitted them before †.

It is to be wished that some method of publication most favourable to the character of an author were once established; whether we are to send into the world all his

* It will be obvious to every one acquainted with the ancient English language, that in almost all the titles of plays in this catalogue of Mr. William Rufus Chetwood, the spelling is constantly overcharged with such a superfluity of letters as is not to be found in the writings of Shakespeare or his contemporaries. A more bungling attempt at a forgery was never obtruded on the public. See the British Theatre 1750, reprinted by Doddsley in 1756, under the title of "Theatrical Records, or an Account of English Dramatic Authors, and their Works," where all that is said concerning an advertisement at the end of Romeo and Juliet 1597 is equally false, no copy of that play having been ever published by Andrew Wise.

† Locrine, 1595. Sir John Oldcastle, 1600. London Prodigal, 1605. Pericles Prince of Tyre, 1609. Puritan, 1600. Thomas Lord Cromwell, 1613. Yorkshire Tragedy, 1608.

works

172 ADVERTISEMENT to the READER.

works without distinction, or arbitrarily to leave out what may be thought a disgrace to him. The first editors, who rejected Perciles, retained Titus Andronicus; and Mr. Pope, without any reason, named The Winter's Tale, a play that bears the strongest marks of the hand of Shakespeare, among those which he supposed to be spurious. Dr. Warburton has fixed a stigma on the three parts of Henry the Sixth, and some others :

Inde Dolabella est, atque hinc Antonius;

and all have been willing to plunder Shakespeare, or mix up a breed of barren metal with his purest ore.

Joshua Barnes, the editor of Euripides, thought every scrap of his author so sacred, that he has preserved with the name of one of his plays, the only remaining word of it. The same reason indeed might be given in his favour, which caused the preservation of that valuable trifyllable: which is, that it cannot be found in any other place in the Greek language. But this does not seem to have been his only motive, as we find he has to the full as carefully published several detached and broken sentences, the gleanings from scholiasts, which have no claim to merit of that kind; and yet the author's works might be reckoned by some to be incomplete without them. If then this duty is expected from every editor of a Greek or Roman poet, why is not the same insisted on in respect of an English classic? But if the custom of preserving all, whether worthy of it or not, be more honoured in the breach than the observance, the suppression at least should not be considered as a fault. The publication of such things as Swift had written merely to raise a laugh among his friends, has added something to the bulk of his works, but very little to his character as a writer. The four volumes that came out since Dr. Hawkesworth's edition, not to look on them as a tax levied on the publick (which I think one might without injustice) contain not more than sufficient to have made one of real value; and there is a kind of dissingenuity, not to give it a harsher title, in exhibiting what the author never meant should see the light; for no motive, but a sordid one, can betray the survivors to make that publick, which they themselves must be of opinion will be unfavourable to the memory of the dead.

Life

ADVERTISEMENT to the READER. 173

Life does not often receive good unmixed with evil. The benefits of the art of printing are depraved by the facility with which scandal may be diffused, and secrets revealed; and by the temptation by which traffick solicits avarice to betray the weaknesses of passion, or the confidence of friend-

I cannot forbear to think these posthumous publications injurious to society. A man conscious of literary reputation will grow in time afraid to write with tenderness to his sister, or with fondness to his child; or to remit on the slightest occasion, or most pressing exigence, the rigour of critical choice, and grammatical severity. That esteem which preserves his letters, will at last produce his disgrace; when that which he wrote only to his friend or his daughter shall be laid open to the publick.

There is perhaps sufficient evidence, that most of the plays in question, unequal as they may be to the rest, were written by Shakespeare; but the reason generally given for publishing the less correct pieces of an author, that it affords a more impartial view of a man's talents or way of thinking, than when we only see him in form, and prepared for our reception, is not enough to condemn an editor who thinks and practises otherwise. For what is all this to shew, but that every man is more dull at one time than another; a fact which the world would easily have admitted, without asking any proofs in its support that might be destructive to an author's reputation.

To conclude; if the work, which this publication was meant to facilitate, has been already performed, the satisfaction of knowing it to be so may be obtained from hence; if otherwise, let those who raised expectations of correctness, and through negligence defeated them, be justly exposed by future editors, who will now be in possession of by far the greatest part of what they might have enquired after for years to no purpose; for in respect of such a number of the old quartos as are here exhibited, the first folio is a common book. This advantage will at least arise, that future editors, having equally recourse to the same copies, can challenge distinction and preference only by genius, capacity, industry, and learning.

As I have only collected materials for future artists, I consider what I have been doing as no more than an apparatus for their use. If the publick is inclined to receive it it as such, I am amply rewarded for my trouble; if otherwise, I shall submit with chearfulness to the censure which should equitably fall on an injudicious attempt; having this consolation, however, that my design amounted to no more than a wish to encourage others to think of preserving the oldest editions of the English writers, which are growing scarcer every day; and to afford the world all the assistance or pleasure it can receive from the most authentick copies extant of its NOBLEST POET.

174 ADVERTISEMENT to the READER.

G. S.

SOME

S O M E
ACCOUNT of the LIFE, &c.

O F
Mr. WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE.

Written by Mr. R O W E.

IT seems to be a kind of respect due to the memory of excellent men, especially of those whom their wit and learning have made famous, to deliver some account of themselves, as well as their works, to posterity. For this reason, how fond do we see some people of discovering any little personal story of the great men of antiquity! their families, the common accidents of their lives, and even their shape, make, and features have been the subject of critical enquiries. How trifling soever this curiosity may seem to be, it is certainly very natural; and we are hardly satisfied with an account of any remarkable person, till we have heard him described even to the very cloaths he wears. As for what relates to men of letters, the knowledge of an author may sometimes conduce to the better understanding his book; and though the works of Mr. Shakespeare may seem to many not to want a comment, yet I fancy some little account of the man himself may not be thought improper to go along with them.

He was the son of Mr. John Shakespeare, and was born at Stratford upon Avon, in Warwickshire, in April 1564. His family, as appears by the register and publick writings relating to that town, were of good figure and fashion there, and are mentioned as gentlemen. His father, who was a considerable dealer in wool, had so large a family, ten children in all, that though he was his eldest son, he could give him him no better education than his own employment. He had bred him, it is true, for some time at a free-school, where, it is probable, he acquired what Latin he was master of: but the narrowness of his circumstances, and the want of his assistance at home, forced his father to withdraw him from thence, and unhappily prevented his further proficiency in that language. It is without controversy, that in his works we scarce find any traces of any thing that looks like an imitation of the ancients. The delicacy of his taste, and the natural bent of his own great genius (equal, if not superior, to some of the best of theirs) would certainly have led him to read and study them with so much pleasure, that some of their fine images would naturally have insinuated themselves into, and been mixed with his own writings; so that his not copying at least something from them, may be an argument of his never having read them. Whether his ignorance of the ancients were a disadvantage to him or no, may admit of a dispute: for though the knowledge of them might have made him more correct, yet it is not improbable but that the regularity and deference for them, which would have attended that correctness, might have restrained some of that fire, impetuosity, and even beautiful extravagance which we admire in Shakespeare: and I believe we are better pleased with those thoughts, altogether new and uncommon, which his own imagination supplied him so abundantly with, than if he had given us the most beautiful passages out of the Greek and Latin poets, and that in the most agreeable manner that it was possible for a master of the English language to deliver them.

Upon his leaving school, he seems to have given entirely into that way of living which his father proposed to him; and in order to settle in the world after a family manner, he thought fit to marry while he was yet very young. His wife was the daughter of one Hathaway, said to have been a substantial yeoman in the neighbourhood of Stratford. In this kind of settlement he continued for some time, till an extravagance that he was guilty of forced him both out of his country, and that way of living which he had taken up; and though it seemed at first to be a blemish upon his good manners, and a misfortune to him, yet it afterwards happily proved the occasion of exerting one of the greatest geniuses that ever was known in dramatick poetry. He had by a misfortune common enough to young fellows, fallen into ill company; and amongst them, some that made a frequent practice practice of deer-stealing, engaged him more than once in robbing a park that belonged to Sir Thomas Lucy, of Cherlecot, near Stratford. For this he was prosecuted by that gentleman, as he thought, somewhat too severely; and in order to revenge that ill usage, he made a ballad upon him. And though this, probably the first essay of his poetry, be lost, yet it is said to have been so very bitter, that it redoubled the prosecution against him to that degree, that he was obliged to leave his business and family in Warwickshire, for some time, and shelter himself in London.

It is at this time, and upon this accident, that he is said to have made his first acquaintance in the playhouse. He was received into the company then in being, at first in a very mean rank; but his admirable wit, and the natural turn of it to the stage, soon distinguished him, if not as an extraordinary actor, yet as an excellent writer. His name is printed,* as the custom was in those times, amongst those of the other players, before some old plays, but without any particular account of what sort of parts he used to play; and though I have enquired, I could never meet with any further account of him this way, than that the top of his performance was the Ghost in his own Hamlet. I should have been much more pleased, to have learned from certain authority, which was the first play he wrote*; it would be without doubt a pleasure to any man, curious in things of this kind, to see and know what was the first essay of a fancy like Shakespeare's. Perhaps we are not to look for his beginnings, like those of other authors, among their least perfect writings; art had so little, and nature so large a share in what he did, that, for aught I know, the performances of his youth, as they were the most vigorous, and had the most fire and strength of imagination in them, were the best. I would not be thought by this to mean, that his fancy was so loose and extravagant, as to be independent on the rule and government of judgment; but that what he thought, was commonly so great, so justly and rightly conceived in itself, that it wanted little or no correction, and was immediately approved by an impartial judgment at the first sight. But though the order of time in which the several pieces were written be generally uncertain, yet there are passages in some few of them which seem to fix their dates. So the Chorus at the end of the fourth act of Henry the Fifth, by a compliment very handsomely turned to the earl of Essex, shews the play to have been written when that lord was general for the queen in Ireland: and his elogy upon queen Elizabeth, and her successor king James, in the latter end of his Henry the Eighth, is a proof of that play's being written after the accession of the latter of those two princes to the crown of England. Whatever the particular times of his writing were, the people of his age, who began to grow wonderfully fond of diversions of this kind, could not but be highly pleased to see a genius arise from amongst them of so pleasurable, so rich a vein, and so plentifully capable of furnishing their favourite entertainments. Besides the advantages of his wit, he was in himself a good-natured man, of great sweetness in his manners, and a most agreeable companion; so that it is no wonder, if, with so many good qualities, he made himself acquainted with the best conversations of those times. Queen Elizabeth had several of his plays acted before her, and without doubt gave him many gracious marks of her favour: it is that maiden princess plainly, whom he intends by ——— A fair vestal, throned by the west.

* The highest date of any I can yet find, is Romeo and Juliet in 1597, when the author was 33 years old; and Richard the Second, and Third, in the next year, viz. the 34th of his age.

Midsummer-Night's Dream.

And that whole passage is a compliment very properly brought in, and very handsomely applied to her. She was so well pleased with that admirable character of Falstaff, in The Two Parts of Henry the Fourth, that she commanded him to continue it for one play more, and to shew him in love. This is said to be the occasion of his writing The Merry Wives of Windsor. How well she was obeyed, the play itself is an admirable proof. Upon this occasion it may not be improper to observe, that this part of Falstaff is said to have been written originally under the name of * Oldcastle; some of that family being then remaining, the queen was pleased to command him to alter it; upon which he made use of Falstaff. The present offence was indeed avoided; but I do not know whether the author may not have been somewhat to blame in his second choice, since it is certain that Sir John Falstaff, who was a knight of the garter, and a lieutenant-general, was a name of distinguished merit in the wars in France in Henry the Fifth's and Henry the Sixth's times. What grace soever the queen conferred upon him, it was not to her only he owed the fortune which the reputation of his wit made. He had the honour to meet with many great and uncommon marks of favour and friendship from the earl of Southampton, famous in the histories of that time for his friendship to the unfortunate earl of Essex. It was to that noble lord that he dedicated his poem of Venus and Adonis. There is one instance so singular in the magnificence of this patron of Shakespeare's, that if I had not been assured that the story was handed down by Sir William D'Avenant, who was probably very well acquainted with his affairs, I should not have ventured to have inserted, that my lord Southampton at one time gave him a thousand pounds, to enable him to go through with a purchase which he heard he had a mind to. A bounty very great, and very rare at any time, and almost equal to that profuse generosity the present age has shewn to French dancers and Italian singers.

* See the Epilogue to Henry the Fourth.

What particular habitude or friendships he contracted with private men, I have not been able to learn, more than that every one, who had a true taste of merit, and could distinguish men, had generally a just value and esteem for him. His exceeding candour and good-nature must certainly have inclined all the gentler part of the world to love him, as the power of his wit obliged the men of the most delicate knowledge and polite learning to admire him.

His acquaintance with Ben Jonson began with a remarkable piece of humanity and good-nature; Mr. Jonson, who was at that time altogether unknown to the world, had offered one of his plays to the players, in order to have it acted; and the persons into whose hands it was put, after having turned it carelessly and superciliously over, were just upon returning it to him with an ill-natured answer, that it would be of no service to their company; when Shakespeare luckily cast his eye upon it, and found something so well in it, as to engage him first to read it through, and afterwards to recommend Mr. Jonson and his writings to the publick. Jonson was certainly a very good scholar, and in that had the advantage of Shakespeare; though at the same time I believe it must be allowed, that what nature gave the latter, was more than a balance for what books had given the former; and the judgment of a great man upon this occasion was, I think, very just and proper. In a conversation between Sir John Suckling, Sir William D'Avenant, 'Endymion Porter, Mr. Hales of Eton, and Ben Jonson; Sir John Suckling, who was a professed admirer of Shakespeare, had undertaken his defence against Ben Jonson with some warmth; Mr. Hales, who had sat still for some time, told them, That if Mr. Shakespeare had not read the ancients, he had likewise not stolen any thing from them; and that if he would produce any one topick finely treated by any one of them, he would undertake to shew something upon the same subject at least as well written by Shakespeare.

The latter part of his life was spent, as all men of good sense will wish theirs may be, in ease, retirement, and the conversation of his friends. He had the good fortune to gather an estate equal to his occasion, and, in that, to his wish; and is said to have spent some years before his death at his native Stratford. His pleasureable wit and good nature engaged him in the acquaintance, and entitled him to the friendship of the gentlemen of the neighbourhood. Amongst them, it is a story almost still remembered in that country, that he had a particular intimacy with Mr. Combe, an old gentleman noted thereabouts for his wealth and usury: it happened, that in a pleasant conversation amongst their common friends, Mr. Combe told Shakespeare in a laughing manner, that he fancied he intended to write his epitaph, if he happened to out-live him; and since he could not know what might be said of him when he was dead, he desired it might be done immediately: upon which Shakespeare gave him these four verses.

*Ten in the hundred lies here engrav'd,
'Tis a hundred to ten his soul is not sav'd:
If any man ask, Wholies in this tomb?
Oh! oh! quoth the devil, 'tis my John-a-Combe*.*

* The Rev. Francis Peck, in his Memoirs of the Life and Poetical Works of Mr. John Milton, 4to. 1740, p. 223. has introduced another epitaph imputed (on what authority is unknown) to Shakespeare. It is on Tom a Combe, alias Thin-beard, brother to this John, who is mentioned by Mr. Rowe.

“Thin in beard, and thick in purse;
“Never man beloved worse;
“He went to the grave with many a curse:
“The devil and he had both one nurse.” STEEVENS.

But

But the sharpness of the satire is said to have stung the man so severely, that he never forgave it.

He died in the 53d year of his age *, and was buried on the north side of the chancel, in the great church at Stratford, where a monument, as engraved in the plate, is placed in the wall. On his grave-stone underneath is,

*Good friend, for Jesus' sake forbear
To dig the dust inclosed here.
Blest be the man that spares these stones,
And curst be he that moves my bones.*

He had three daughters, of which two lived to be married; Judith, the elder, to one Mr. Thomas Quiney, by whom she had three sons, who all died without children; and Susannah, who was his favourite, to Dr. John Hall, a physician of good reputation in that country. She left one child only, a daughter, who was married first to Thomas Nash, esq. and afterwards to Sir John Bernard of Abbingdon, but died likewise without issue.

This is what I could learn of any note, either relating to himself or family: the character of the man is best seen in his writings. But since Ben Jonson has made a sort of an essay towards it in his Discoveries, I will give it in his words:

“ I remember the players have often mentioned it as an “ honour to Shakespeare, that in writing (whatsoever he “ penned) he never blotted out a line. My answer hath
“ been, Would he had blotted a thousand! which they thought “ a malevolent speech. I had not told posterity this, but “ for their ignorance, who chose that circumstance to com“ mend their friend by, wherein he most faulted: and to “ justify mine own candour, for I loved the man, and do “ honour his memory, on this side idolatry, as much as “ any. He was, indeed, honest, and of an open and free “ nature, had an excellent fancy, brave notions, and gen“ tle expressions; wherein he flowed with that facility, that “ sometimes it was necessary he should be stopped: Suffla- “ minandus erat, as Augustus said of Haterius. His wit was “ in his own power, would the rule of it had been so too.
“ Many times he fell into those things which could not es-

* He died on his birth-day, April 23, 1616, and had exactly completed his fifty-second year.

MALONE.

“ cape laughter; as when he said in the person of Cæsar,
 “ one speaking to him,

“ Cæsar thou dost me wrong.

“ He replied :

“ Cæsar did never wrong, but with just cause.

“ And such like, which were ridiculous. But he redeemed “ his vices with his virtues: there was ever more in him to “ be praised than to be pardoned.”

As for the passage which he mentions out of Shakespeare, there is somewhat like it in Julius Cæsar, but without the absurdity; nor did I ever meet with it in any edition that I have seen, as quoted by Mr. Jonson. Besides his plays in this edition, there are two or three ascribed to him by Mr. Langbain, which I have never seen, and know nothing of. He writ likewise Venus and Adonis, and Tarquin and Lucretia, in stanzas, which have been printed in a late collection of poems. As to the character given of him by Ben Jonson, there is a good deal in it: but I believe it may be as well expressed by what Horace says of the first Romans, who wrote tragedy upon the Greek models (or indeed translated them) in his epistle to Augustus.

— *Naturâ sublimis & acer,
 Nam spirat tragicum satis & feliciter audet,
 Sed turpem putat in chartis metuitque lituram.*

As I have not proposed to myself to enter into a large and complete collection upon Shakespeare's works, so I will only take the liberty, with all due submission to the judgment of others, to observe some of those things I have been pleased with in looking him over.

His plays are properly to be distinguished only into comedies and tragedies. Those which are called histories, and even some of his comedies, are really tragedies, with a run or mixture of comedy amongst them. That way of tragic-comedy was the common mistake of that age, and is indeed become so agreeable to the English taste, that though the severer criticks among us cannot bear it, yet the generality of our audiences seem to be better pleased with it than with an exact tragedy. The Merry Wives of Windsor, The Comedy of Errors, and The Taming of the Shrew, are all pure comedy;

medy; the rest, however they are called, have something of both kinds. It is not very easy to determine which way of writing he was most excellent in. There is certainly a great deal of entertainment in his comical humours; and though they did not then strike at all ranks of people, as the satire of the present age has taken the liberty to do, yet there is a pleasing and a well-distinguished variety in those characters which he thought fit to meddle with. Falstaff is allowed by every body to be a master-piece; the character is always well sustained, though drawn out into the length of three plays; and even the account of his death, given by his old landlady Mrs. Quickly, in the first act of Henry the Fifth, though it be extremely natural, is yet as diverting as any part of his life. If there be any fault in the draught he has made of this lewd old fellow, it is, that though he has made him a thief, lying, cowardly, vain-glorious, and in short every way vicious, yet he has given him so much wit as to make him almost too agreeable; and I do not know whether some people have not, in remembrance of the diversion he had formerly afforded them, been sorry to see his friend Hal use him so scurvily, when he comes to the crown in the end of The Second Part of Henry the Fourth. Amongst other extravagancies, in The Merry Wives of Windsor he has made him a deer-stealer, that he might at the same time remember his Warwickshire prosecutor, under the name of Justice Shallow; he has given him very near the same coat of arms which Dugdale, in his Antiquities of that county, describes for a family there, and makes the Welsh parson descant very pleasantly upon them. That whole play is admirable; the humours are various and well opposed; the main design, which is to cure Ford of his unreasonable jealousy, is extremely well conducted. In Twelfth-Night there is something singularly ridiculous and pleasant in the fantastical steward Malvolio. The parasite and the vain-glorious in Parolles, in All's Well that Ends Well, is as good as any thing of that kind in Plautus or Terence. Petruchio, in The Taming of the Shrew, is an uncommon piece of humour. The conversation of Benedict and Beatrice, in Much Ado about Nothing, and of Rosalind in As you like it, have much wit and sprightliness all along. His clowns, without which character there was hardly any play writ in that time, are all very entertaining: and, I believe, Thersites in Troilus and Cressida, and Apemantus in Timon, will be allowed to be master-pieces of ill-nature, and satirical snarling. To these

I might add, that incomparable character of Shylock the Jew, in The Merchant of Venice; but though we have seen that play received and acted as a comedy, and the part of the Jew performed by an excellent comedian, yet I cannot but think it was designed tragically by the author. There appears in it a deadly spirit of revenge, such a savage fierceness and fellness, and such a bloody designation of cruelty and mischief, as cannot agree either with the stile or characters of comedy. The play itself, take it altogether, seems to me to be one of the most finished of any of Shakespeare's. The tale indeed, in that part relating to the caskets, and the extravagant and unusual kind of bond given by Antonio, is too much removed from the rules of probability; but taking the fact for granted, we must allow it to be very beautifully written. There is something in the friendship of Antonio to Bassanio very great, generous, and tender. The whole fourth act (supposing, as I said, the fact to be probable) is extremely fine. But there are two passages that deserve a particular notice. The first is, what Portia says in praise of mercy, and the other on the power of musick. The melancholy of Jaques, in As you like it, is as singular and odd as it is diverting. And if, what Horace says, it will be a hard task for any one to go beyond him in the description of the several degrees and ages of man's life, though the thought be old, and common enough.

Difficile est proprie communia dicere,

— *All the world's a stage,
And all the men and women merely players;
They have their exits and their entrances,
And one man in his time plays many parts,
His acts being seven ages. First the infant
Mewling and puking in the nurse's arms:
And then, the whining school-boy with his satchel,
And shining morning-face, creeping like snail
Unwillingly to school. And then the lover
Sighing like furnace, with a woeful ballad
Made to his mistress' eye-brow. Then a soldier
Full of strange oaths, and bearded like the pard,
Jealous in honour, sudden and quick in quarrel,
Seeking the bubble reputation
Even in the cannon's mouth. And then the justice*

*In fair round belly, with good capon lin'd,
With eyes severe, and beard of formal cut,
Full of wise saws and modern instances;
And so he plays his part. The sixth age shifts
Into the lean and slipper'd pantaloon,
With spectacles on nose, and pouch on side;
His youthful hose, well sav'd, a world too wide
For his shrunk shanks; and his big manly voice,
Turning again tow'rd childish treble, pipes
And whistles in his sound. Last scene of all,
That ends this strange eventful history,
Is second childishness and mere oblivion,
Sans teeth, sans eyes, sans taste, sans every thing.*

Vol. II. p. 203.

His images are indeed every where so lively, that the thing he would represent stands full before you, and you possess every part of it. I will venture to point out one more, which is, I think, as strong and as uncommon as any thing I ever saw; it is an image of patience. Speaking of a maid in love, he says,

— *She never told her love,
But let concealment, like a worm, i' th' bud,
Feed on her damask cheek: she pin'd in thought,
And 'sat like Patience on a monument,
Smiling at grief.*

What an image is here given! and what a task would it have been for the greatest masters of Greece and Rome to have expressed the passions designed by this sketch of statuary! The stile of his comedy is, in general, natural to the characters, and easy in itself; and the wit most commonly sprightly and pleasing, except in those places where he runs into doggerel rhimes, as in The Comedy of Errors, and some other plays. As for his jingling sometimes, and playing upon words, it was the common vice of the age he lived in: and if we find it in the pulpit, made use of as an ornament to the sermons of some of the gravest divines of those times; perhaps it may not be thought too light for the stage.

But certainly the greatness of this author's genius does no where so much appear, as where he gives his imagination an entire loose, and raises his fancy to, a flight above mankind, and the limits of the visible world. Such are his attempts tempts in The Tempest, Midsummer Night's Dream, Macbeth, and Hamlet. Of these, The Tempest, however it comes to be placed the first by the publishers of his works, can never have been the first written by him: it seems to me as perfect in its kind, as almost any thing we have of his. One may observe, that the unities are kept here, with an exactness uncommon to the liberties of his writing; though that was what, I suppose, he valued himself least upon, since his excellencies were all of another kind. I am very sensible that he does, in this play, depart too much from that likeness to truth which ought to be observed in these sort of writings; yet he does it so very finely, that one is easily drawn in to have more faith for his sake, than reason does well allow of. His magick has something in it very solemn and very poetical: and that extravagant character of Caliban is mighty well sustained, shews a wonderful invention in the author, who could strike out such a particular wild image, and is certainly one of the finest and most uncommon grotesques that ever was seen. The observation, which I have been informed * three very great men concurred in making upon this part, was extremely just; That Shakespeare had not only found out a new character in his Caliban, but had also devised and adapted a new manner of language for that character.

It is the same magick that raises the Fairies in Midsummer Night's Dream, the Witches in Macbeth, and the Ghost in Hamlet, with thoughts and language so proper to the parts they sustain, and so peculiar to the talent of this writer. But of the two last of these plays I shall have occasion to take notice, among the tragedies of Mr. Shakespeare. If one undertook to examine the greatest part of these by those rules which are established by Aristotle, and taken from the model of a Grecian stage, it would be no very hard task to find a great many faults; but as Shakespeare lived under a kind of mere light of nature, and had never been made acquainted with the regularity of those written precepts, so it would be hard to judge him by a law he knew nothing of. We are to consider him as a man that lived in a state of almost universal licence and ignorance: there was no established judge, but every one took the liberty to write according to the dictates of his own fancy. When one considers, that there is not one play before him of a reputation good enough to entitle it to an appearance on the present stage, it cannot but be a matter of great wonder that he should advance dramatick poetry so far as he did. The fable is what is generally placed the first, among those that are reckoned the constituent parts of a tragick or heroick poem; not, perhaps, as it is the most difficult or beautiful, but as it is the first properly to be thought of in the contrivance and course of the whole; and with the fable ought to be considered the fit disposition, order, and conduct of its several parts. As it is not in this province of the drama that the strength and mastery of Shakespeare lay, so I shall not undertake the tedious and ill-natured trouble to point out the several faults he was guilty of in it. His tales were seldom invented, but rather taken either from true history, or novels and romances: and he commonly made use of them in that order, with those incidents, and that extent of time in which he found them in the authors from whence he borrowed them. Almost all his historical plays comprehend a great length of time, and very different and distinct places: and in his Antony and Cleopatra, the scene travels over the greatest part of the Roman empire. But in recompence for his carelessness in this point, when he comes to another part of the drama, The manners of his characters, in acting or speaking what is proper for them, and fit to be shewn by the poet, he may be generally justified, and in very many places greatly commended. For those plays which he has taken from the English or Roman history, let any man compare them, and he will find the character as exact in the poet as the historian. He seems indeed so far from proposing to himself any one action for a subject, that the title very often tells you, it is The Life of King John, King Richard, &c. What can be more agreeable to the idea our historians give of Henry the Sixth, than the picture Shakespeare has drawn of him! His manners are every where exactly the same with the story; one finds him still described with simplicity, passive sanctity, want of courage, weakness of mind, and easy submission to the governance of an imperious wife, or prevailing faction: though at the same time the poet does justice to his good qualities, and moves the pity of his audience for him, by shewing him pious, disinterested, a contemner of the things of this world, and wholly resigned to the severest dispensations of God's providence. There is a short scene in the Second Part of Henry the Sixth, which I cannot but think admirable in its kind. Cardinal Beaufort, who had murdered the Duke of Gloucester, is shewn in the last agonies on his death-bed, with with the good king praying over him. There is so much terror in one, so much tenderness and moving piety in the other, as must touch any one who is capable either of fear or pity. In his Henry the Eighth, that prince is drawn with that greatness of mind, and all those good qualities which are attributed to him in any account of his reign. If his faults are not shewn in an equal degree, and the shades in this picture do not bear a just proportion to the lights, it is not that the artist wanted either colours or skill in the disposition of them; but the truth, I believe, might be, that he forbore doing it out of regard to queen Elizabeth, since it could have been no very great respect to the memory of his mistress, to have exposed some certain parts of her father's life upon the stage. He has dealt much more freely with the minister of that great king, and certainly nothing was ever more justly written, than the character of Cardinal Wolsey. He has shewn him insolent in his prosperity; and yet, by a wonderful address, he makes his fall and ruin the subject of general compassion. The whole man, with his vices and virtues, is finely and exactly described in the second scene of the fourth act. The distresses likewise of Queen Catharine, in this play, are very movingly touched; and though the art of the poet has screened King Henry from any gross imputation of injustice, yet one is inclined to wish, the Queen had met with a fortune more worthy of her birth and virtue. Nor are the manners, proper to the persons represented, less justly observed, in those characters taken from the Roman history; and of this, the fierceness and impatience of Coriolanus, his courage and disdain of the common people, the virtue and philosophical temper of Brutus, and the irregular greatness of mind in M. Antony, are beautiful proofs. For the two last especially, you find them exactly as they are described by Plutarch, from whom certainly Shakspeare copied them. He has indeed followed his original pretty close, and taken in several little incidents that might have been spared in a play. But, as I hinted before, his design seems most commonly rather to describe those great men in the several fortunes and accidents of their lives, than to take any single great action, and form his work simply upon that. However, there are some of his pieces, where the fable is founded upon one action only. Such are more especially, Romeo and Juliet, Hamlet, and Othello. The design in Romeo and Juliet is plainly the punishment of their two families, for the unreasonable feuds and animosities that had been so long kept up between them, and occasioned the effusion of so much blood. In the management of this story, he has shewn something wonderfully tender and passionate in the love-part, and very pitiful in the distress. Hamlet is founded on much the same tale with the Electra of Sophocles. In each of them a young prince is engaged to revenge the death of his father, their mothers are equally guilty, are both concerned in the murder of their husbands, and are afterwards married to the murderers. There is in the first part of the Greek tragedy something very moving in the grief of Electra; but, as Mr. Dacier has observed, there is something very unnatural and shocking in the manners he has given that Princess and Orestes in the latter part. Orestes imbrues his hands in the blood of his own mother; and that barbarous action is performed, though not immediately upon the stage, yet so near, that the audience hear Clytemnestra crying out to Ægisthus for help, and to her son for mercy: while Electra her daughter, and a Princess (both of them characters that ought to have appeared with more decency) stands upon the stage, and encourages her brother in the parricide. What horror does this not raise! Clytemnestra was a wicked woman, and had deserved to die; nay, in the truth of the story, she was killed by her own son; but to represent an action of this kind on the stage, is certainly an offence against those rules of manners proper to the persons, that ought to be observed there. On the contrary, let us only look a little on the conduct of Shakespeare. Hamlet is represented with the same piety towards his father, and resolution to revenge his death, as Orestes; he has the same abhorrence for his mother's guilt, which, to provoke him the more, is heightened by incest: but it is with wonderful art and justice of judgment, that the poet restrains him from doing violence to his mother. To prevent any thing of that kind, he makes his father's Ghost forbid that part of his vengeance:

* Lord Falkland, Lord C. J. Vaughan, and Mr. Selden.

and

*But howsoever thou pursu'st this act,
Taint not thy mind, nor let thy soul contrive
Against thy mother aught; leave her to heav'n,
And to those thorns that in her bosom lodge,
To prick and sting her.*

This is to distinguish rightly between horror and terror. The latter is a proper passion of tragedy, but the former ought always to be carefully avoided. And certainly no dramatick writer ever succeeded better in raising terror in the minds of an audience than Shakespeare has done. The whole tragedy of Macbeth, but more especially the scene where the King is murdered, in the second act, as well as this play, is a noble proof of that manly spirit with which he writ; and both shew how powerful he was, in giving the strongest motions to our souls that they are capable of. I cannot leave Hamlet, without taking notice of the advantage with which we have seen this master-piece of Shakespeare distinguish itself upon the stage, by Mr. Betterton's fine performance of that part. A man, who, though he had no other good qualities, as he has a great many, must have made his way into the esteem of all men of letters, by this only excellency. No man is better acquainted with Shakespeare's manner of expression, and indeed he has studied him so well, and is so much a master of him, that whatever part of his he performs, he does it as if it had been written on purpose for him, and that the author had exactly conceived it as he plays it. I must own a particular obligation to him, for the most considerable part of the passages relating to this life, which I have here transmitted to the publick; his veneration for the memory of Shakespeare having engaged him to make a journey into Warwickshire, on purpose to gather up what remains he could, of a name for which he had so great a veneration*.

* This Account, of the Life of Shakespeare is printed from Mr. Rowe's second edition, in which it had been abridged and altered by himself after its appearance in 1709.

STEEVENS.

The following Instrument was transmitted by John Anstis, Esq. Garter King at Arms: It is mark'd G.
13. P. 349.

*[There is also a Manuscript in the Herald's Office , mark'd W. 2. p. 276; where Notice is taken of this Coat, and that the Person, to whom it was granted, had borne Magistracy at Stratford upon Avon.]

TO all and singular noble and gentlemen of all estates and degrees, bearing arms, to whom these presents shall come; William Dethick, Garter Principal King of Arms of England, and William Camden, alias Clarencieux, King of Arms for the south, east, and west parts of this realm, send greetings. Know ye, that in all nations and kingdoms the record and remembrance of the valiant facts and virtuous dispositions of worthy men have been made known and divulged by certain shields of arms and tokens of chivalrie; the grant or testimony whereof appertaineth unto us, by virtue of our offices from the Queen's most Excellent Majesty, and her Highness's most noble and victorious progenitors: wherefore being solicited, and by credible report informed, that John Shakespeare, now of Stratford upon Avon, in the county of Warwick, gentleman, whose great grandfather, for his faithful and approved service to the late most prudent prince, king Henry VII. of famous memory, was advanced and rewarded with lands and tenements, given to him in those parts of Warwickshire, where they have continued by some descents in good reputation and credit; and for that the said John Shakespere having married the daughter and one of the heirs of Robert Arden of Wellincote, in the said county, and also produced this his ancient coat of arms, heretofore assigned to him whilst he was her' majesty's officer and bailiff of that town. In consideration of the premises, and for the encouragement of his posterity, unto whom such blazon of arms and achievements of inheritance from their said mother, by the ancient custom and laws of arms, may lawfully descend; we the said Garter and Clarendieuix have assigned, granted, and confirmed, and by these presents exemplified unto the said John Shakespere, and to his posterity, that shield and coat of arms, viz. In a field of gold upon a bend fables a spear of the first, the point upward, headed argent; and for his crest or cognifance, A falcon, or, with his wings displayed, standing on a wreathe of his colours, supporting a spear armed headed, or steel-ed silver, fixed upon an helmet with mantles and tassels, as more plainly may appear depicted in this margent; ²⁷ we have likewise impaled the same with the ancient arms of the said Arden* of Wellincote; signifying thereby, that it may and shall be lawful for the said John Shakespere, gent. to bear and use the same shield of arms, single or impaled, as aforesaid, during his natural life; and that it shall be lawful for his children, issue, and posterity, lawfully begotten, to bear, use, and quarter, and shew forth the same, with their due differences, in all lawful warlike feats and civil use or exercises, according to the laws of arms, and custom that to gentlemen belongeth, without let or interruption of any person or persons, for use or bearing the same. In witness and testimony whereof we have subscribed our names, and fastened the seals of our offices. Given at the office of arms, London, the day of in the forty-second year of the reign of our most gracious sovereign lady Elizabeth, by the grace of God, queen of England, France, and Ireland, defender of the faith, &c. 1599.

* In the Herald's Office are the first draughts of John Shakespeare's grant or confirmation of arms, by William Dethick, Garter, Principal King at Arms, 1596. See Vincents Prefs, vol. 157, N^o 23, and N^o 24.

* It is said by the modern editor of Arden of Feversham (first published in 1592 and republished in 1770) that Shakespeare descended by the female line from the gentleman whose unfortunate end is the subject of this tragedy. But the assertion appears to want support, the true name of the person who was murdered at Feversham being Arden and not Arden. Arden might be called Arden in the play for the sake of better sound, or might be corrupted in the chronicle of Holingshed: yet it is unlikely that the true spelling should be overlooked among the Heralds, whose interest it is to recommend by ostentatious accuracy the trifles in which they deal.

STEEVENS.

The

The Licence for acting, granted by James the First to the Company at the Globe, extracted from Rymer's Fœdera.

~~PRO~~ LAURENTIO FLETCHER & WILLIELMO SHAKE-SPEARE & aliis.

A. D. 1603. Pat. *

1. Jac. P. 2. m 4. James by the grace of God, &c. to all justices, maiors, sheriffs, constables, headboroughs, and other

* Among the unpublished collections of Rymer which are now in the British Museum, is the following patent granted in the 16th year of Q. Elizabeth, (viz. 1574). See MSS. Rymer, vol. I.
The James Burbage mentioned therein, was in all probability father to Richard Burbage the contemporary of Shakespeare, and chief performer in his plays. I have printed it, because perhaps it is the first regular licence ever granted to players.

“ Pro Jacobo Burbage et aliis, de licentia speciali

Elizabeth by the grace of God, quene of England, &c. To all justices, mayors, sheriffes, baylyffes, head constables, under constables, and all other oure officers and mynisters gretinge.

Know ye, that we of our especiall grace, certen knowledge, and mere motion have licensed and auctorised, and by these presents do lycence and auctorise oure lovinge subjectes James Burbage, John Perkyne, John Lanham, William Johnson, and Robert Wilson, servaunts to our trustie and well beloved cosen and counseyl-lour the Earle of Leycester, to use, exercyse and occupie the arte and facultye of playenge commedies, tragedies, enterludes, stage-playes, and suche other like as they have alredie used and studied, or hereafter shall use and studie, as well for the recreation of oure lovinge subjectes as for oure solace and pleasure when we shall thinke good to see them, as also to use and occupie all suche instrumentes as they have alredie practised or hereafter shall practise for and duringe our pleasure; and the said commedies, tragedies, enterludes, and stage-plaies, together with their musicke, to shew, publishe, exercise and occupie to their best commoditie, during all the terme aforesaide, as well within the liberties and freedomes of anye our cities, townes, bouroughs, &c. whatsoever, other our officers and loving subjects, greeting. Know you that wee, of our special grace, certaine knowledge and meer motion, have licensed and authorized, and by these presentes doe licence and authorize theise our servants Laurence Fletcher, William Shakespeare, Richard Burbage, Augustine Philippes, John Hemmings, Henrie Condell, William Sly, Robert Armin, Richard Cowly, and the rest of their associates, freely to use and exercise the arte and faculty of playing comedies, tragedies, histories, interludes, ~~morals~~, pastorals, stage-plays, and such like others as theie have alreadye studied or hereafter shall use or studie, as well for the recreation of our loving subjects, as well as for our solace and pleasure when shall thincke good to see them during our pleasure: and the said comedies, tragedies, histories, enterludes, morals, pastorals, stage-plays, and such like, to shew and exercise publicly to their best commoditie, when the infection of the plague shall decrease, as well within their nowe usuall house called the Globe, within our county of Surrey, as also within anie towne halls or moute halls, or other convenient places within the liberties and freedom of any other citie, universitie, town, or burrough whatsoever within our said realmes and dominions. Willing and commanding you and everie of you, as you tender our pleasure, not onlie to permit and suffer them herein, without anie your lets, hindrances, or mo-

as without the same, thoroughoute oure realme of England. Wyllinge and commaundinginge yowe and every of you as ye tender oure pleasure to permitt and suffer them herein withoute anie lettes, hynderaunce or molestation duringe the terme aforesaide, any acte, statute, or proclamation or commaundement heretofore made or hereafter to be made notwithstandyng; provyded that the saide comedies, tragedies, enterludes and stage-plays be by the master of our revells for the tyme beyinge before bene and allowed; and that the same be not published or shewn in the tyme of common prayer or in the tyme of greate and common plague in our saide cite of London.

In wytnes whereof, &c.

Wytnes our selfe at Westminster the 10th daye of Maye.

Per breve de privato sigillo."

Mr. Doddsley in the preface to his collection of old plays 1744, p. 21. says that the first company of players we have any account of in history, are the children of Pauls' in 1578. STEEVENS.

lections,

lestations, during our said pleasure, but also to be aiding or assisting to them if any wrong be to them offered, and to allow them such former curtesies as hathe bene given to men of their place and quallitie; and also what further favour you shall shew to theise our servaunts for our sake, we shall take kindlie at your handes.

In witness whereof, &c.

Witness our selfe at Westminster, the nynteenth daye of Maye.

Per Breve de Privato Sigillo.

SHAKESPEARE'S WILL,

Extracted from the Registry of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

*Vicesimo quinto die Martii Anno Regni Domini nostri Jacobi nunc
Regis Angliæ, &c. decimo quarto & Scotiæ quadragesimo nono.
Anno Domini 1616.*

IN the name of God, Amen. I William Shakespeare of Stratford upon Avon, in the county of Warwick, gent.
in perfect health and memory (God be praised) do make and ordain this my last will and testament in manner and form following; that is to say:

First, I commend my soul into the hands of God my creator, hoping, and assuredly believing, through the only merits of Jesus Christ my Saviour, to be made partaker of life everlasting; and my body to the earth whereof that is made.

Item, I give and bequeath unto my daughter Judith one hundred and fifty pounds of lawful English money, to be paid unto her in manner and form following; that is to say, one hundred pounds in discharge of her marriage portion within one year after my decease, with considerations after the rate of two shillings in the pound for so long time as the same shall be unpaid unto her after my decease; and the fifty pounds residue thereof, upon her surrendering of or giving of such sufficient security as the overseers of this my will shall like of, to surrender or grant all her estate and right that shall descend or come unto her after my decease, or that she now hath of, in, or to, one copyhold tenement, with the appurtenances, lying and being in Stratford upon Avon aforesaid, in the said county of Warwick, being parcel or holden of the manor of Rowington, unto my daughter Susannah Hall, and her heirs for ever.

Item, I give and bequeath unto my said daughter Judith one hundred and fifty pounds more, if she, or any issue of her body, be living at the end of three years next ensuing the day of the date of this my will, during which time my executors to pay her consideration from my decease according

To Face the First Page N^o. 3 of Shakespeares Will.

*This Shadowe is renowned Shakespear's? Soule of th' age
The applause? delight? the wonder of the Stage.
Nature her selfe, was proud of his designs
And joy'd to weare the dressing of his lines;
The learned will Confess, his works are such,
As neither man, nor Muse, can prayse to much.
For ever live thy fame, the world to tell, ing to the rate aforesaid: and if she die within the said term without issue of her body, then my will is, and I do give and bequeath one hundred pounds thereof to my niece Elizabeth Hall, and the fifty pounds to be set forth by my executors during the life of my sister Joan Harte, and the use and profit thereof coming, shall be paid to my said sister Joan, and after her decease the said fifty pounds shall remain amongst the children of my said sister, equally to be divided amongst them; but if my said daughter Judith be living at the end of the said three years, or any issue of her body, then my will is, and so I devise and bequeath the said hundred and fifty pounds to be set out by my executors and overseers for the best benefit of her and her issue, and the stock not to be paid unto her so long as she shall be married and covert baron; but my will is, that she shall have the consideration yearly paid unto her during her life, and after her decease the said stock and consideration to be paid to her children, if she have any, and if not, to her executors and assigns, she living the said term after my decease; provided that if such husband as she shall at the end of the said three years be married unto, or at and after, do sufficiently assure unto her, and the issue of her body, land answerable to the portion by this my will given unto her, and to be adjudged so by my executors and overseers, then my will is, that the said hundred and fifty pounds shall be paid to such husband as shall make such assurance, to his own use.
Thy like, no age, shall ever paralell.*

Item, I give and bequeath unto my said sister Joan twenty pounds, and all my wearing apparel, to be paid and delivered within one year after my decease; and I do will and devise unto her the house, with the appurtenances, in Stratford, wherein she dwelleth, for her natural life, under the yearly value of twelve pence.

Item, I give and bequeath unto her three sons, William Hart, ——— Hart, and Michael Hart, five pounds apiece, to be paid within one year after my decease.

Item, I give and bequeath unto the said Elizabeth Hall all my plate that I now have, except my broad silver and gilt boxes, at the date of this my will.

Item, I give and bequeath unto the poor of Stratford aforesaid ten pounds; to Mr. Thomas Combe my sword; to Thomas Ruffel, esq. five pounds; and to Francis Collins of the borough of Warwick, in the county of Warwick, gent. thirteen pounds six shillings and eight pence, to be paid within one year after my decease.

198 SHAKESPEARE'S WILL.

Item, I give and bequeath to Hamlet Sadler twenty-six shillings eight pence to buy him a ring; to William Reynolds, gent. twenty-six shillings eight pence to buy him a ring; to my godson William Walker twenty shillings in gold; to Anthony Nash, gent. twenty-six shillings eight pence; and to Mr. John Nash twenty-six shillings eight pence; and to my fellows John Hemynge, Richard Burbage *, and Henry Cundell twenty-six shillings eight pence apiece to buy them rings.

Item, I give, will, bequeath, and devise unto my daughter Sufannah Hall, for the better enabling of her to perform this my will, and towards the performance thereof, all that capital messuage or tenement, with the appurtenances, in Stratford aforesaid, called The New Place, wherein I now dwell, and two messuages or tenements, with the appurtenances, situate, lying, and being in Henley-street, within the borough of Stratford aforesaid; and all my barns, stables, orchards, gardens, lands, tenements, and hereditaments whatsoever, situate, lying, and being, or to be had, reserved, preserved, or taken within the towns, hamlets, villages, fields, and grounds of Stratford upon Avon, Old Stratford, Bushaxton, and Welcombe, or in any of them, in the said county of Warwick; and also all that messuage or tenement, with the appurtenances, wherein one John Robinson dwelleth, situate, lying, and being in the Black-Friers in London near the Wardrobe; and all other my lands, tenements, and hereditaments whatsoever; to have and to hold all and singular the said premises, with their appurtenances, unto the said Sufannah Hall, for and during the term of her natural life; and after her decease to the first son of her body lawfully issuing, and to the heirs males of the body of the said first son lawfully issuing; and for default of such issue, to the second son of her body lawfully issuing, and to the heirs males of the body of the said second son lawfully issuing;

* It appears from the registers in Doctors' Commons, that Burbage died in 1629. The wills of Hemynge and Cundell I could not meet with, though I sought for them as low as the year 1641. Several wills indeed I found with the names of J. Hemynge and Henry Cundell annexed, but they contain nothing characteristic of Shakespeare's associates.

and for default of such heirs to the third son of the body of the said Susannah lawfully issuing, and of the heirs males of the body of the said third son lawfully issuing; and for default of such issue, the same to be and remain to the fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh sons of her body, lawfully issuing one after another, and to the heirs males of the bodies of the said fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh sons lawfully issuing, in such manner as it is before limited to be, and remain to the first, second, and third sons of her body, and to their heirs males; and for default of such issue, the said premises to be and remain to my said niece Hall, and the heirs males of her body lawfully issuing; and for default of such issue, to my daughter Judith, and the heirs males of her body lawfully issuing; and for default of such issue, to the right heirs of me the said William Shakespeare for ever.

Item, I give unto my wife my brown best bed with the furniture*.

Item, I give and bequeath to my said daughter Judith my broad silver gilt bole. All the rest of my goods, chattels, leases, plate, jewels, and household-stuff whatsoever, after my debts and legacies paid, and my funeral expences discharged, I give, devise, and bequeath to my son-in-law, John Hall, gent. and my daughter Susannah his wife, who I ordain and make executors of this my last will and testament. And I do intreat and appoint the said Thomas Ruffel, esq. and Francis Collins, gent. to be overseers hereof. And do revoke all former wills, and publish this to be my last will and testament. In witness whereof I have

* It appears, in the original will of Shakespeare (now in the Precogative Office Doctors' Commons) that he had forgot his wife; the legacy to her being expressed by an interlineation, as well as those to Hemynge, Burbage, and Condell.

The will is written on three sheets of paper, the two last of which are undoubtedly subscribed with Shakespeare's own hand. The first indeed has his name in the margin, but it differs somewhat in spelling as well as manner, from the two signatures that follow. The reader will find a fac-simile of all the three, as well as those of the witnesses, over-leaf.

This information was not obtained till it was too late to correct the mode in which our author's name has hitherto been printed, except in the title pages, where it now stands as it should be given
—SHAKESPEARE. STEEVENS.

200 SHAKESPEARE'S WILL.

hereunto put my hand, the day and year first above-written,
by me

William Shakspeare,

Witness to the publishing hereof,

Fra. Collins,
Julius Shaw,
John Robinfon,
Hamlet Sadler,
Robert Whattcott,

*Probatum coram Magistro William Byrde, Legum Doctore
Commissario, &c. vicesimo secundo die mensis Junii, Anno Domini 1616. Furamento Johannis Hall unius ex. et cui, &c. de bene et furat Reservata potestati: et Susannæ Hall alt. ex. &c. cui vendit, &c. petitur.*

To the foregoing Accounts of SHAKESPEARE'S LIFE, I have only one Passage to add, which Mr. Pope related, as communicated to him by Mr. Rowe.

IN the time of Elizabeth, coaches being yet uncommon, and hired coaches not at all in use, those who were too proud, too tender, or too idle to walk, went on horseback to any distant business or diversion. Many came on horseback to the play*, and when Shakespeare fled to London from the terror of a criminal prosecution, his first expedient was to wait at the door of the play-house, and hold the horses of those that had no servants, that they might be ready again after the performance. In this office he became so conspicuous for his care and readiness, that in a short time every man as he alighted called for Will. Shakespeare, and scarcely any other waiter was trusted with a horse while Will. Shakespeare could be had. This was the first dawn of better fortune. Shakespeare, finding more horses put into his hand than he could hold, hired boys to wait under his inspection, who, when Will. Shakespeare was summoned, were immediately to present themselves, I am Shakespeare's boy, Sir. In time Shakespeare found higher employment; but as long as the practice of riding to the play-house continued, the waiters that held the horses retained the appellation of, Shakespeare's boys †.

JOHNSON.

Mr.

* Plays were at this time performed in the afternoon. "The pollicie of plaies is very necessary, howsoever some shallow-brained censurers (not the deepest searchers into the secrets of government) mightily oppugne them. For whereas the afternoone being the idlest time of the day wherein men that are their own masters (as gentlemen of the court, the innes of the court, and a number of captains and soldiers about London) do wholly bestow themselves upon pleasure, and that pleasure they devide (how virtuously it skills not) either in gaming, following of harlots, drinking, or seeing a play, is it not better (since of four extreames all the world cannot keepe them but they will choose one) that they should betake them to the least, which is plaies?" Nash's Pierce Pennilesse his Supplication to the Devil, 1595.

STEEVENS.

† I cannot dismiss this anecdote without observing that it seems to want every mark of probability. Though Shakespeare quitted Stratford

Mr. Rowe has told us that he derived the principal anecdotes in his account of Shakespeare, from Betterton the player, whose zeal had induced him to visit Stratford for the sake of procuring all possible intelligence concerning a poet to whose works he might justly think Stratford on account of a juvenile irregularity, we have no reason to suppose that he had forfeited the protection of his father who was engaged in a lucrative business, or the love of his wife who had already brought him two children, and was herself the daughter of a substantial yeoman. It is unlikely therefore, when he was beyond the reach of his prosecutor, that he should conceal his plan of life, or place of residence from those who if he found himself distressed, could not fail to afford him such supplies as would have set him above the necessity of holding horses for subsistence. Mr. Malone has remarked in his Attempt to ascertain the Order in which the Plays of Shakespeare were written, that he might have found an easy introduction to the stage; for Thomas Green, a celebrated comedian of that period, was his townsman, and perhaps his relation. The genius of our author prompted him to write poetry; his connection with a player might have given his productions a dramatick turn; or his own sagacity might have taught him that fame was not incompatible with profit, and that the theatre was an avenue to both. That it was once the custom to ride on horseback to the play, I am likewise yet to learn. The most popular of the theatres were on the Bank-side; and we are told by the satirical pamphleteers of the time, that the usual mode of conveyance to these places of amusement, was by water: but not a single writer so much as hints at the custom of riding to them, or at the practice of having horses held during the hours of exhibition. Some allusion to this usage (if it had existed) must, I think, have been discovered in the course of our researches after contemporary fashions. Let it be remembered too, that we receive this tale on no higher authority than that of Cibber's Lives of the Poets, vol. I. p. 130. "Sir William Davenant told it to Mr. Betterton, who communicated it to Mr. Rowe," who (according to Dr. Johnson) related it to Mr. Pope. Mr. Rowe (if this intelligence be authentic) seems to have concurred with me in opinion, as he forebore to introduce a circumstance so incredible into his life of Shakespeare. As to the book which furnishes the anecdote, not the smallest part of it was the composition of Mr. Cibber, being entirely written by a Mr. Sautells, amanuensis to Dr. Johnson, when his Dictionary was preparing for the press. T. Cibber was in the King's Bench, and accepted of ten guineas from the booksellers for leave to prefix his name to the work; and it was purposely so prefixed as to leave the reader in doubt whether himself or his father was the person designed.

STEEVENS.

himself

himself under the strongest obligations. Notwithstanding this assertion, in the manuscript papers of the late Mr. Oldys it is said, that one Bowman (according to Chetwood, p. 144, "an actor more than half an age on the London theatres") was unwilling to allow that his associate and contemporary Betterton had ever undertaken such a journey. Be this matter as it will, the following particulars, which I shall give in the words of Oldys, are, for ought we know to the contrary, as well authenticated as any of the anecdotes delivered down to us by Rowe.

Mr. Oldys had covered several quires of paper with laborious collections for a regular life of our author. From these I have made the following extracts, which (however trivial) contain the only circumstances that wear the least appearance of novelty or information; the song excepted, which the reader will find in a note on the first scene of the Merry Wives of Windsor.

"If tradition may be trusted, Shakespeare often baited at the Crown Inn or Tavern in Oxford, in his journey to and from London. The landlady was a woman of great beauty and sprightly wit; and her husband, Mr. John Davenant, (afterwards mayor of that city) a grave melancholy man, who as well as his wife used much to delight in Shakespeare's pleasant company. Their son young Will Davenant (afterwards Sir William) was then a little school-boy in the town, of about seven or eight years old, and so fond also of Shakespeare, that whenever he heard of his arrival, he would fly from school to see him. One day an old townsman observing the boy running homeward almost out of breath, asked him whither he was posting in that heat and hurry. He answered, to see his god-father Shakespeare. There's a good boy, said the other, but have a care that you don't take God's name in vain. This story Mr. Pope told me at the Earl of Oxford's table, upon occasion of some discourse which arose about Shakespeare's monument then newly erected in Westminster Abbey; and he quoted Mr. Betterton the player for his authority. I answered that I thought such a story might have enriched the variety of those choice fruits of observation he has presented us in his preface to the edition he had published of our poet's works. He replied—"There might be in the garden of mankind such plants as would seem to pride themselves more in a regular production of their own native fruits, than in having ing the repute of bearing a richer kind by grafting; and this was the reason he omitted it."

The same story, without the names of the persons, is printed among the jests of John Taylor the Water poet, in his works, folio, 1630, page 184, N^o 39: and, with some variations, may be found in one of Hearne's pocket books.

" One of Shakespeare's younger brothers, who lived to a good old age, even some years, as I compute, after the restoration of K. Charles II. would in his younger days come to London to visit his brother Will, as he called him, and be a spectator of him as an actor in some of his own plays. This custom, as his brother's fame enlarged, and his dramatic entertainments grew the greatest support of our principal, if not of all our theatres, he continued it seems so long after his brother's death, as even to the latter end of his own life. The curiosity at this time of the most noted actors to learn something from him of his brother, &c. they justly held him in the highest veneration. And it may be well believed, as there was besides a kinsman and descendant of the family, who was then a celebrated actor among them, [Charles Hart. See Shakespeare's Will] this opportunity made them greedily inquisitive into every little circumstance, more especially in his dramattick character, which his brother could relate of him. But he, it seems, was so stricken in years, and possibly his memory so weakened with infirmities (which might make him the easier pass for a man of weak intellects) that he could give them but little light into their enquiries; and all that could be recollected from him of his brother Will, in that station was, the faint, general, and almost lost ideas he had of having once seen him act a part in one of his own comedies, wherein being to personate a decrepit old man, he wore a long beard, and appeared so weak and drooping and unable to walk, that he was forced to be supported and carried by another person to a table, at which he was seated among some company, who were eating, and one of them sung a song." See the character of Adam in As you like it. Act. II. Sc. ult.

" Verses by Ben Jonson and Shakespeare, occasioned by the motto to the Globe Theatre.—Totus mundus agit histrionem.

Jonson.

Jonson.

If, but stage actors, all the world displays,
Where shall we find spectators of their plays?

Shakespeare.

Little, or much, of what we see, we do;
We're all both actors and spectators too.

Poetical Characteristicks, 8vo. MS. vol. I. some time in the Harleian Library; which volume was returned to its owner."

" Old Mr. Bowman the player reported from Sir William Bishop, that some part of Sir John Falstaff's character was drawn from a townsman of Stratford, who either faithlessly broke a contract, or spitefully refused to part with some land, for a valuable consideration, adjoining to Shakespeare's, in or near that town."

To these anecdotes I can only add the following.

At the conclusion of the advertisement prefixed to Lincolt's edition of Shakespeare's poems, it is said, " That most learned prince and great patron of learning, King James the First, was pleased with his own hand to write an amicable letter to Mr. Shakespeare; which letter, though now lost, remained long in the hands of Sir William Davenant, as a credible person now living can testify."

Mr. Oldys, in a MS. note to his copy of Fuller's Worthies, observes, that " the story came from the duke of Buckingham, who had it from Sir William D'Avenant."

It appears from Roscius Anglicanus, (commonly called Downes the prompter's book) 1708, that Shakespeare took the pains to instruct Joseph Taylor in the character of Hamlet, and John Lowine in that of K. Henry VIII. STEEVENS.

Extract from the Rev. Dr. Farmer's Essay on the Learning of Shakespeare.

In 1751, was reprinted " A compendious or briefe examination of certayne ordinary complaints of diuers of our Countrymen in these our days: which although they are in some parte unjust and friuolous, yet are they all by way of dialogue thoroughly debated and discussed by William Shakespeare, Gentleman." 8vo.

This extraordinary piece was originally published in 4to, 1581, and dedicated by the author, " To the most vertuous ous and learned Lady, his most deare and soveraigne Princess, Elizabeth; being inforced by her majesties late and singular clemency in pardoning certayne his unduetifull misdemeanour." And by the modern editors, to the late king; as "a treatise composed by the most extensive and fertile genius, that ever any age or nation produced."

Here we join issue with the writers of that excellent, though very unequal work, the Biographia Britannica: if, say they, this piece could be written by our poet, it would be absolutely decisive in the dispute about his learning; for many quotations appear in it from the Greek and Latin classicks.

The concurring circumstances of the name, and the misdemeanor, which is supposed to be the old story of deer-stealing, seem fairly to challenge our poet for the author: but they hesitate.—His claim may appear to be confuted by the date 1581, when Shakespeare was only seventeen, and the long experience, which the writer talks of.—But I will not keep the reader in suspense: the book was not written by Shakespeare.

Styrie, in his Annals, calls the author SOME learned man, and this gave me the first suspicion. I knew very well, that honest John (to use the language of Sir Thomas Bodley) did not waste his time with such baggage books as plays and poems; yet I must suppose, that he had heard of the name of Shakespeare. After a while I met with the original edition. Here in the title-page, and at the end of the dedication, appear only the initials, W. S. gent. and presently I was informed by Anthony Wood, that the book in question was written, not by William Shakespeare, but by William Stafford, gentleman*: which at once accounted for the misdemeanour in the dedication. For Stafford had been concerned at that time, and was indeed afterward, as Camden and the other annalists inform us, with some of the conspirators against Elizabeth; which he properly calls his unduetifull behaviour.

I hope by this time, that any one open to conviction may be nearly satisfied; and I will promise to give on this head very little more trouble.

The justly celebrated Mr. Warton hath favoured us, in his Life of Dr. Bathurst, with some hearsay particulars concerning Shakespeare from the papers of Aubrey, which had been in the hands of Wood; and I ought not to suppress them as the last seems to make against my doctrine. They came originally, I find, on consulting the MS. from one Mr. Beeton: and I am sure Mr. Warton, whom I have the honour to call my friend, and an associate in the question, will be in no pain about their credit.

* Fasti. 2d Edit. V. 1. 208.—It will be seen on turning to the former edition, that the latter part of the paragraph belongs to another Stafford.—I have since observed, that Wood is not the first, who hath given us the true author of the pamphlet.

“ William Shakespeare’s father was a butcher,—while he was a boy he exercised his father’s trade, but when he killed a calf, he would do it in a high style, and make a speech. This William being inclined naturally to poetry and acting, came to London, I guess, about eighteen, and was an actor in one of the playhouses, and did act exceedingly well. He began early to make essays in dramatique poetry.—The humour of the Constable in the Midsummer Night’s Dream he happen’d to take at Crendon* in Bucks.—I think, I have been told, that he left near three hundred pounds to a sister. He understood Latin pretty well, FOR he had been in his younger years a schoolmaster in the country.”

I will be short in my animadversions; and take them in their order.

The account of the trade of the family is not only contrary to all other tradition, but, as it may seem, to the instrument from the Herald’s office, so frequently reprinted.—Shakespeare most certainly went to London, and commenced actor through necessity, not natural inclination.—Nor have we any reason to suppose, that he did act, exceedingly well. Rowe tells us from the information of Betterton, who was inquisitive into this point, and had very early opportunities of enquiry from Sir W. Davenant, that he was no extraordinary actor; and that the top of his performance was the Ghost in his own Hamlet. Yet this chef d’oeuvre did not please: I will give you an original stroke at it. Dr. Lodge, who was for ever pestering the town with pamphlets, published in the year 1596, Wits Aliserie, and the Worlds

* This place is not met with in Speelman’s Villare, or in Adam’s Index; nor in the first and the last performance of this sort, Speed’s Tables, and Whalley’s Gazetteer: perhaps, however, it may be meant under the name of Crandon;—but the inquiry is of no importance.—It should, I think, be written Credendon; though better antiquaries than Aubrey have acquiesced in the vulgar corruption.

Madnesse, discovering the Devils incarnat of this Age, 4to. One of these devils is Hate-virtue, or Sorrow for another man's good sa cesse, who, says the doctor, is "a foule lubber, and looks as pale as the visard of the Ghost, which cried so miserably at the theatre, like an oister-wife, Hamlet revenge *." Thus you see Mr. Holt's supposed proof, in the appendix to the late edition, that Hamlet was written after 1597, or perhaps 1602, will by no means hold good; whatever might be the case of the particular passage on which it is founded.

Nor does it appear, that Shakespeare did begin early to make essays in dramatique poetry: the Arraignement of Paris, 1584, which hath so often been ascribed to him on the credit of Kirkman and Winstanley †, was written by George Peele; and Shakespeare is not met with, even as an assistant, 'till at least seven years afterward ‡. — Nash in his epistle to

* To this observation of Dr. Farmer it may be added, that the play of Hamlet was better known by this scene, than by any other. In Decker's Satiromastix the following passage occurs.

Asinius.

"Would I were hang'd if I can call you any names but captain, and Tucca."

Tucca.

"No, fye; my name's Hamlet Revenge: thou hast been at Paris Garden, hast thou not?"

Again, in Westward Hoe, by Decker and Webster, 1607.

"Let these husbands play mad Hamlet, and cry revenge!"

STEEVENS.

Dr. Farmer's observation may be further confirmed by the following passage in an anonymous play, called A Warning for faire Women, 1599. We also learn from it the usual dress of the stage ghosts of that time.

"—— A filthie whining ghost

"Lapt in some foule sheet, or a leather pilch,

"Comes screaming like a pigge half stickt,

"And cries vindicta—revenge, revenge."

The leathern pilch, I suppose, was a theatrical substitute for armour.

MALONE.

† These people, who were the Curls of the last age, ascribe likewise to our author those miserable performances, Mucedorus, and the Merry Devil of Edmonton.

‡ Mr. Pope asserts "The troublesome Raigne of King John," in 2 parts, 1611, to have been written by Shakespeare and Rowley:—which edition is a mere copy of another in black letter, 1591. But I find his assertion is somewhat to be doubted: for the old edition hath no name of author at all; and that of 1611, the initials only, W. Sh. in the title-page.

the

the gentlemen students of both universities, prefixed to Greene's Arcaïa, 4to. black letter, recommends his friend, Peele, "as the chiefe supporter of pleafance now living, the Atlas of poetrie, and primus verborum artifex: whose first increafe, the Arraignement of Paris, might plead to their opinions his pregnant dexteritie of wit and manifold varietie of inuention *."

In the next place, unfortunately, there is neither fuch a character as a Constable in the Midsommer Night's Dream: nor was the three hundred pounds legacy to a fister, but a daughter.

And to close the whole, it is not poffible, according to Aubrey himfelf, that Shakefpeare could have been fome years a schoolmafter in the country: on which circumftance only the fuppofition of his learning is professedly founded. He was not furely very young, when he was employed to kill calves, and he commenced player about eighteen! — The

* Peele feems to have been taken into the patronage of the Earl of Northumberland about 1593, to whom he dedicates in that year, "The Honour of the Garter, a poem gratulatorie—the Firstling consecrated to his noble name."—"He was esteemed, fays Anthony Wood, a moft noted poet, 1579; but when or where he died, I cannot tell, for fo it is, and always bath been, that moft Poets die poor, and confequently obfcurely, and a hard matter it is to trace them to their graves. Claruit 1599." Ath. Oxon. vol. I. p. 300.

We had lately in a periodical pamphlet, called, The Theatrical Review, a very curious letter under the name of George Peele, to one Mafter Henrie Marle; relative to a difpute between Shakefpeare and Alleyn, which was compromised by Ben Jonfon.—"I never longed for thy companie more than laft night; we were all verie merrie at the Globe, when Ned Alleyn did not fcruple to affyrme pleafantly to thy friende Will, that he had ftolen hys fpeeche about the excellencie of acting in Hamlet hys tragedye, from converfations manifold, which had paffed between them, and opinions gyven by Alleyn touchyng that fubjecte. Shakefpeare did not take this talk in good forte; but Jonfon did put an end to the ftryfe wyth wittellie faying, thys affaire needeth no contentione: you stole it from Ned no doubt: do not marvel: haue you not feene hym acte tymes out of number?"—This is pretended, to be printed from the original MS. dated 1600; which agrees well enough with Wood's Claruit; but unluckily, Peele was dead at leaft two years before. "As Anacreon died by the pot, fays Meres, fo George Peele by the pox." Wit's Treasury, 1598. p. 286.

truth is, that he left his father, for a wife, a year sooner; and had at least two children born at Stratford before he retired from thence to London. It is therefore sufficiently clear, that poor Anthony had too much reason for his character of Aubrey: we find it in his own account of his life, published by Hearne, which I would earnestly recommend to any hypochondriack:

“ A pretender to antiquities, roving, magotie-headed, and sometimes little better than crazed: and being exceedingly credulous, would stuff his many letters sent to A. W. with follies and misinformations.” p. 577. FARMER.

The late Mr. Thomas Osborne, bookseller, (whose exploits are celebrated by the author of the Dunciad) being ignorant in what form or language our Paradise Lost was written, employed one of his garreteers to render it from a French translation into English prose. Lest, hereafter, the compositions of Shakspeare should be brought back into their native tongue from the version of Monsieur le Comte de Catuelan, le Tourneur, &c. it may be necessary to observe, that all the following particulars, extracted from the preface of these gentlemen, are as little founded in truth as their description of the Jubilee at Stratford, which they have been taught to represent as an affair of general approbation and national concern.

They say, that Shakspeare came to London without a plan, and finding himself at the door of a theatre, instinctively stopped there, and offered himself to be a holder of horses:—that he was remarkable for his excellent performance of the Ghost in Hamlet:—that he borrowed nothing from preceding writers:—that all on a sudden he left the stage, and returned without eclat into his native county:—that his monument at Stratford is of copper:—that the courtiers of James I. paid several compliments to him which are still preserved:—that he relieved a widow, who, together with her numerous family, was involved in a ruinous lawsuit:—that his editors have restored many passages in his plays, by the assistance of the manuscripts he left behind him, &c. &c.

Let me not however forget the justice due to these ingenious Frenchmen, whose skill and fidelity in the execution of their very difficult undertaking, is only exceeded by such a display of candour as would serve to cover the imperfections of much less elegant and judicious writers. STEEVENS.

* Baptisms, Marriages, and Burials of the Shakspeare family; transcribed from the Register-book of the Parish of Stratford upon Avon, Warwickshire.

† JONE, daughter of John Shakspeare, was baptized Sept. 15, 1558.

Margaret, daughter of John Shakspeare, was buried April 30, 1563.

‡ WILLIAM, son of John Shakspeare, was baptized April 26, 1564.

Gilbert, son of John Shakspeare, was baptized Oct. 13, 1566.

§ Jone, daughter of John Shakspeare, was baptized April 15, 1569.

Anne, daughter of Mr. John Shakspeare, was baptized Sept. 28, 1571.

Richard, son of Mr. John Shakspeare, was baptized March 11, 1573.

Anne, daughter of Mr. John Shakspeare, was buried April 4, 1579.

Edmund, son of Mr. John Shakspeare, was baptized May 3, 1580.

Elizabeth, daughter of Anthony Shakspeare, of Hampton, was baptized Feb. 10, 1583.

Sufanna, daughter of WILLIAM SHAKSPERE, was baptized May 26, 1583.

|| Samuel and Judith, son and daughter of WILLIAM SHAKSPERE, were baptized Feb. 2, 1584.

John Shakspeare and Margery Roberts were married Nov. 25, 1584.

Margery, wife of John Shakspeare, was buried Oct. 29, 1587.

Urfula, daughter of John Shakspeare, was baptized March 11, 1588.

Thomas Greene, alias Shakspeare, was buried March 6, 1589.

Humphrey, son of John Shakspeare, was baptized May 24, 1590.

* With this extract from the register of Stratford, I was favoured by the Hon. James West, esq. STEVENS.

† She married the ancestor of the Harts of Stratford.

‡ Born April 23, 1564.

§ This seems to be a grand-daughter of the first John.

|| This Samuel, only son of the poet, died aged 12.

212 Baptisms, Marriages, Burials, &c.

Philip, son of John Shakspeare, was baptized Sept. 21, 1591.
 Samuel, son of WILLIAM SHAKSPERE, was buried
 Aug. 11, 1596.

Mr. John Shakspeare was buried Sept. 8, 1601.

* John Hall, gent. and Sufanna Shakspeare were married
 June 5, 1607.

Mary Shakspeare, widow, was buried Sept. 9, 1608.

Gilbert Shakspeare, adolescens, was buried Feb. 3, 1611.

Richard Shakspeare was buried Feb. 4, 1612.

† Thomas Queeny and ‡ Judith Shakspeare were married
 Feb. 10, 1616.

WILLIAM SHAKSPERE ||, gentleman, was buried April
 25, 1616 §.

¶ Mrs. Shakspeare was buried Aug. 6, 1623.

* This gentleman was a physician: he married the poet's eldest daughter.

† Judith was the poet's youngest daughter.

‡ As Shakespeare the poet married his wife from Shotttery, a village near Stratford, possibly he might become possessor of a remarkable house there, as part of her portion; and jointly with his wife convey it as part of their daughter Judith's portion to Thomas Queeny. It is certain that one Queeny, an elderly gentleman, sold it to — Harvey, esq. of Stockton, near Southam, Warwickshire, father of John Harvey Thursby, esq. of Abington, near Northampton; and that the aforesaid Harvey sold it again to Samuel Tyler, esq. whose sisters, as his heirs, now enjoy it.

|| Died the 23d.

§ No one hath protracted the life of Shakespeare beyond 1616, except Mr. Hume; who is pleased to add a year to it, in contradiction to all manner of evidence. FARMER.

¶ The poet's widow. She died at the age of sixty-seven.

Extracts from the Rev. Mr. Granger's Biographical History of England.

THE PORTRAITS of SHAKESPEARE.

Vol. I. p. 259. 8vo. Edition.

"WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE; *ad orig. tab. penes D. Hurley; Vertue sc. 1721; 410."

"WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, &c. Vertue sc. 1719. Done from the original, now in the possession of Robert Keck of the Inner Temple, Esq. + large h. sb."

"WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE. In the possession of John Nicoll of Southgate, Esq. Hubbard sc. 1747; illust. Heads."

"WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE; Zuist p. From a capital picture in the collection of T. Wright, painter in Covent Garden. J. Simon f. h. sb. mezz."

"This was painted in the reign of Charles II."

* "The portrait palmed upon Mr. Pope (I use the words of the late Mr. Oldys in a MS. note to his edition of Langbaine) for an original of Shakespeare, from which he had his fine plate engraved, is evidently a juvenile portrait of K. James I." I am no judge in these matters, but only deliver an opinion, which if ill grounded, may be easily overthrown. The portrait, to me at least, has no traits of Shakespeare. The following observations are from the printed work of Mr. Granger. STEEVENS.

† "It has been said that there never was an original portrait of Shakespeare; but that Sir Thomas Clarges, after his death, caused a portrait to be drawn for him, from a person who nearly resembled him. Mr. Walpole informs me, that the only original picture of Shakespeare is that which belonged to Mr. Keck, from whom it passed to Mr. Nicoll, whose only daughter married the marquis of Caernarvon. This agrees with what is said in the Critical Review for Dec. 1770, in relation to the same portrait, which is there also said to have been "painted either by Richard Burbage, or John Taylor the player, the latter of whom left it by will to Sir William Davenant. After his death, Betterton, the actor, bought it; and when he died, Mr. Keck of the Temple gave forty guineas for it to Mrs. Barry the actress." Mr. Walpole adds, that Marshall's print is genuine too, and probably drawn from the life."

" WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE; *W. Marshall sc. Frontispiece to his poems, 1640; 12mo."

" WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE; Arlaud del. Duchange sc. 4to."

" WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE; J. Payne sc. He is represented with a laurel branch in his left hand."

" WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE; L. du Guernier sc."

" WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE; small; with several other heads, before Jacob's " Lives of the Dramatic Poets," 1719; 8vo."

" WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, with the heads of Jonson, &c. h. sh. mezz."

VOL. II. p. 6.

" WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE. Frontispiece to his plays, Folio. 1623. Martin Droeshout sc †."

" This print gives us a truer representation of Shakespeare, than several more pompous memorials of him; if the testimony of Ben Jonson may be credited, to whom he was personally known. Unless we suppose that poet to have sacrificed his veracity to the turn of thought in his epigram (annexed to it) which is very improbable; as he might have been easily contradicted by several that must have remembered so celebrated a person. The author of a letter from Stratford upon Avon, printed in the Gentleman's Magazine, about twenty years since, informs us, that this head is as much like his monumental effigy, as a print can be."

" WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE; R. Earl'm f. large octavo, mezz. neat. Engraved for a new edition of Shakespeare's works."

" This print is said to be from an original by Cornelius Jansen, in the collection of C. Jennens, Esq. but as it is dated in 1610, before Jansen was in England, it is highly probable that it was not painted by him; at least, that he did not paint it as a portrait of Shakespeare."

* The reader will find a faithful copy of this head, prefixed to the will of Shakespeare. There is a small head of Shakespeare in an oval, before his Rape of Lucrece, republished in 12mo. 1655, with the banishment of Tarquin, by John [the son of Philip] Quarles: but it is apparently copied from the first folio. STEEVENS.

† From this print the head of Shakespeare prefixed to our present edition is engraved.

STEEVENS.

" WIL-

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE: his monument at Stratford; under his bust is the following inscription."

" Ingenio Pylium, genio Socratem, arte Maronem,
" Terra tegit, populus mæret, Olympus habet."

" Stay passenger, why dost thou go so fast,
" Read, if thou canst, whom envious death has plac'd
" Within this monument; Shakespeare, with whom
" Quick nature dy'd; whose name doth deck the tomb
" Far more than cost; since all that he has writ
" Leaves living art but page to serve his wit."

Ob. An^o. Dni. 1616. Æt. 53.

" Vertue sc. small b. sh."

" His monument is also done in mezz. by Miller."

" WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE: his monument in Westminster Abbey; two prints b. sh."

" In one of these prints, instead of The cloud-capt towers, &c. is the following inscription on a scroll, to which he points with his finger:

" Thus Britain lov'd me, and preserv'd my fame

" Pure from a Barber's or a Benson's name.

A. POPE.

" This monument was erected in 1741, by the direction of the Earl of Burlington, Dr. Mead, Mr. Pope, and Mr. Martin. Mr. Fleetwood and Mr. Rich, gave each of them a benefit towards it, from one of Shakespeare's own plays. It was executed by Scheemaker, after a design of Kent*."

* " On the monument is inscribed—Amor publicus posuit. Dr. Mead objected to the word amor, as not occurring in old classical inscriptions; but Mr. Pope, and the other gentlemen concerned, insisting that it should stand, Dr. Mead yielded the point saying, Omnia vincit amor, et nos cedamus amori. .

This anecdote was communicated by Mr. Lort, late Greek professor of Cambridge, who had it from Dr. Mead himself."

Ancient and Modern Commendatory VERSES on SHAKESPEARE.

Upon the Effigies of my worthy Friend,
the Author Master WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, and his Works.

Spectator, this life's shadow is;—to see
The truer image, and a livelier he,
Turn reader: but observe his comick vein,
Laugh; and proceed next to a tragick strain,
Then weep: so,—when thou find'st two contraries,
Two different passions from thy rapt soul rise,— Say, who alone effect such wonders could)
Rare Shakespeare to the life thou dost behold. B. J.

To the Memory of my Beloved,
the Author Mr WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, and what he hath left us.

To draw no envy, Shakespeare, on thy name,
Am I thus ample to thy book, and fame;
While I confess thy writings to be such,
As neither man, nor muse, can praise too much;
'Tis true, and all men's suffrage: but these ways
Were not the paths I meant unto thy praise:
For feeblest ignorance on these may light,
Which, when it sounds at best, but echoes right;
Or blind affection, which doth ne'er advance
The truth, but gropes, and urgeth all by chance;
Or crafty malice might pretend this praise,
And think to ruin where it seem'd to raise:
These are as some infamous bawd, or whore,
Should praise a matron; what could hurt her more?
But thou art proof against them; and, indeed,
Above the ill fortune of them, or the need:
I, therefore, will begin:—Soul of the age,
The applause, delight, the wonder of our stage,
My Shakespeare, rise! I will not lodge thee by Chaucer, or Spenser; or bid Beaumont lie

A little

A little further, to make thee a room * :
 Thou art a monument, without a tomb;
 And art alive still, while thy book doth live,
 And we have wits to read, and praise to give.
 That I not mix thee so, my brain excuses;
 I mean, with great but disproportion'd muses:
 For if I thought my judgment were of years,
 I should commit thee surely with thy peers;
 And tell—how far thou didst our Lilly † outshine,
 Or sporting Kyd ‡, or Marlow's mighty line §.

And

* This and the next lines have reference to the following epigraph on Shakespear, written by Dr. Donne, and printed among his poems:

“ Renowned Spenser, lie a thought more nigh
 “ To learned Chaucer, and rare Beaumont lie
 “ A little nearer Spenser, to make room
 “ For Shakespear in your threefold, fourfold tomb.
 “ To lie all four in one bed make a shift,
 “ Until doomsday; for hardly will a fifth “ Betwixt this day and that, by fates be slain,
 “ For whom your curtains need be drawn again,
 “ But if precedency in death doth bar
 “ A fourth place in your sacred sepulchre,
 “ Under this curled marble of thine own,
 “ Sleep, rare tragedian; Shakespear, sleep alone!
 “ Thy unmolested peace, in an unhar'd cave,
 “ Possess as lord, not tenant of thy grave;
 “ That, unto us, and others it may be “ Honour, hereafter to be laid by thee!”

STEEVENS.

† Lilly wrote nine plays during the reign of Q. Eliz. viz. Alexander and Campaspe, T. C; Endymion, C; Galatea, C; Love his Metamorphosis, Dram. Past; Maid her Metamorphosis, C; Mother Bombe, C; Mydas, C; Sappho and Phao, C; and Woman in the Moon, C. To the pedantry of this author perhaps we are indebted for the first attempt to polish and reform our language. See his Euphuus and his England.

STEEVENS.

‡ — or sporting Kyd. It appears from Heywood's Astor's Vindication that Thomas Kyd was the author of the Spanish Tragedy. The late Mr. Hawkins was of opinion that Soliman and Perseda was by the same hand. The only piece however, which has descended to us, even with the initial letters of his name affixed to it, is Pompey the Great his fair Cornelia's Tragedy, which was first published in 1594, and, with some alteration in the title-page, again in 1595. This is no more than a translation from Robert Garnier, a French poet, who distinguished himself during the reigns

And though thou hadst small Latin, and less Greek,—
 From thence to honour thee, I would not seek
 For names; but call forth thundring Æschylus,
 Euripides, and Sophocles, to us,
 Pacuvius, Accius, him of Cordova dead;
 To live again, to hear thy buskin tread
 And shake a stage: or, when thy socks were on,
 Leave thee alone; for the comparison
 Of all, that insolent Greece, or haughty Rome,
 Sent forth, or since did from their ashes come.
 Triumph, my Britain! thou hast one to show,
 To whom all scenes of Europe homage owe.
 He was not of an age, but for all time;
 And all the muses still were in their prime,
 When like Apollo he came forth to warm
 Our ears, or like a Mercury to charm.
 Nature herself was proud of his designs,
 And joy'd to wear the dressing of his lines;
 Which were so richly spun, and woven so fit,
 As, since, she will vouchsafe no other wit:
 The merry Greek, tart Aristophanes,
 Neat Terence, witty Plautus, now not please;
 But antiquated and deserted lie,
 As they were not of Nature's family.
 Yet must I not give nature all; thy art,
 My gentle Shakespeare, must enjoy a part:—
 For, though the poet's matter nature be,
 His art doth give the fashion: and that he,
 Who casts to write a living line, must sweat,
 (Such as thine are) and strike a second heat
 Upon the Muses' anvil; turn the same,
 (And himself with it) that he thinks to frame;
 Or, for the laurel, he may gain a scorn,—
 For a good poet's made, as well as born:

reigns of Charles IX. Henry III. and Henry IV. and died at Mans in 1602, in the 56th year of his age. STEEVENS.

§ — or Marlowe's mighty line.] Marlowe was a performer as well as an author. His contemporary Heywood calls him the best of poets. He wrote six tragedies, viz. Dr. Faustus's Tragical History; K. Edward II; Jew of Malta; Lust's Dominion; Mas-siacre of Paris; and Tamburlaine the Great, in two parts. He likewise joined with Nash in writing Dido Queen of Carthage, and had begun a translation of Musæus's Hero and Leander, which was finished by Chapman, and published in 1606. STEEVENS.

And

And such wert thou : Look, how the father's face
Lives in his issue; even so the race
Of Shakespeare's mind, and manners, brightly shines
In his well-torned and true-filed lines;
In each of which he seems to shake a lance,
As brandish'd at the eyes of ignorance.
Sweet swan of Avon, what a sight it were,
To see thee in our waters yet appear;
And make those flights upon the banks of Thames;
That so did take Eliza, and our James!
But stay; I see thee in the hemisphere
Advanc'd, and made a constellation there:—
Shine forth, thou star of poets; and with rage,
Or influence, chide, or cheer, the drooping stage;
Which, since thy flight from hence, hath mourn'd like night,
And despairs day, but by thy volume's light!

BEN JONSON*.

Upon

* ——— extinctus amabitur idem.

This observation of Horace was never more completely verified than by the posthumous applause which Ben Jonson has bestowed on Shakespeare:

——— the gracious Duncan

Was pitied of Macbeth:—marry, he was dead.

Let us now compare the present clogium of old Ben with such of his other sentiments as have reached posterity.

In April 1748, when the Lover's Melancholy by Ford, (a friend and contemporary of Shakespeare) was revived for a benefit, the following letter appeared in the General, now the Public Advertiser.

‘ — It is hoped that the following gleaning of theatrical history will readily obtain a place in your paper. It is taken from a pamphlet written in the reign of Charles I. with this quaint title, “Old Ben's Light Heart made heavy by Young John's Melancholy Lover;” and as it contains some historical anecdotes and altercations concerning Ben Jonson, Ford, Shakespeare, and the Lover's Melancholy, it is imagined that a few extracts from it at this juncture, will not be unentertaining to the public.’

‘ Those who have any knowledge of the theatre in the reigns of James and Charles the First, must know, that Ben Jonson, from great critical language, which was then the portion but of very few, his merit as a poet, and his constant association with men of letters, did, for a considerable time, give law to the stage.’

‘ Ben was by nature splenetic and sour; with a share of envy, (for every anxious genius has some) more than was warrantable in society. By education rather critically than politely learned; which swell'd

Upon the Lines, and Life, of the famous Scenick Poet, Master WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE.

Those hands, which you so clapt, go now and wring,
You Britains brave; for done are Shakespeare's days;
His days are done, that made the dainty plays,
Which made the globe of heaven and earth to ring:
Dry'd

swell'd his mind into an ostentatious pride of his own works, and an overbearing inexorable judgment of his contemporaries."

"This rais'd him many enemies, who towards the close of his life endeavoured to dethrone this tyrant, as the pamphlet stiles him, out of the dominion of the theatre. And what greatly contributed to their design, was the slights and malignances which the rigid Ben too frequently threw out against the lovely Shakespeare, whose fame since his death, as appears by the pamphlet, was grown too great for Ben's envy either to bear with or sound."

"It would greatly exceed the limits of your paper to set down all the contempts and invectives which were uttered and written by Ben, and are collected and produced in this pamphlet, as unanswerable and flaming evidences to prove his ill-nature and ingratitude to Shakespeare, who first introduced him to the theatre and fame."

"But though the whole of these invective cannot be set down at present, some few of the heads may not be disagreeable, which are as follow."

"That he man had imagination and wit none could deny, but that they were ever guided by true judgment in the rules and conduct of a piece, none could with justice assert, both being ever servile to raise the laughter of fools and the wonder of the ignorant. That he was a good poet only in part—being ignorant of all dramatic laws,—had little Latin—less Greek—and speaking of plays, &c.

- 'To make a child new swaddled, to proceed
- 'Man, and then shoot up, in one beard and weed,
- 'Past threescore years: or, with three rusty swords,
- 'And help of some few foot and half foot words,
- 'Fight over York and Lancaster's long jars,
- 'And in the tiring-house bring wounds to scars.
- 'He rather prays you will be pleas'd to see
- 'One such to-day, as other plays should be;
- 'Where neither chorus waits you o'er the seas, &c."

"This, and such like behaviour, brought Ben at last from being the lawgiver of the theatre to be the ridiculous of it, being personally introduced there in several pieces, to the satisfaction of the public,
who

Dry'd is that vein, dry'd is the Thespian spring,
 Turn'd all to tears, and Phœbus clouds his rays;
 That corpse, that coffin, now bestick those bays,
 Which crown'd him poet first, then poets' king. If who are ever fond of encouraging personal ridicule, when the follies and vices of the object are supposed to deserve it.

But what wounded his pride and fame most sensibly, was the preference which the public and most of his contemporary wits, gave to Ford's LOVER'S MELANCHOLY, before his NEW INN OR LIGHT HEART. They were both brought on in the same week and on the same stage; where Ben's was damn'd, and Ford's received with uncommon applause: and what made this circumstance still more galling, was, that Ford was at the head of the partisans who supported Shakespeare's fame against Ben Jonson's invectives.

This so incensed old Ben, that as an everlasting stigma upon his audience, he prefixed this title to his play — “The New Inn or Light Heart. A comedy, as it was never acted, but most negligently play'd by some, the King's idle servants; and more squeamishly beheld and censur'd by others, the King's foolish subjects.” This title is followed by an abusive preface upon the audience and reader.

Immediately upon this, he wrote his memorable ode against the public, beginning “Come leave the loathed stage,

“And the more loathsome age, &c.”

The revenge he took against Ford, was to write an epigram on him as a plagiarist.

“Playwright, by chance, hearing toys I had writ, “Cry'd to my face—they were th' elixir of wit.

“And I must now believe him, for to-day

“Five of my jests, then stoln, pass'd him a play.”

Alluding to a character in the Ladies Trial, which Ben says Ford stole from him.

The next charge against Ford was, that the Lower's Melancholy was not his own, but purloined from Shakespeare's papers, by the connivance of Hemings and Condell, who in conjunction with Ford, had the revision of them.

The malice of this charge is gravely refuted, and afterwards laughed at in many verses and epigrams, the best of which are those that follow, with which I shall close this theatrical extract.

“To my worthy friend, John Ford.

“'Tis said, from Shakespeare's mine, your play you drew,

“What need?—when Shakespeare still survives in you:

“But grant it were from his vast treasury rest,

“That plund'red Ben ne'er made so rich a thesi.”

Thomas May.
 Upon

222 POEMS upon the AUTHOR.

If tragedies might any prologue have,
 All those he made would scarce make one to this;
 Where fame, now that he gone is to the grave,
 (Death's publick tiring-house) the Nuntius is:
 For, though his line of life went soon about,
 The life yet of his lines shall never out.

HUGH HOLLAND.

To the Memory of the deceased Author, Master W. SHAKESPEARE.

Shakespeare, at length thy pious fellows give
 The world thy works; thy works, by which outlive

Upon Ben Jonson, and his Zany, Tom Randolph.

- " Quoth Ben to Tom, the Lover's stole,
- " 'Tis Shakespeare's every word;
- " Indeed, says Tom, upon the whole,
- " 'Tis much too good for Ford.
- " Thus Ben and Tom the dead still praise,
- " The living to decry;
- " For none must dare to wear the bays,
- " Till Ben and Tom both die.
- " Even Avon's swan could not escape
- " These letter-tyrant elves;
- " They on his fame contriv'd a rape,
- " To raise their pedant selves.
- " But after times with full consent
- " This truth will all acknowledge,—
- " Shakespeare and Ford from heaven were sent,
- " But Ben and Tom from college. Endymion Porter."

Mr. Macklin the comedian was the author of this letter; but the pamphlet which furnished his materials, was lost in its passage from Ireland.

The following stanza, from a copy of verses by Shirley, prefixed to Ford's Love's Sacrifice, 1633, alludes to the same dispute, and is apparently addressed to Ben Jonson.

- " Look here thou that hast malice to the stage,
- " And impudence enough for the whole age;
- " Voluminously ignorant! be next
- " To read this tragedy, and thy owne be next."

STEEVENS.

- See Wood's Athenæ Oxon. edit. 1721, vol. I. p. 583.

Thy

Thy tomb, thy name must : when that stone is rent,
 And time dissolves thy Stratford monument,
 Here we alive shall view thee still; this book,
 When brass and marble fade, shall make thee look
 Fresh to all ages; when posterity
 Shall loath what's new, think all is prodigy
 That is not Shakespeare's, every line, each verse,
 Here shall revive, redeem thee from thy herse.
 Nor fire, nor cank'ring age—as Naso said
 Of his,—thy wit-fraught book shall once invade:
 Nor shall I e'er believe or think thee dead,
 Though mist, until our bankrout stage be sped
 (Impossible) with some new strain to out-do
 Passions of Juliet, and her Romeo;
 Or till I hear a scene more nobly take,
 Than when thy half-sword parlying Romans spake :
 Till these, till any of thy volume's rest,
 Shall with more fire more feeling be express'd,
 Be sure, our Shakespeare, thou canst never die,
 But, crown'd with laurel, live eternally.

L. DIGGES*.

To the Memory of Master W. SHAKESPEARE.

We wonder'd, Shakespeare, that thou went'st so soon
 From the world's stage to the grave's tyring-room:
 We thought thee dead; but this thy printed worth
 Tells thy spectators, that thou went'st but forth
 To enter with applause: an actor's art
 Can die, and live to act a second part;
 That's but an exit of mortality,
 This a re-entrance to a plaudite.

J. M.†

On worthy Master SHAKESPEARE, and his Poems.

A mind reflecting ages past, whose clear
 And equal surface can make things appear,

* See Wood's Athenæ Oxonienses, vol. I. p. 599, and 600, edit. 1721.

† Perhaps John Marston.

Distant a thousand years, and represent
 Them in their lively colours, just extent :
 To outrun hasty time, retrieve the fates,
 Rowl back the heavens, blow ope the iron gates
 Of death and Lethæ, where confused lie
 Great heaps of ruinous mortality :
 In that deep dusky dungeon, to discern
 A royal ghost from churls; by art to learn
 The physiognomy of shades, and give Them sudden birth, wond'ring how oft they live;
 What story coldly tells, what poets feign
 At second hand, and picture without brain,
 Senseless and soul-less shews: To give a stage,—
 Ample, and true with life,— voice, action, age,
 As Plato's year, and new scene of the world,
 Them unto us, or us to them had hurl'd :
 To raise our ancient sovereigns from their herse,
 Make kings his subjects; by exchanging verse
 Enlive their pale trunks, that the present age
 Joys in their joy, and trembles at their rage :
 Yet so to temper passion, that our ears
 Take pleasure in their pain, and eyes in tears
 Both smile and weep; fearful at plots so sad,
 Then laughing at our fear; abus'd, and glad
 To be abus'd; affected with that truth
 Which we perceive is false, pleas'd in that ruth
 At which we start, and, by elaborate play,
 'Tortur'd and tickl'd; by a crab-like way
 Time past made pastime, and in ugly sort Disgorging up his ravin for our sport:—
 —While the plebeian imp, from lofty throne,
 Creates and rules a world, and works upon
 Mankind by secret engines; now to move
 A chilling pity, then a rigorous love;
 To strike up and stroak down, both joy and ire;
 To steer the affections; and by heavenly fire,
 Mold us anew, stoln from ourselves:—
 This,—and much more, which cannot be express'd
 But by himself, his tongue, and his own breast,—
 Was Shakspear's freehold; which his cunning brain
 Improv'd by favour of the nine-fold train;—
 —the buskin'd muse, the comelk queen, the grand-louder tone of Clio, nimble hand

And

And nimbler foot of the melodious pair,
The silver-voiced lady, the most fair
Calliope, whose speaking silence daunts,
And she whose praise the heavenly body chants.

These jointly woo'd him, envying one another;—
Obey'd by all as spouse, but lov'd as brother;—
And wrought a curious robe, of sable grave,
Fresh green, and pleasant yellow, red most brave,
And constant blue, rich purple, guiltless white,
The lowly russet, and the scarlet bright:
Branch'd and embroider'd like the painted spring;
Each leaf match'd with a flower, and each string
Of golden-wire, each line of silk: there run
Italian works, whose thread the sisters spun;
And there did sing, or seem to sing, the choice
Birds of a foreign note and various voice:
Here hangs a mossy rock; there plays a fair
But chiding fountain, purled: not the air,
Nor clouds, nor thunder, but were living drawn;
Not out of common tiffany or lawn,
But fine materials, which the muscs know,
And only know the countries where they grow.

Now, when they could no longer him enjoy,
In mortal garments pent,—death may destroy,¹
They say, his body; but his verse shall live,
And more than nature takes our hands shall give:
In a less volume, but more strongly bound,
Shakespeare shall breathe and speak; with laurel crown'd,
Which never fades; fed with ambrosial meat,
In a well-lined vesture, rich, and neat:
So with this robe they cloath him, bid him wear it;
For time shall never stain, nor envy tear it.

The friendly Admirer of his Endowments,

J. M. S.

Part of Shirley's Prologue to The Sisters.

And if you leave us too, we cannot thrive,
I'll promise neither play nor poet live
'Till ye come back; think what you do, you see
What audience we have, what company
To 'hakespeare comes, whose mirth did once beguile
Dull hours, and buskin'd, made even sorrow smile:

VOL. I.

[P]

,So

226 POEMS upon the AUTHOR,

So lovely were the wounds, that men would say
They could endure the bleeding a whole day.

Extract from Michael Drayton's "Elegy to Henry Reynolds, Esq. of Poets and Poesy."

Shakespear, thou hadst as smooth a comic vein,
Fitting the sock, and in thy natural brain
As strong conception, and as clear a rage
As any one that traffick'd with the stage.

To Master W. SHAKESPEARE.

Shakespeare, that nimble Mercury thy braine
Lulls many hundred Argus-eyes asleepe,
So fit for all thou fashioneſt thy vaine,
At th' horſe-foot fountaine thou haſt drunk full deepe,
Vertue's or vice's theme to thee all one is;
Who loves chaſte life, there's Lucrece for a teacher:
Who liſt read luſt, there's Venus and Adonis,
The modell of a moſt laſcivious leacher.
Beſides, in plaies thy wit winds like Meander,
When needy new compoſers borrow more
Than Terence doth from Plautus or Menander:
But to praiſe thee aright, I want thy ſtore.
Then let thine owne works thine owne worth upraiſe,
And help t' adorne thee with deſerved baies.

Epigram 92, in an ancient collection, entitled Run and a great Caſt, 4to. by Tho. Freeman, 1614.

An Epitaph on the admirable dramatiſtick Poet, W. SHAKESPEARE.

What needs my Shakeſpeare for his honour'd bones,
The labour of an age in piled ſtones;
Or that his hallow'd reliques ſhould be hid
Under a ſtar-ypointing pyramid?
Dear ſon of memory, great heir of fame,
What need'ſt thou ſuch weak witneſſ of thy name?
Thou, in our wonder and aſtoniſhment,
Haſt built thyſelf a live-long monument:

For

For whilst, to the shame of slow-endeavouring art,
Thy easy numbers flow; and that each heart
Hath, from the leaves of thy unvalu'd book,
Those Delphick lines with deep impression took;
Then thou, our fancy of itself bereaving,
Dost make us marble with too much conceiving;
And, so sepulcher'd, in such pomp dost lie,
That kings, for such a tomb, would wish to die.

JOHN MILTON.

See, my lov'd Britons, see your Shakespeare rise,
An awful ghost, confess'd to human eyes!
Unnam'd, methinks, distinguish'd I had been
From other shades, by this eternal green,
About whose wreaths the vulgar poets strive,
And with a touch their wither'd bays revive.
Untaught, unpractis'd, in a barbarous age,
I found not, but created first the stage:
And if I drain'd no Greek or Latin store,
'Twas, that my own abundance gave me more:
On foreign trade I needed not rely,
Like fruitful Britain rich without supply.

Dryden's Prologue to his alteration of Troilus and Cressida.

Shakespeare, who (taught by none) did first impart
To Fletcher wit, to labouring Jonson art?
He, monarch-like, gave those his subjects law,
And is that nature which they paint and draw.
Fletcher reach'd that which on his heights did grow,
Whilst Jonson crept and gather'd all below.
This did his love, and this his mirth digest:
One imitates him most, the other best.
If they have since out-writ all other men,
'Tis with the drops that fell from Shakespeare's pen.

Dryden's Prologue to his Alteration of the Tempest.

Our Shakespeare wrote too in an age as blest,
The happiest poet of his time, and best;
A gracious prince's favour cheer'd his muse,
A constant favour he ne'er fear'd to lose;

[P 2]

Therefore

228 POEMS upon the AUTHOR.

Therefore he wrote with fancy unconfin'd,
And thoughts that were immortal as his mind.

Otway's Prologue to Caius Marius.

Shakespeare, whose genius to itself a law,
Could men in every height of nature draw.

Rowe's Prologue to the Ambitious Stepmother.

Shakespeare (whom you and every play-house bill Style the divine, the matchless, what you will)
For gain, not glory, wing'd his roving flight,
And grew immortal in his own despight.

Pope's Imitation of Horace's Epistle to Augustus.

Shakespeare, the genius of our isle, whose mind
(The universal mirror of mankind)
Express'd all images, enrich'd the stage,
But sometimes stoop'd to please a barb'rous age.
When his immortal bays began to grow,
Rude was the language, and the humour low.
He, like the god of day, was always bright;
But rolling in its course, his orb of light
Was fully'd and obscur'd, tho' soaring high,
With spots contracted from the nether sky.
But whither is th' advent'rous muse betray'd?
Forgive her rashness, venerable shade!
May spring with purple flow'rs perfume thy urn,
And Avon with his greens thy grave adorn:
Be all thy faults, whatever faults there be,
Imputed to the times, and not to thee!

Fenton's Epistle to Southerne, 1711.

An Inscription for a Monument of SHAKESPEARE,

O youths and virgins: O declining eld:
O pale misfortune's slaves: O ye who dwell
Unknown with humble quiet; ye who wait
In courts, or fill the golden seat of kings:

O sons

O sons of sport and pleasure: O thou wretch
That weep'st for jealous love, or the sore wounds
Of conscious guilt, or death's rapacious hand
Which left thee void of hope: O ye who roam
In exile; ye who through the embattled field
Seek bright renown; or who for nobler palms
Contend, the leaders of a public cause;
Approach: behold this marble. Know ye not
The features? Hath not oft his faithful tongue
Told you the fashion of your own estate,
The secrets of your bosom? Here then, round
His monument with reverence while you stand,
Say to each other: "This was Shakespeare's form;
" Who walk'd in every path of human life,
" Felt every passion; and to all mankind
" Doth now, will ever that experience yield
" Which his own genius only could acquire."

AKINSIDE.

From the same Author's Pleasures of Imagination, Book 3.

——— when lightening fires
The arch of heaven, and thunders rock the ground,
When furious whirlwinds rend the howling air,
And ocean, groaning from his lowest bed,
Heaves his tempestuous billows to the sky;
Amid the general uproar, while below
The nations tremble, Shakespeare looks abroad
From some high cliff, superior, and enjoys
The elemental war.——

——— For lofty sense,
Creative fancy, and inspection keen
Through the deep windings of the human heart,
Is not wild Shakespeare thine and nature's boast?

Thomson's Summer.

When learning's triumph o'er her barb'rous foes
First rear'd the stage, immortal Shakespeare rose;
Each change of many-colour'd life he drew,
Exhausted worlds, and then imagin'd new:

235 POEMS upon the AUTHOR.

Existence saw him spurn her bounded reign,
And panting time toil'd after him in vain:
His pow'rful strokes presiding truth impress'd,
And unresisted passion storm'd the breast.

Prologue at the opening of Drury-Lane Theatre in 1747.
By Dr. Samuel Johnson.

What are the lays of artful Addison,
Coldly correct, to Shakespeare's warblings wild?
Whom on the winding Avon's willow'd banks
Fair Fancy found, and bore the smiling babe
To a close cavern: (All the shepherds shew
The sacred place, whence with religious awe
They hear, returning from the field at eve,
Strange whisp'ring of sweet musick thro' the air)
Here, as with honey gathered from the rock,
She fed the little prattler, and with songs
Oft sooth'd his wond'ring ears, with deep delight
On her soft lap he sat, and caught the sounds.

The Enthusiast, or the Lover of Nature, a Poem, by the Rev. Joseph Warton.

From the Rev. Thomas Warton's Address to the Queen on her Marriage.

Here, boldly mark'd with every living hue,
Nature's unbounded portrait Shakespeare drew:
But chief, the dreadful groupe of human woes
The daring artist's tragic pencil chose;
Explor'd the pangs that rend the royal breast,
Those wounds that lurk beneath the tissued vest.

Monody, written near Stratford upon Avon.

Avon, thy rural views, thy pastures wild,
The willows that o'erhang thy twilight edge,
Their boughs entangling with th' embattled ledge;
Thy brink with watery foliage quaintly fring'd,
Thy surface with reflected verdure ting'd;
Sooth me with many a pensive pleasure mild.

But

But while I muse, that here the Bard Divine
 Whose sacred dust yon high-arch'd isles inclose;
 Where the tall windows rise in stately fows,
 Above th' embowering shade,
 Here first, at Fancy's fairy-circled shrine;
 Of daisies pied his infant offering made;
 Here playful yet, in stripling years unripe,
 Fram'd of thy reeds a shrill and artless pipe;
 Sudden thy beauties, Avon, all are fled,
 As at the waving of some magic wand;
 An holy trance my charmed spirit wings,
 And awful shapes of leaders and of kings,
 People the busy mead,
 Like spectres swarming to the wifard's hall;
 And slowly pace, and point with trembling hand
 The wounds ill-cover'd by the purple pall.
 Before me Pity seems to stand
 A weeping mourner, smote with anguish sore,
 To see Misfortune rend in frantic mood
 His robe, with regal woes embroider'd o'er.
 Pâle Terror leads the visionary band,
 And sternly shakes his sceptre, dropping blood.

By the same,

Far from the sun and summer gale,
 In thy green lap was Nature's darling laid,
 What time, where lucid Avon stray'd,
 To him the mighty mother did unveil
 Her awful face: The dauntless child
 Stretch'd forth his little arms, and smil'd.
 This pencil take (she said) whose colours clear
 Richly paint the vernal year:
 Thine too these golden keys, immortal boy!
 This can unlock the gates of joy;
 Of horror that, and thrilling fears,
 Or ope the sacred source of sympathetic tears.

Gray's Ode on the Progress of Poetry.

Next Shakespeare sat, irregularly great,
 And in his hand a magick rod did hold,
 Which visionary beings did create,
 And turn the foulest dross to purest gold:

[P 4]

Whatever

232 POEMS upon the AUTHOR:

Whatever spirits rove in earth or air,
Or bad, or good, obey his dread command;
To his behests these willingly repair,
Those aw'd by terrors of his magic wand,
The which not all their powers united might withstand.

Lloyd's Progress of Envy, 1757.

Oh, where's the bard, who at one view
Could look the whole creation through,
Who travers'd all the human heart,
Without recourse to Grecian art?
He scorn'd the rules of imitation,
Of altering, pilfering, and translation,
Nor painted horror, grief, or rage,
From models of a former age;
The bright original he took,
And tore the leaf from nature's book.
'Tis Shakespeare —

Lloyd's Shakespeare, a Poem.

In the first seat, in robe of various dyes,
A noble wildness flashing from his eyes,
Sat Shakespeare.— In one hand a wand he bore,
For mighty wonders fam'd in days of yore;
The other held a globe, which to his will Obedient turn'd, and own'd a master's skill:
Things of the noblest kind his genius drew,
And look'd through nature at a single view:
A loose he gave to his unbounded soul,
And taught new lands to rise, new seas to roll;
Call'd into being scenes unknown before,
And, passing nature's bounds, was something more.

Churchill's Rosciad.

Names

Names of the original Actors in the Plays of Shakespeare: From the Folio, 1623.

William Shakespeare.
 Richard Burbadge.
 John Hemmings.
 Augustine Phillips.
 William Kempe.
 Thomas Poope.
 George Bryan.
 Henry Condell.
 William Slye.
 Richard Cowly.
 John Lowine.
 Samuel Crosse.
 Alexander Cooke.

Samuel Gilburne.
 Robert Armin *.
 William Ostler.
 Nathan. Field †.
 John Underwood.
 Nicholas Tooley.
 William Ecclestone.
 Joseph Taylor.
 Robert Benfield.
 Robert Goughe.
 Richard Robinson.
 John Shanke.
 John Rice.

It may appear singular that the name of the celebrated Alleyn (founder of Dulwich College) should not occur in this list of performers. But Alleyn was master of the Fortune playhouse, which he is said either to have built or re-built; and therefore might have no connection with other theatres where the plays of Shakespeare were exhibited. We learn however from Langbaine, that he had been "an ornament to Black Friars." John Wilson, who appears to have acted in our author's Much Ado about Nothing, is likewise excluded from this catalogue; though Meres, in the Second Part of his Wits' Common-wealth, 1598, praising several who were "famous for extemporall verse," says, "Of our Turlion, doctor Case that learned phyfitian thus speaketh in the seventh book and seventeenth chapter of his Politikes; Aristoteles suum Theodoretum laudavit, quendam peritum tragœdiarum actorem; Cicero suum Roscium; nos Angli Tarletonum, in cujus voce & vultu omnes jocosæ affectus, in cujus cerebro capite lepidæ facetiæ habitant. And so is our wittie WILSON, who, for learning and extemporall witte in this facultie, is without compare or compeer, &c."

STEEVENS.

* Author of the Two Maids of Moorclacke, Com. 1609.

† Author of Amends for Ladies, Com. 1639, and Woman is a Weathercock, Com. 1612. He also assisted Massinger in the Fatal Dowry.

A LIST OF SUCH ANCIENT EDITIONS

OF

SHAKESPEARE'S PLAYS,

as have hitherto been met with by his different Editors.

Those marked with Asterisks are in no former Tables; and those which are printed in the Italic character I have never seen.

- | | | |
|------|---|--|
| I. | { | 1. Midsummer Night's Dream, William Shakespeare, 1600, Thomas Fisher. 2. D°. William Shakespeare, 1600, James Roberts: |
| II. | { | 1. Merry Wives of Windsor, William Shakespeare, 1602. T. C. for Arthur Johnson. 2. D°. William Shakespeare, 1619, for D°. 3. D°. William Shakespeare, 1630, T. H. for R. Meighen. |
| III. | { | Much Ado about Nothing, William Shakespeare, 1600; V. S. For Andrew Wise and William Aspley. |
| IV. | { | 1. Merchant of Venice, William Shakespeare, 1600. J. R. for Thomas Heyes. 2. W. Shakespeare, 1600, J. Roberts. 3. D°. William Shakespeare, 1637, M. P. for Laurence Hayes. 4. D°. William Shakespeare, 1652, for William Leake. |
| V. | { | 1. Love's Labour's Lost, William Shakespeare, 1598, W. W. for Cuthbert Burbey. 2. D°. William Shakespeare, 1631, W. S. for John Smethwicke. |

VI.

- VI. { 1. Taming of the Shrew, 1607, V.S. for Nich. Ling.
2. D°. Will. Shakespeare, 1631, W. S. for John Smethwicke.
- *
VII. { 1. King Lear, William Shakespeare, 1608, for Nathaniel Butter.
2. D°. William Shakespeare, 1608, for D°.
3. D°. William Shakespeare, 1655, Jane Bell.
- †
VIII. { 1. King John, 2 Parts, 1591, for Sampson Clarke.
2. D°. W. Sh. 1611, Valentine Simmes, for John Helme.
3. D°. W. Shakespeare, 1622, Aug. Matthewes, for Thomas Dewe.
- IX. { 1. Richard II. 1597, Valentine Simmes for Andrew Wife.
2. Richard II. William Shakespeare, 1598, Valentine Simmes, for Andrew Wife.
3. Do. W. Shakespeare, 1608, W. W. for Matthew Law.
4. D°. William Shakespeare, 1615, for Matthew Law.
5. D°. William Shakespeare, 1634, John Norton.
- *
X. { 1. Henry IV. First Part, 1598, P. S. for Andrew Wife.
2. D°. W. Shakespeare, 1599, S. S. for D°.
3. D°. 1604.
4. D°. 1608, for Matthew Law.
5. D°. W. Shakespeare, 1613, W. W. for D°.
6. D°. William Shakespeare, 1622, T. P. sold by D°.
7. D°. William Shakespeare, 1632, John Norton, sold by William Sheares.
8. D°. William Shakespeare, 1639, John Norton, sold by Hugh Perry.
- XI. { 1. Henry IV. Second Part, William Shakespeare, 1600, V. S. for Andrew Wife and William Aspley.
2. D°. 1600. D°.

† These three are only copies of the spurious play.

XII.

1. Henry V. 1600: Tho. Creede, for T. Millington, and John Busby.
2. D°. 1602, Thomas Creede, for Thomas Pavier.
3. D°. 1608, for T. P.

XIII. XIV.

1. Henry VI. William Shakespeare, 1600, Val. Simmes, for Tho. Millington.
2. D°. William Shakespeare, W. W. for T. Millington, 1600.
3. D°. William Shakespeare, T. P.:

XV.

1. Richard III 1597, Valentine Simmes, for Andrew Wise.
2. D°. William Shakespeare, 1598, Thomas Creede, for D°.
3. D°. William Shakespeare, 1602, Thomas Creede, for D°.
4. D°. William Shakespeare, 1617, Thomas Creede, sold by Matthew Lawe.
5. D°. William Shakespeare, 1622, Thomas Purfoot, sold by D°.
6. D°. William Shakespeare, 1629, John Norton, sold by D°.
7. D°. William Shakespeare, 1634, John Norton.

XVI.

Titus Andronicus, 1611, for Edward White.

XVII.

1. Troilus and Cressida, William Shakespeare, 1609, G. Eld, for R. Bonian and H. Whalley, with a Preface.
2. D°. 1609, for D°.
3. D°. no Date, D°.

XVIII. *

1. Romeo and Juliet, 1597, John Danter.
2. D° 1599, Tho. Creede, for Cuthbert Burby.
3. D° 1609, for John Smethwicke.
4. D°. William Shakespeare, no Date, John Smethwicke.
5. D° William Shakespeare, 1637, R. Young for D°.

XIX.

XIX. *

1. Hamlet, William Shakespeare, J. R. for N. L. 1604.
2. Hamlet, William Shakespeare, 1605, I. R. for N. L.
3. D^o. William Shakespeare, 1611, for John Smethwicke
4. D^o. William Shakespeare, no Date, W. S. for D^o.
5. D^o. William Shakespeare, 1637, R. Young, for D^o.
6. D^o. R. Bentley, 1695.

XX.

1. Othello, William Shakespeare, no Date, Thomas Walkely.
2. D^o. William Shakespeare, 1622, N. O. for Thomas Walkely.
3. D^o. William Shakespeare, 1630, A. M. for Richard Hawkins
4. D^o. William Shakespeare, 1655, for William Leake.

☞ Of all the remaining plays the most authentic edition is the folio 1623; yet that of 1632 is not without value; for though it be in some places more incorrectly printed than the preceding one, it has likewise the advantage of various readings, which are not merely such as reiteration of copies will naturally produce. The curious examiner of Shakespeare's text, who possesses the first of these, ought not to be unfurnished with the second. As to the third and fourth impressions, (which include the seven rejected plays) they are little better than waste paper, for they differ only from the preceding ones by a larger accumulation of errors. I had inadvertently given a similar character of the folio 1632; but take this opportunity of confessing a mistake into which I was led by too implicit a reliance on the assertions of others.

F O L I O E D I T I O N S.

I. Mr. William Shakespeare's Comedies, Histories, and Tragedies. Published according to the true original Copies. 1623 Fol. Isaac Jaggard and Ed. Blount.

II. D^o. 1632. Fol. Tho. Cotes, for Rob. Allot.

III. D^o, 1664. Fol. for P. C.

IV.

IV. D°. 1685. Fol. for H. Herringman, E. Brewster, and R. Bentley.

MODERN EDITIONS.

Octavo, Rowe's, London, 1709. 7 Vols.
 Quarto, Pope's, Ditto, 1723. 6 D°.
 Duodecimo, Pope's, Ditto, 1728. 10 D°.
 Octavo, Theobald's, Ditto, 1733. 7 D°.
 Duodecimo, Theobald's Ditto, 1740, 8 D°.
 Quarto, Hanmer's, Oxford, 1744, 6 D°.
 Octavo, Warburton's, London, 1747, 8 D°.
 Ditto, Johnson's, ditto, 1765, 8 D°.
 Ditto, Steevens's, ditto, 1766, 4 D°.
 Crown 8vo. Capell's, 1768, 10 D°.
 Quarto, Hanmer's, Oxford, 1771, 6 D°.
 Octavo, Johnson and Steevens, London, 1773, 10 D°.
 D°. second Edition, ditto, 1778, 10 D°.

The reader may not be displeased to know the exact sums paid to the different Editors of Shakespeare. The following account is taken from the books of the late Mr. Tonson.

To Mr. Rowe	—	£	36	10	0
Mr Hughes*	—		28	7	0
Mr. Pope	—		217	12	0
Mr. Fenton †	—		30	12	0
Mr. Gay ‡	—		35	19	6
Mr. Whatley §	—		12	0	0
Mr. Theobald	—		652	10	0
Mr. Warburton	—		560	0	0
Dr. Johnson	—
Mr. Capell	—		300	0	0

Of these editions some have passed several times through the press; but only such as vary from each other are here enumerated.

To this list might be added several spurious and mutilated impressions; but as they appear to have been executed without

* For correcting the press and making an index to Mr. Rowe's 12mo edition.

† For assistance to Mr. Pope in correcting the press.

‡ For the same services.

§ For correcting the sheets of Pope's 12mo.

|| Of Mr. Theobald's edition no less than 11360 have been printed.

the

the smallest degree of skill either in the manners or language of the time of Shakespeare; and as the names of their respective editors are prudently concealed, it were useless to commemorate the number of their volumes, or the distinct date of each publication.

Some of our legitimate editions will afford a sufficient specimen of the fluctuation of price in books.—An ancient quarto was sold for six pence; and the folios 1623 and 1632, when first printed, could not have been rated higher than at ten shillings each.—Very lately, one, and two guineas, have been paid for a quarto; the first folio is usually valued at seven or eight: but what price may be expected for it hereafter, is not very easy to be determined, the conscience of Mr. Fox, bookseller in Holborn, having lately permitted him to ask no less than two guineas for two leaves out of a mutilated copy of that impression, though he had several, almost equally defective, in his shop. The second folio is commonly rated at two or three guineas.

At the late Mr. Jacob Tonson's sale, in the year 1767, one hundred and forty copies of Mr. Pope's edition of Shakespeare, in six volumes quarto (for which the subscribers paid six guineas) were disposed of among the booksellers at sixteen shillings per set. Seven hundred and fifty of this edition were printed.

At the same sale, the remainder of Dr. Warburton's edition, in eight volumes 8vo. printed in 1747 (of which the original price was two pounds eight shillings, and the number printed 1000) was sold off: viz. 178 copies, at eighteen shillings each.

On the contrary, Sir Thomas Hanmer's edition, printed at Oxford in 1744, which was first sold for three guineas, had arisen to nine or ten, before it was reprinted.

It appears however from the foregoing catalogue (when all reiterations of legitimate editions are taken into the account, together with five spurious ones printed in Ireland, one in Scotland, one at Birmingham, and four in London, making in the whole thirty-five impressions) that not less than 35,000 copies of our author's works have been dispersed, exclusive of the quartos, single plays, and such as have been altered for the stage. Of the latter, as exact a list as I have been able to form, with the assistance of Mr. Reed of Staple Inn, (than whom no man is more conversant with English publications both ancient and modern, or more willing to assist the literary undertakings of others) will be found in the course of the following pages.

OLD EDITIONS of SHAKESPEARE'S POEMS.

- I. Shakespeare's Poems, 1609, 4to.
- II. D°. 1640. 8vo. Tho. Cotes, sold by John Benson.
- III. Passionate Pilgrim, Poems by D°, 1599, 8vo. small, for W. Jaggard, sold by W. Leake.
- IV. Rape of Lucrece, a Poem, 1594, 4to, Richard Field, for John Harrison.
- V. D°, 1598, 8vo. P. S. for D°.
- VI. D°. 1607, 8vo. N. O. for D°.
- VII. D°. 12mo. (Newly revised) T. S. for R. Jaggard, 1616.
- VIII. Venus and Adonis, a Poem, 1620, 8vo. for J. P.*
- IX. D°. 12mo. by J. H. sold by Francis Coules, 1636.
- X. The Rape of Lucrece, whereunto is annexed the Banishment of Tarquin, by John Quarles, 12mo, 1665.

MODERN EDITIONS.

Shakespeare's Poems, 8vo. for Bernard Lintot, no date.
 ————— 8vo. by Gildon, 1710.
 ————— 4to. and 12mo. by Sewell, 1728.

PLAYS ascribed to SHAKESPEARE, either by the Editors of the Two later Folios, or by the Compilers of ancient Catalogues.

1. Arraignment of Paris, 1584 †, Henry Marsh.
2. Birth of Merlin, 1662, Tho. Johnson, for Francis Kirkman and Henry Marsh.
3. Edward III ‡. 1596, for Cuthbert Burby. 2. 1599, Simon Stafford, for D°
4. Fair Em §, 1631, for John Wright.
5. Locrine, 1595 ||, Thomas Creede.

6. London

* See the following Extract of Entries in the books of the Stationers' Company.

† It appears from an epistle prefixed to Greene's Arcadia, that the Arraignment of Paris was written by George Peele, the author of King David and Fair Bethsabe, &c. 1599.*

‡ See the following extracts from the books at Stationers' hall.

§ Fair Em] In Mr. Garrick's Collection, is a volume, formerly belonging to King Charles I. which is lettered on the back, SHAKESPEARE, vol. I. This vol. consists of Fair Em, The Merry Devil, &c. Mucedorus, &c. There is no other authority for ascribing Fair Em to our author.

|| The title-page of this play offers no sufficient evidence to convict Shakespeare of having been its author, as it only says, "newly set forth, overseene and corrected by W. S." Supposing W. S. to have been meant for W. Shakespeare; as the manager of a theatre,

6. London Prodigal, 1605.
7. Merry Devil of Edmonton, 1608, Henry Ballard, for Arthur Johnson. 2. 1617. G. Eld, for D°. 3. 1626, A. M. for Francis Falkner. 4. 1631. T. P. for D°. 5. 1655, for W. Gilbertson.
8. Mucedorus †. 1598, for William Jones. 2. 1610, for D°. 3. 1615. N. O. for D°. 4. 1639, for John Wright. 5. No Date, for Francis Coles. 6. 1668, E. O. for D°.
9. Pericles †, 1609, for Henry Goffson. 2. 1619, for T. P.
3. 1638. J. N. for R. B. 4. 1635. Tho. Cotes.
10. Puritan, 1600 §, and 1607. G. Eld.
11. Sir John Oldcastle, 1600, for T. P.
12. Thomas Lord Cromwell, 1613. Tho. Snodham.
13. Two Noble Kinsmen, 1634, Tho. Cotes, for John Waterfon.
14. Yorkshire Tragedy, 1608 ||. R. B. for T. Pavyer. D°. 1619. for T. P.

theatre, or as a friend to the author, he might have condescended to correct what his genius could not have stoop'd to write. This piece likewise exhibits several antiquated and affected words never used by Shakespeare; as lore for lesson, floure for tumult, virent for green, and ocufion for slaughter; besides equalize, rofiall, ma-vortial, Eos, Fames (a personification of Hunger,) Puripblegeton, macerate, venercan, fufpires (for fighs subst.) frumps, arcane for secret, feet for wite, exequies for obsequies, &c. It contains also a Spanish quotation and many Latin verses; and is full of those inexplicable dumb shewes which Shakespeare has ridiculed in Hamlet.

Whoever was the author of Locrine, it could not have been printed till after the 17th of November 1595, when Queen Elizabeth entered into the 38th year of her reign, as at the conclusion of it is the following prayer for her Majesty :

“ So let us pray for that renowned Maid

“ That eight and thirty yeas the sceptre sway'd, &c.”

The story of this play is taken from Gower, or in part from the ancient romance of Kynge Appolyn of Thyre, which was translated from the French by Robert Copland, who had worked under Caxton. I have a copy of it printed by Wynkyn de Worde in 1510.

* See the following extracts from the books at Stationers' hall.

† See, &c.

‡ Ben Jonson, in an ode published at the end of his New Inn, has the following farcasm on this piece :

“ No doubt some mouldy tale

“ Like Pericles, and stale

“ As the shrieves crusts, &c.” —

§ See, &c.

|| See, &c.

VOL. I.

[Q]

LIST

LIST of PLAYS alter'd from SHAKESPEARE.

INVENIES ETIAM DISJECTI MEMBRA POETAE.

Tempest.

The Tempest, or the Enchanted Island. A Comedy, acted in Dorset Garden. By Sir W. Davenant and Dryden.—4to.—1669.

The Tempest, an Opera taken from Shakespeare. As it is performed at the Theatre Royal in Drury Lane. By Mr. Garrick.—8vo.—1756.

Two Gentlemen of Verona.

The Two Gentlemen of Verona. A Comedy written by Shakespeare, with alterations and additions, as it is performed at the Theatre Royal in Drury Lane. By Mr. Victor.—8vo.—1763.

Merry Wives of Windsor.

The Comical Gallant, or the Amours of Sir John Falstaffe. A Comedy, as it is acted at the Theatre Royal in Drury Lane, by his Majesties Servants. By Mr. Dennis. 4to.—1702.

Measure for Measure.

The Law against Lovers, by Sir William Davenant.—Fol.—1673.

Measure for Measure, or Beauty the best Advocate. As it is acted at the Theatre in Lincolns Inn Fields; written originally by Mr. Shakespeare, and now very much altered; with additions of several Entertainments of Musick. By Mr. Gildon.—4to.—1700.

Much Ado about Nothing.

The Law against Lovers. By Sir W. Davenant.—Fol.—1673.

The Universal Passion. A Comedy as it is acted at the Theatre Royal in Drury Lane, by his Majesties Servants. By James Miller.—8vo.—1737.

Love's Labour's Lost.

The Students, a Comedy altered from Shakespeare's Love's Labour's Lost, and adapted to the stage.—8vo.—1762.

Midsummer Night's Dream.

The Humours of Bottom the Weaver, by Robert Cox. 4to.

The ~~W. King~~ Queen, an Opera, represented at the Queen's Theatre by their Majesties Servants.—4to.—1692.

Pyramus and Thisbe, a Mock Opera, written by Shakespeare. Set to musick by Mr. Lampe. Performed at the Theatre Royal in Covent Garden.—8vo.—1745.

The Fairies, an Opera, taken from a Midsummer Night's Dream written by Shakespeare, as it is performed at the Theatre Royal in Drury Lane. By Mr. Garrick.—8vo.—1755.

A Midsummer Night's Dream, written by Shakespeare, with Alterations and Additions, and several new Songs. As it is performed at the Theatre Royal in Drury Lane. By Mr. Colman.—8vo.—1763.

A Fairy Tale, in two acts, taken from Shakespeare. As it is performed at the Theatre Royal in Drury Lane. By Mr. Colman.—8vo.—1763.

Merchant of Venice.

The Jew of Venice, a Comedy. As it is acted at the Theatre in Little Lincoln's Inn Fields, by his Majesty's Servants. By George Granville, Esq. afterwards Lord Lansdowne.—4to.—1701.

As you like it.

Love in a Forest, a Comedy. As it is acted at the Theatre Royal in Drury Lane, by his Majesty's Servants. By C. Johnson.—8vo.—1723.

The Modern Receipt, or a Cure for Love. A Comedy altered from Shakespeare. The Dedication is signed J. C. 12mo.—1739.

Taming of the Shrew.

Sawny the Scott, or the Taming of the Shrew; a Comedy, as it is now acted at the Theatre Royal, and never before printed. By John Lacy.—4to.—1698.

The Cöbler of Preston, a Farce, as it is acted at the New Theatre in Lincoln's Inn Fields. By Christopher Bullock. 12mo.—1716.

The Cöbler of Preston, as it is acted at the Theatre Royal in Drury Lane by his Majesty's Servants. By C. Johnson.—8vo.—1716.

Catherine and Petruchio. By Mr. Garrick.—8vo.—1756.

Winter's Tale.

The Winter's Tale, a Play altered from Shakespeare. By Charles Marfh.—8vo.—1756.

Florizel and Perdita, by Mr. Garrick.—8vo.—1758.

Sheepshearing, or Florizel and Perdita, by——Dublin. 12mo.—1767.

The Sheep-shearing: a Dramatic Pastoral. In three acts. Taken from Shakespeare. As it is performed at the Theatre Royal in the Haymarket.—8vo.—1777.

Macbeth.

Macbeth, a Tragedy, with all the Alterations, Amendments, Additions, and new Songs, as it is now acted at the Duke's Theatre. By Sir William Davenant.—4to.—1674.

The Historical Tragedy of Macbeth (written originally by Shakespeare) newly adapted to the stage, with Alterations, as performed at the Theatre in Edinburgh.—8vo.—1753.

King John.

Papal Tyranny in the Reign of King John, a Tragedy; as it is acted at the Theatre Royal in Covent Garden, by his Majesty's Servants. By Colley Cibber.—8vo.—1744.

K. Richard II.

The History of King Richard the Second. Acted at the Theatre Royal under the title of the Sicilian Usurper: with a prefatory Epistle in vindication of the Author, occasioned by the Prohibition of his Play on the Stage. By N. Tate. 4to. 1681.

The Tragedy of King Richard II. altered from Shakespeare. By Lewis Theobald. 8vo. 1720.

King Richard II. a Tragedy, altered from Shakespeare, and the stile imitated. By James Goodhall. Printed at Manchester. 8vo. 1772.

King

King Henry IV. Part I.

King Henry IV. with the Humours of Sir John Falstaff, a Tragi-comedy, as it is acted at the Theatre in Little Lincoln's Inn Fields, by his Majesty's Servants. Revived with Alterations. By Mr. Betterton. 4to. 1700.

King Henry IV. Part II.

The Sequel of Henry IV. with the Humours of Sir John Falstaff and Justice Shallow; as it is acted by his Majesty's Company of Comedians at the Theatre Royal in Drury Lane. Altered from Shakespeare by the late Mr. Betterton. 8vo. No Date.

King Henry VI. Three Parts.

Henry the Sixth, the First Part, with the Murder of Humphrey Duke of Gloucester. As it was acted at the Duke's Theatre. By John Crowne. 4to. 1681.

Henry the Sixth, the Second Part, or the Misery of Civil War. As it was acted at the Duke's Theatre. By John Crowne. 4to. 1681.

Humphrey Duke of Gloucester, a Tragedy, as it is acted at the Theatre Royal in Drury Lane by his Majesty's Servants. [A few speeches and lines only borrowed from Shakespeare.] By Ambrose Philips.

An Historical Tragedy of the Civil Wars in the Reign of King Henry VI. (being a Sequel to the Tragedy of Humphrey Duke of Gloucester, and an Introduction to the Tragical History of King Richard III.) Altered from Shakespeare in the year 1720. By Theo. Cibber. 8vo. No date.

King Richard III.

The Tragical History of King Richard III. Altered from Shakespeare. By Colley Cibber.

Coriolanus.

The Ingratitude of a Commonwealth, or the Fall of Caius Martius Coriolanus. As it is acted at the Theatre Royal. By Nahum Tate. 4to. 1682.

The Invader of his Country, or the Fatal Resentment. As it is acted at the Theatre Royal in Drury Lane, by his Majesty's Servants. By John Dennis. 8vo. 1720.

Coriolanus, or the Roman Matron, a Tragedy, taken from Shakespeare and Thomson. As it is acted at the Theatre Royal in Covent Garden: to which is added the Order of the Ovation. By Thomas Sheridan. 8vo. 1755.

Julius Cæsar.

The Tragedy of Julius Cæsar, with the Death of Brutus and Cassius: written originally by Shakespeare, and since altered by Sir William D'Avenant and John Dryden Poets Laureat; as it is now acted by his Majesty's Company of Comedians at the Theatre Royal. To which is prefixed the Life of Julius Cæsar, abstracted from Plutarch and Suetonius. 12mo. 1719.

The Tragedy of Julius Cæsar, altered, with a Prologue and Chorus. 4to. 1722.

The Tragedy of Marcus Brutus, with the Prologue and the two last Chorusses. 4to. 1722. Both by John Sheffield Duke of Buckingham.

Antony and Cleopatra.

Antony and Cleopatra, an Historical Play, written by William Shakespeare, fitted for the stage by abridging only; and now acted at the Theatre Royal in Drury Lane by his Majesty's Servants. By Edward Capell. 12mo. 1758.

Timon of Athens.

The History of Timon of Athens, the Man-hater. As it is acted at the Duke's Theatre, made into a Play, by Tho. Shadwell. 4to. 1678.

Timon of Athens. As it is acted at the Theatre Royal on Richmond Green. Altered from Shakespeare and Shadwell. By James Love. 8vo. 1768.

Timon of Athens, altered from Shakespeare, a Tragedy, as it is acted at the Theatre Royal in Drury Lane. By Mr. Cumberland. 8vo. 1771.

Titus Andronicus.

Titus Andronicus, or the Rape of Lavinia: Acted at the Theatre Royal. A Tragedy, altered from Mr. Shakespeare's Works. By Edward Ravenscroft. 4to. 1687.

Troilus and Cressida.

Troilus and Cressida, or Truth found too late. A Tragedy, as it is acted at the Duke's Theatre. By John Dryden. 4to. 1679.

Cymbeline.

The Injured Princess, or the Fatal Wager. As it was acted at the Theatre Royal, by his Majesty's Servants. By Tho. Durfey. 4to. 1682.

Cymbeline, King of Great Britain, a Tragedy written by Shakespeare, with some alterations. By Charles Marsh. 8vo. 1755.

Cymbeline, a Tragedy, altered from Shakespeare. As it is performed at the Theatre Royal in Covent Garden, by W. Hawkins. 8vo. 1759.

Cymbeline, altered by Mr. Garrick in the same year.

King Lear.

The History of King Lear, acted at the Duke's Theatre. Revived with Alterations. By Nahum Tate. 4to. 1681.

The History of King Lear, as it is performed at the Theatre Royal in Covent Garden. By George Colman. 8vo. 1768.

Romeo and Juliet.

Romeo and Juliet, altered into a Tragi-comedy, by James Howard, Esq. See Downes, p. 22.

Caius Marius, by Tho. Otway.

Romeo and Juliet, a Tragedy, revised and altered from Shakespeare. By Theo. Cibber. 8vo. No date.

Romeo and Juliet, altered by Mr. Garrick. 12mo.

From the Preface to the Republication of Marsh's Cymbeline in 1762, it appears that he had likewise made an alteration of Romeo and Juliet.

Hamlet.

Hamlet, altered by Mr. Garrick.

LIST of Detached PIECES of CRITICISM on SHAKESPEARE, his Editors, &c.

A short View of Tragedy. Its original Excellency and Corruption. With some Reflections on Shakespear and other Practitioners for the Stage. By Mr. Rymer, Servant to their Majesties. 8vo. 1693.

Remarks on the Plays of Shakespear. By C. Gildon, 8vo. Printed at the end of the seventh volume of Rowe's edition. 1710.

An Essay on the Genius and Writings of Shakespear, with some Letters of Criticism to the Spectator. By Mr. Dennis. 8vo. 1712.

Shakespear restored: or a Specimen of the many Errors as well committed as unamended, by Mr. Pope in his late Edition of this Poet. Designed not only to correct the said Edition, but to restore the true Reading of Shakespear in all the Editions ever yet published. By Mr. Theobald. 4to. 1726.

An Answer to Mr Pope's Preface to Shakespear in a letter to a friend, being a Vindication of the old Actors who were the publishers and performers of that Author's Plays. Whereby the Errors of their Edition are further accounted for, and some Memoirs of Shakespear and the Stage History of his Time are inserted, which were never before collected and published. By a strolling Player [John Roberts] 8vo. 1729.

Some Remarks on the Tragedy of Hamlet Prince of Denmark, written by William Shakespear. Printed for W. Wilkins in Lombard Street. 8vo. 1736.

Explanatory and Critical Notes on divers Passages of Shakespear's Plays, by Francis Peck. Printed with his "New Memoirs of the Life and Writings of Mr. John Milton." 4to. 1740.

An Essay towards fixing the true Standards of Wit and Humour, Raillery, Satire, and Ridicule: to which is added ed an Analyfis of the Characters of an Humourist, Sir John Falstaff, Sir Roger de Coverley, and Don Quixote. [By Corbyn Morris.] 8vo. 1744.

Miscellaneous Observations on the Tragedy of Macbeth: with Remarks on Sir Thomas Hanmer's Edition of Shakespeare. To which is affixed—Proposals for a new Edition of Shakespeare, with a Specimen. [By Dr. Samuel Johnson.] 12mo. 1745.

Critical Observations on Shakespeare: by John Upton, Prebendary of Rochester. First Edition, 8vo. 1746. Second Edition, 1748.

An Enquiry into the Learning of Shakespeare, with Remarks on several Passages of his Plays. In a Conversation between Eugenius and Neander. By Peter Whalley, A. B. Fellow of St. John's College Oxford. 8vo. 1748.

An Answer to certain Passages in Mr. W——'s Preface to his Edition of Shakespeare, together with some Remarks on the many Errors and false Criticisms in the Work itself. 8vo. 1748.

Essay on English Tragedy, with Remarks on the Abbé Le Blanc's Observations on the English Stage. By William Guthrie, Esq. 8vo. no date, but printed about the year 1748.

Remarks upon a late Edition of Shakespeare: with a long string of Emendations borrowed by the celebrated Editor from the Oxford Edition without acknowledgment. To which is prefixed a Defence of the late Sir Thomas Hanmer, Bart. Addressed to the Rev. Mr. Warburton, Preacher of Lincoln's Inn, &c. 8vo. No date.

An Attempte to rescue that aunciente English Poet and Play-wrighte Maister Williame Shakespeare from the many errours faulselly charged on him by certaine new-fangled Wittes; and to let him speak for himself, as right well he wotteth; when freede from the many careless mistakings of the heedless first Imprinters of his Workes. By a Gentleman formerly of Grey's Inn. [Mr. Holt] 8vo. 1749.

Miscellaneous Observations on the Tragedy of Hamlet Prince of Denmark: with a Preface containing some general

general Remarks on the Writings of Shakespeare. '8vo. 1752.

The Beauties of Shakespeare: regularly selected from each Play: with a general Index digesting them under proper Heads. Illustrated with explanatory Notes, and similar Passages from ancient and modern Authors. By William Dodd, B. A. late of Clare Hall, Cambridge. 2 Vols. 12mo. first Edition, 1752. Second Edition, 1757.

Shakespeare Illustrated: or the Novels and Histories on which the Plays of Shakespeare are founded, collected and translated from the original Authors, with critical Remarks. In two Volumes. [By Mrs. Lenox.] 12mo. 1753.

A third Volume with the same Title, 1754.

The Novel from which the Play of the Merchant of Venice written by Shakespeare, is taken, translated from the Italian. To which is added, a Translation of a Novel from the Decamerone of Bocaccio. 8vo. 1755.

Critical, Historical, and Explanatory Notes on Shakespeare, with Emendations of the Text and Metre: by Zachary Grey, LL. D. 2 Vols. 1755.

The Canons of Criticism and Glossary, being a Supplement to Mr. Warburton's Edition of Shakespeare. Collected from the Notes in that celebrated Work, and proper to be bound up with it. By the other Gentleman of Lincoln's Inn. (Mr. Edwards.) First Edition, 8vo. 1748. Seventh Edition with Additions. 8vo. 1765.

Remarks on Shakespeare by Mr. Roderick, are printed at the end of this Edition.

A Revival of Shakespeare's Text, wherein the Alterations introduced into it by the more Modern Editors and Criticks are particularly considered. (By Mr. Heath.) 8vo. 1765.

A Review of Dr. Johnson's New Edition of Shakespeare; in which the Ignorance or Inattention of that Editor is exposed, and the Poet defended from the Persecution of his Commentators. By W. Kenrick. 8vo. 1765.

An Examination of Mr. Kenrick's Review of Mr. Johnson's Edition of Shakespeare. 8vo. 1766.

A Defence of Mr. Kenrick's Review of Dr. Johnson's Shakespeare, Shakespeare, containing a number of curious and ludicrous Anecdotes of Literary Biography. By a Friend. 8vo. 1766.

Observations and Conjectures on some Passages of Shakespeare. (by Tho. Tyrwhitt, Esq.) 8vo. 1766.

An Essay on the Learning of Shakespeare, addressed to Joseph Cradock, Esq. (By the Rev. Dr. Richard Farmer.) 8vo. 1767. Second Edition 12mo. 1767.

A Letter to David Garrick, Esq. concerning a Glossary to the Plays of Shakespeare, on a more extensive Plan than has hitherto appeared. To which is added a Specimen. By Richard Warner, Esq. 8vo. 1768.

An Essay on the Writings and Genius of Shakespeare, compared with the Greek and French Dramatic Poets, with some Remarks upon the Misrepresentations of Monsieur de Voltaire. By Mrs. Montague. 8vo. 1770. Second Edition, 1776.

The Tragedy of King Lear as lately published, vindicated from the Abuse of the Critical Reviewers; and the wonderful Genius and Abilities of those Gentlemen for Criticism, set forth, celebrated and extolled. By the Editor of King Lear. (Charles Jennens, Esq.) 8vo. 1772.

Introduction to the School of Shakespeare, held on Wednesday Evenings in the Apollo, at the Devil Tavern, Temple Bar. To which is added, A Retort Courteous on the Criticks, as delivered at the Second and Third Lectures. 8vo. No Price or Date, but printed in 1774.

Curfory Remarks on Tragedy, on Shakespeare, and on certain French and Italian Poets, &c. Crown 8vo. 1774.

A Philosophical Analysis and Illustration of some of Shakespeare's remarkable Characters. By William Richardson, Esq. Professor of Humanity in the University of Glasgow. First Edition. 12mo. 1773. Second, 1774.

The Morality of Shakespeare's Drama illustrated. By Mrs. Griffith. 8vo. 1775.

A Letter to George Hardinge, Esq. on the Subject of a Passage in Mr. Stevens's Preface to his Impression of Shakespeare. (By the Rev. Mr. Collins.) 4to. 1777.

Discours sur Shakespeare et sur Monsieur de Voltaire, par Joseph Baretti, Secrétaire pour la Correspondence étrangere de l'Academie Royale Britannique. 8vo. 1777.

An Essay on the Dramatic Character of Sir John Falstaff. 8vo. 1777.

A Letter from Monsieur de Voltaire to the French Academy. Translated from the original Edition just published at Paris. 8vo. 1777.

EXTRACTS of ENTRIES

ON THE

Books of the STATIONERS' Company.

A Charter was granted to the Company of Stationers, on the 4th of May, 1556, (third and fourth of Philip and Mary) and was confirmed by Queen Elizabeth in 1560.

The first volume of these Entries has been either lost or destroyed, as the earliest now to be found is lettered B. The hall was burnt in the Fire of London. The entries begin July 17, 1576.

Feb. 18, 1582.

Vol. B.

M. Tottell.] Romeo and Julietta *.

p. 193

April 3, 1592.

Edw. White.] The tragedie of Arden of Feversham and Black Will †.

286

N. B. The terms book and ballad were anciently used to signify dramatic works as well as any other forms of composition; while tragedy and comedy were titles very often bestowed on novels of the serious and the lighter kind.

* Perhaps the original work on which Shakespeare founded his play of Romeo and Juliet.

† This play was reprinted in 1770 at Feversham, with a preface attributing it to Shakespeare. The collection of parallel passages which the editor has brought forward to justify his supposition, is such as will make the reader smile. The following is a specimen.

Arden of Feversham, p. 74.

“ Fling down Endymion, and snatch him up.”

Merchant of Venice, Act V. Sc. i.

“ Peace! how the moon sleeps with Endymion!”

Arden of Feversham, p. 87.

“ Let my death make amends for all my sin.”

Much Ado about Nothing, Act IV. Sc. ii.

“ Death is the fairest cover for her shame.”

April

April 18, 1593.

Rich. Field.] A booke entitled Venus and Adonis *. 297 b.
 Afterwards entered by — Harrifon, fen. June 23, 1594: by W. Leake, June 23, 1596 :—by W. Barrett, Feb. 16, 1616, and by John Parker, March 8, 1619.

Oct. 19, 1593.

Symon Waterfon.] A booke entitled the Tragedie-of Cleopatra †. 301 b.

Feb. 6, 1593.

John Danter.] A booke entitled a noble Roman Histoiy of Titus Andronicus. 304 b.
 Entered also unto him by warrant from
 Mr. Woodcock, the ballad thereof.

March 12, 1593.

Tho. Millington.] A booke entituled the First Part of the Contention of the twoo famous Houses of Yorke and Lancaster, with the Deathe of the good Duke Humphrie, and the Banishment and Deathe of the Duke of Yorke, and the tragical Ende of the proude Cardinall of Winchester, with the notable Rebellion of Jacke Cade, and the Duke of Yorke's first Claime unto the Crown. 305 b.

May 2, 1594.

Peter Shotte.] A pleasaunt conceyted hystorie called

* The last stanza of a poem entitled "Mirrha the Mother of Adonis; or Lustes Prodegies, by William Barksted," 1607, has the following praise of Shakespeare's Venus and Adonis.

"But stay, my muse, in thy own confines keepe;
 "And wage not warie with so deere lov'd a neighbor;
 "But having sung thy day-song rest and sleepe,
 "Preserve thy small fame and his greater favor.
 "His song was worthie merit (Shakipeare hee)
 "Sung the faire blossome, thou the withered tree:
 "Laurel is due to him; his art and wit
 "Hath purchas'd it; cypres thy brow will fit."

† I suppose this to be Daniel's tragedy of Cleopatra. Simon Waterfon was one of the printers of his other works.

the

- the Tayminge of a Shrowe *. 306 b.
 May 12, 1594.
 Tho. Strode.] A booke entituled the famous Victories of Henry the Fift, containing the honorable Battell of Agincourt †. 306 b.
 May 14, 1594.
 Edw. White.] A booke entituled the famous Chronicle Historie of Leire King of England and his three Daughters ‡. 307
 May 22, 1594.
 Edw. White.] A booke intituled a Winter Nyghts
 Pastime §. 307 b.
 June 19, 1594.
 Tho. Creede.] An enterlude entituled the Tragedie of Richard the Third, wherein is shown the Death of Edward the Fourthe, with the Smotheringe of the twoo Princes in the Tower, with the lamentable End of Shore's Wife, and the Contention of the two Houses of Lancafter and York ||. 309 b.
 July 20, 1594.
 Tho. Creede.] The lamentable Tragedie of Loocrine, the eldest Son of K. Brutus, discourfinge the Warres of the Britains, &c. 310 b.

Vol. C.

Before the beginning of this volume are placed two leaves containing irregular enties, prohibitions, notes, &c. Among these are the following.

* I conceive it to be the play that furnished Shakespeare with the materials which he afterwards worked up into another with the same title.

† This might have been the very displeasing play mentioned in the epilogue to the second part of King Henry IV.

‡ I suppose this to be the play on the same subject as that of our author, but written before it.

§ Query, if the Winter's Tale.

|| This could not have been the work of Shakespeare, as the death of Jane Shore makes no part of his drama.

Aug.

Aug. 4th.

As You like it, a book.

Henry the Fifth, a book *.

Comedy of Much Ado about Nothing. } to be staied.

The dates scattered over these pages are from 1596 to 1615.

Dec. 1, 1595.

Cuthbert Burby.] A booke entituled Edward the Third and the Black Prince, their warres with King John of France †. 6

Aug. 5, 1596.

Edw. White.] A new ballad of Romeo and Juliett †. 12 b.

Aug. 15, 1597.

Rich. Jones.] Two ballads, being the first and second parts of the Widowe of Watling-street §. 22 b.

Aug. 29, 1597.

Andrew Wise.] The tragedye of Richard the Seconde. 23

Oct. 20, 1597.

Andrew Wise.] The tragedie of King Richard the Third, with the Deathe of the Duke of Clarence. 25

Feb. 25, 1597.

Andrew Wise.] A booke entituled the Historie of Henry the Fourth, with his Battle at Shrewsbury against Henry Hotspurre of the North, with the conceived Mirth of Sir John Falstoff. 31

July 22, 1598.

James Roberts.] A booke of the Merchaunt of Ve-

* Probably the play before that of Shakespeare.

† This is ascribed to Shakespeare by the compilers of ancient catalogues.

‡ Quere, if Shakespeare's play, the first edition of which appeared in 1597.

§ Perhaps the songs on which the play with the same title was founded. It may, however, be the play itself. It was not uncommon to divide one dramatic piece, though designed for a single exhibition, into two parts. See the K. John before that of Shakespeare.

nyse,

nyſe, otherwiſe called the Jewe of Venyſe.
Provided that it be not prynted by the ſaid
James Roberts or any other whatſoever, without leave firſt had from the ryght honourable the Lord Chamberlen.

39 b.

Jan. 9, 1598.

Mr. Woolff.] A booke called the Firſte Parte of the Life and Reign of King Henry the Fourthe, extending to the End of the firſt Year of his Reign.

45 b.

Aug. 4, 1600.

Tho. Pavyer.] Firſt Part of the Hiſtory of the Life of Sir John Oldcaſtle Lord Cobham.

Item, The Second Part of the Hiſtory of Sir John Oldcaſtle Lord Cobham, with his Martyrdom.

63

Aug. 14, 1600.

Tho. Pavyer.] The Hiſtorye of Henry the Fifth, with the Battel of Agincourt, &c.

63

Aug. 23, 1600.

And. Wiſe, and Wm. Aſpley.] Much Ado about Nothing.

63 b.

Second Part of the Hiſtory of King Henry the Fourth, with the Humors of Sir John Falſtaff, written by Mr. SHAKESPERE.

ibid.

Oct. 8, 1600.

Tho. Fiſher.] A booke called a Midſomer Nyghte Dreame.

65 b.

Oct. 28, 1600.

Tho. Heyes.] A booke called the Book of the Mer-chaunt of Venyce.

66

Jan. 18, 1601.

*John Buſby.] An excellent and pleaſaunt conceited comedie of Sir John Faulſtoff and the Merry Wyves of Windſore.

78

Arth. Johnſton.] The preceding entered as aſſigned to him from John Buſby.

ibid.

April 19, 1602.

Tho. Pavyer.] A booke called Titus Andronicus.

80 b.

VOL. I.

[R]

July

July 26, 1602.

James Roberts.] A booke called the Revenge of Ham-lett Prince of Denmarke, as it was lately acted by the Lord Chamberlain his servants. 84 b.

Aug. 11, 1602.

Wm. Cotton.] A booke called the Lyfe and Death of the Lord Cromwell, as yt was lately acted by the Lord Chamberleyn his fervantes. 85 b.

Feb. 7, 1602.

Mr. Roberts.] The booke of Troilus and Cressida, as it is acted by my Lo. Chamberlen's men. 91 b.

June 25, 1603.

Matt. Law.] Richard 3. }
Richard 2. } all kings.
Henry 4. 1st. Part. } 98

Feb. 12, 1604.

Nath. Butter.] That he get good allowance for the Enterlude of Henry 8, before he begin to print it; and then procure the warden's hand to it for the entrance of yt, he is to have the fame for his copy*. 120

May 8, 1605.

Simon Stafford.] A booke called the tragicall Histo-rie of King Leir and his three Daughters, as it was lately acted. 123

John Wright.] By assignment from Simon Stafford and consent of Mr. Leake, the tragical History of King Lear, &c. provided that Si-

* Though it be uncertain whether this Enterlude was Shakespeare's King Henry VIII. or not, yet we have never heard of any other play professedly written on the same subject; and have reason to think that our author's performance was produced during the reign of queen Elizabeth, on account of the compliment paid to her at the conclusion of it.

Nathaniel Butter was the publisher of Shakespeare's King Lear.
The particular cautions shown concerning the licence to print the present dramatic piece, might lead us to suspect it to have been Shakespeare's, and that the sagacious Company of Stationers were of opinion that this compliment to the memory of the queen, might not prove very pleasing to her inglorious successor.

mon Stafford shall have the printing of this book*.

ibid.

July 3, 1605.

Tho. Pavyer.] A ballad of a lamentable Murder done in Yorkshire, by a Gent. upon two of his owne Children, fore wounding his Wife and Nurse, &c †.

126

Jan. 22. 1606.

Nich. Ling.] Romeo and Juliett.
Love's Labour Lost.
Taming of a Shrewe.

147

Aug. 6, 1607.

Geo. Elde.] A booke called the Comedie of the Puritan Wydowe.

157 b.

Aug. 6, 1607.

Tho. Thorpe.] A comedy called What you Will ‡. ibid.

Oct. 22, 1607.

Arth. Johnson.] The Merry Devil of Edmonton §. 159 b.

Nov. 19, 1607.

John Smythwick.] A booke called Hamlett.

The Taminge of a Shrewe.

Romeo and Juliett.

Love's Labour Lost.

161

Nov. 26, 1607.

Nath. Butter and John Busby.] Mr. William Shakespeare, his Hystoric of King Lear, as it was played before the King's Majestic at Whitehall, upon St. Stephen's night at Christmas last, by his Majesties servants playing usually at the Globe on the Bank-side.

161 b.

April 5, 1608.

Joseph Hunt and Tho. Archer.] A book called the

* This is the King Lear before that of Shakespeare.

† Query, if the play.

‡ Perhaps this is Marston's comedy of What you Will. I have a copy of it dated 1607. What you Will, however, is the second title to Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

§ The Merry Devil of Edmonton is mentioned in the Blacke Booke by T. M. 1604. "Give him leave to see the Merry Devil of Edmonton, or A Woman kill'd with Kindnesse."

- Life and Death of the Merry Devil of Edmonton, with the pleafant Pranks of Smugg the Smith, Sir John, and mine Hofte of the George, about their ftealing of Veni-fon. By T. B*. 165 b.
- May 2, 1608.
- Mr. Pavyer.] A booke called a Yorkshire Tragedy, written by Wylliam Shakefpeare. 167
- May 2, 1608.
- Edw. Blount.] The book of Pericles Prince of Tyre. 167 b.
 A book called Anthony and Cleopatra. ibid.
- Jan. 28, 1608.
- Rich. Bonian and Hen. Whalley.] A booke called the History of Troylus and Creflida. 178 b.
- May 20, 1609.
- Tho. Thorpe.] A booke called Shakefpeare's Sonnets. 183 b.
- Oct. 16, 1609.
- Mr Welby.] Edward the Third. 189
- Dec. 16, 1611.
- John Browne.] A booke called the Lyfe and Death of the Lo. Cromwell, by W. S. 214 b.
- Nov. 29, 1614.
- John Beale.] A booke called the Hystorie of Lord Faulconbridge, baftard Son to Richard Cordelion †. 256 b.
- Feb. 16, 1616.
- Mr. Barrett.] Life and Death of Lord Cromwell. 279
- March 20, 1617.
- Mr. Snodham.] Edward the Third, the play. 288
- Sept. 17, 1618.
- John Wright.] The comedy called Mucedorus ‡. 293 b.

concealed. The initial letters at the end of this entry, fuly free Shakefpeare from the charge of having been its author.

† Query, if this was Shakefpeare's K. John, or fome old romance like that of Richard Coeur de Lion.

‡ Bound up in a volume of plays attributed to Shakefpeare, and once belonging to King Charles the Firft. See Mr. Garrick's Collection.

July 8, 1619.

Nich. Okes.] A play called the Merchaunt of Venice. 303

Vol. D.

Oct. 6, 1621.

Tho. Walkely.] The tragedie of Othello the Moore of Venice.

21

Nov. 8, 1623.

Mr. Blount and Ifaak Jaggard.] Mr. William Shakespeare's Comedyes and Tragedyes, foe many of the faid Copies as are not formerly entered to other men.

Viz.

Comedyes.	{	The Tempest.
		Two Gentlemen of Verona.
		Measure for Measure.
		The Comedy of Errors.
		As You Like it.
		Alls Well that Ends Well.
Histories..	{	Twelſe Night.
		The Winter's Tale.
		The Third Part of Henry the Sixt.
Tragedies.	{	Henry the Eight.
		Coriolanus.
		Timon of Athens.
		Julius Cæſar.
		Mackbeth.
		Anthonie and Cleopatra.
	{	Cymbeline.

69

Dec. 14, 1624.

Mr. Pavycr.] Titus Andronicus.
Widow of Watling Street.

93

Feb. 23, 1625.

Mr. Stanſby.] Edward the 1 hird, the play.

115

April 3, 1626.

Mr. Parker.] Life and Death of Lord Cromwell.

120

Aug. 4, 1626.

Edw. Brewſter.] Mr. Pavyer's right in Shakeſpeare's
Rob. Birde,] plays, or any of them.

Sir John Oldcastle, a play.
Tytus Andronicus.
Hyftorie of Hamblett.	127
Jan. 29, 1629.
Mr. Meighen.] Merry Wives of Windsor.	193
Nov. 8, 1630.
Ric. Cotes.] Henrye the Fift.
Sir John Oldcastle.
Tytus Andronicus.
Yorke and Lancafter.
Agincourt.
Pericles.
Hamblett.
Yorkfhire Tragedy.	208-
The sixteen plays in p. 69, were affigned by Tho.
Blount to Edward Allot, June 26, 1632.	109
Edward Allott was one of the publishers of the fecond Folio, 1632.

It is worth remark, that on these books of the Stationers' Company, Titus Andronicus, Venus and Adonis, two parts of King Henry VI. Lochrine, Widow of Watling Street, King Richard II. King Richard III. King Henry IV. &c. are the first performances attributed to Shakespeare. Thus might the progress of his dramatic art be ascertained, were we absolutely sure that his productions were set down in chronological arrangement on these records of ancient publication. It may be added, that although the private interests of play-houses had power to suspend the printing of his theatrical pieces, they could not have retarded the appearance of his poems; and we may therefore justly date the commencement of his authorship from the time when the first of them came out, viz. his Venus and Adonis, when he was in the twenty-ninth year of his age. In the dedication of this poem to the Earl of Southampton, Shakespeare calls it "The first heir of his invention."

Of all his undisputed plays, the only one omitted on the books of the Stationers' Company, is King John. The same attention to secure a lasting property in the works of Ben Jonson and Beaumont and Fletcher, does not appear to have been exerted; as of the former I have met with no more than seven or eight entries, and of the latter a still less considerable number.

number. Beaumont died in 1615, Fletcher in 1625, and Jonson in 1637. My researches, however, were not continued below the year 1632, the date of the second folio edition of Shakespeare.

Let it likewise be added to the praises of our author, that if he did not begin to write till 1593, nor ceased till within three years of his death, which happened in 1616, in the course of twenty years he had produced no less than thirty-five plays, admitting that eight others (among which is to be reckoned *Titus Andronicus) were spurious. I seize this opportunity, however, to express my doubts concerning all but the last mentioned piece, and Lochrine. Lochrine has only the letters W. S. prefixed to it, and exhibits internal proofs that it was not only the composition of a scholar but of a pedant. See a note to the List of Plays ascribed to Shakespeare by the Editors of the two later folios, or the Compilers of Ancient Catalogues, where the same assertion is more fully supported. See also another note at the beginning of Troilus and Cressida. Neither has it ever yet been sufficiently proved that it was once customary to set the names of celebrated living authors at full length in the title pages to the works of others, or to enter them under these false colours in the books at Stationers' Hall. Such frauds indeed have been attempted at a later period, but with little success. The most inconsiderable of all the pieces rejected by the editors of Shakespeare, is the Yorkshire Tragedy; and yet in 1608 it was both registered and published with his name. At this time too, he was probably in London, presiding at the Globe theatre, in consequence of the licence granted by K. James I. to him and his fellow-comedians in 1603. The Yorkshire Tragedy is only one out of four short dramas which were exhibited for the entertainment of a single evening, as the title page informs us; and perhaps would have been forgotten with the other three, but that it was known to have been the work of our celebrated author. Such miscellaneous representations were not uncommon, and the reader will find a specimen of them in the tenth volume of Mr. Seyward's edition of Beaumont and Fletcher. Shakespeare, who has expressed such a solicitude that his clowns should speak no more than was set down for them, would naturally have taken some opportunity to shew his impatience at being rendered answerable, in a still more decisive manner, for entire compositions which were not his own. It is possible likewise, that the copies of the plays omitted in the first folio, had been already disposed of to proprietors, out of whose hands they could not be redeemed; or if Heminge and Condell were discerning friends to the reputation of their associate, conscious as they might have been that such pieces were his, they would have omitted them by design, as inferior to his other productions. From this inferiority, and from a cast of style occasionally different, nothing relative to their authenticity can with exactness be inferred; for as Dr. Johnson very justly observes on a similar occasion, "There is little resemblance between the first works of Raphael and the last." But could it even be proved that these rejected pieces were not among the earliest effusions of Shakespeare, such proof would by no means affect their authenticity, as both Dryden and Rowe, after having written their best plays, are known to have produced others, which reflect a very inconsiderable degree of honour on their memory.

* See the notes at the end of this play.

It has hitherto been usual to represent the ancient quartos of our author as by far more incorrect than those of his contemporaries; but I fear that this representation has been continued by many of us, with a design to magnify our own services rather than to exhibit a true state of the question. The reason why we have discovered a greater proportion of errors in the former than in the latter, is because we have sought after them with a greater degree of diligence; for let it be remembered, that it was no more the practice of other writers than of Shakespeare, to correct the press for themselves. Ben Jonson only (who, being versed in the learned languages, had been taught the value of accuracy) appears to have superintended the publication of his own dramatic pieces; but were those of Lilly, Chapman, Marlow, or the Heywoods, to be revised with equal industry, an editor would meet with as frequent opportunities for the exertion of his critical abilities, as in these quartos which have been so repeatedly censured by those who never took the pains to collate them, or justify the many valuable readings they contain; for when the character of them which we have handed down, was originally given, among typographical blunders, &c. were enumerated all terms and expressions which were not strictly grammatical, or not easily understood. As yet we had employed in our attempts at explanation only such materials as casual reading had supplied;

plied; but how much more is requisite for the complete explanation of an early writer, the last edition of the Canterbury Tales of Chaucer may prove a sufficient witness; a work which in respect of accuracy and learning is without a rival, at least in any commentary on an English poet. The reader will forgive me if I desert my subject for a moment, while I express an ardent wish that the same editor may find leisure and inclination to afford us the means of reading the other works of the father of our poetry, with advantages which we cannot derive from the efforts of those who have less deeply and successfully penetrated into the recesses of ancient Italian, French, and English literature.—An author has received the highest mark of distinction, when he has engaged the services of such a commentator.

The reader may perhaps be desirous to know by whom these quartos of Shakespeare are supposed to have been sent into the world. To such a curiosity no very adequate gratification can be afforded; but yet it may be observed, that as these elder copies possess many advantages over those in the subsequent folio, we should decide perversely were we to pronounce them spurious. They were in all probability issued out by some performer, who deriving no benefit from the theatre except his salary, was uninterested in that retention of copies, which was the chief concern of our ancient managers. We may suppose too that there was nothing criminal in his proceeding; as some of the persons whose names appear before these publications, are known to have filled the highest offices in the company of Stationers with reputation, bequeathing legacies of considerable value to it at their decease. Neither do I discover why the first manuscripts delivered by so careless a writer to the actors, should prove less correct than those which he happened to leave behind him, unprepared for the press, in the possession of the same fraternity. On the contrary, after his plays had passed for twenty years through the hands of a succession of ignorant transcribers, they were more likely to become maimed and corrupted, than when they were printed from papers less remote from the originals. It is true that Heminge and Condell have called these copies surreptitious, but this was probably said with a view to enhance the value of their own impression, as well as to revenge themselves as far as possible on those who had in part anticipated the publication of works from which they expected considerable gleanings of advantage, after their first harvest on the stage was over. — I mean to except from this general character of the quartos, the author's rough draughts of the Merry Wives of Windsor and Romeo and Juliet; together with the play of King Henry V. and the two parts of King Henry VI.; for these latter carry all the marks of having been imperfectly taken down by the ear, without any assistance from the originals belonging to the playhouses in which they were first represented.

was

A preceding table of those ancient copies of the plays of Shakespeare which his commentators have really met with and consulted, if compared with the earliest of these entries on the books already mentioned, may tempt the reader to suppose that some quartos have not yet been found, from which future assistance may be derived. But I fear that no such resources remain; as it seems to have been the practice of the numerous theatres in the time of Shakespeare, to cause some bookseller to make immediate entries of their new pieces, as a security against the encroachments of their rivals, who always considered themselves as justified in the exhibition of such dramas as had been enfranchised by the press. Imperfect copies, but for these precautions, might have been more frequently obtained from the repetition of hungry actors invited for that purpose to a tavern, or something like a play might have been collected by attentive auditors, who made it their business to attend succeeding representations with a like design . By these means, without any intent of hasty publication, one company of players was studious to prevent the trespasses of another †. Nor did their policy conclude here; for I have not unfrequently met with registers of both tragedies and comedies, of which the titles were at some other time to be declared. Thus, July 26, 1576, John Hunter enters "A new and pleasant comedie or plaie, after the manner of common condycyons;" and one Fielder, in Sept. 1581, prefers his right to four others, "Whereof he will bring the titles." "The famous Tragedy of the Rich Jewe of Malta," by Christopher Marlow, is ascertained to be the property of Nich. Ling and Tho. Millington, in May 1594, though it was not printed by Nich. Vavasour till 1633, as Tho. Heywood, who wrote the preface to it, informs us. In this manner the contending theatres (seventeen in number) were prepared to assert a priority of title to any copies of dramatic performances; and thus were they assisted by our ancient stationers, who strengthened every claim of literary property, by entries secured in a manner which was then supposed to be obligatory and legal.

* See the notes of Mr. Collins and Mr. Malone at the end of the third part of K. Henry VI.

† From the year 1570 to the year 1629, when the playhouse in White Friars was finished, it appears that no less than seventeen theatres had been built.

I may add, that the difficulty of procuring licences was another reason why some theatrical publications were retarded and others entirely suppressed. As we cannot now discover the motives which influenced the conduct of former Lord Chamberlains and Bishops, who stopped the sale of several works, which nevertheless have escaped into the world, and appear to be of the most innocent nature, we

* Mr. Doddsley, in a note to the preface to his collection of Old Plays, has the following enumeration of the different theatres which had been built between the years 1570 and 1629, when that in White Friars was finished:—"St. Paul's Singing-school. The Globe on the Bank-side, Southwark. The Swan and the Hope there. The Fortune between Whitecross Street and Golding Lane, which Maitland tells us was the first playhouse erected in London. The Red Bull in St. John's Street. The Cross Keys in Gracechurch Street. The Tuns. The Theater. The Curtain. The Nursery in Barbican. One in Black Friars. One in White Friars. One in Salisbury Court. The Cockpit, and the Phoenix in Drury Lane."

To this account I may subjoin, that the Fortune (as appears from the following advertisement in the Mercurius Politicus, Tuesday Feb. 14, to Tuesday 21, 1661,) must have been a place of considerable extent; and it is by no means improbable that all the actors resided within its precincts. "The Fortune playhouse situate between Whitecross Street and Golding Lane, in the parish of St. Giles Cripplegate, with the ground thereunto belonging, is to be lett to be built upon; where 23 tenements may be erected, with gardens; and a street may be cut through for the better accommodation of the buildings." The Curtain was in Shoreditch, a part of which district still retains the name of The Curtain. The original sign hung out at this theatre was the painting of a striped Curtain. We learn likewise from Prynne's Histriomastix, that in the time of Queen Elizabeth there were two other playhouses, the one called the Bell Savage (situated, very probably, on Ludgate Hill,) the other in Bishopsgate Street: and Taylor the Water-poet in "The true Cause of the Water-men's Suit concerning Players, 1613," mentions another theatre called the Rose.

may be tempted to regard their severity as rather dictated by jealousy and caprice, than by judgment and impartiality. See a note to my Advertisement which follows Dr. Johnson's Preface.

The public is now in possession of as accurate an account of the dates, &c. of Shakespeare's works as perhaps will ever be compiled. This was by far the most irksome part of my undertaking, though facilitated as much as possible by the kindness of Mr. Longman of Pater-noster Row, who readily furnished me with the three earliest volumes of the records of the Stationers' Company, together with accommodations which rendered the perusal of them convenient to me though troublesome to himself.

Mr. Maione has attempted in the following pages to ascertain the chronological order in which the plays of Shakespeare were written. By the aid of the registers at Stationers' Hall, and such internal evidence as the pieces themselves supply, he has so happily accomplished his undertaking, that he only leaves me the power to thank him for an arrangement which I profess my inability either to dispute or to improve.

STEVENS.

A N
A T T E M P T
TO ASCERTAIN THE
O R D E R
IN WHICH THE PLAYS attributed to SHAKSPEARE were Written.

——— *Primusque per arvia campi
Usque procul, (necdum totas lux moverat umbras)
Nescio quid visu dubium, incertumque moveri,
Corporis necesse videt.*

STATIUS.

Guardando l'ombre come cosa calda.

DANTE.

EVERY circumstance that relates to those persons whose writings we admire, interests our curiosity. The time and place of their birth, their education and gradual attainments, the dates of their productions and the reception they severally met with, their habits of life, their private friendships, and even their external form, are all points, which, how little soever they may have been adverted to by their contemporaries, strongly engage the attention of posterity. Not satisfied with receiving the aggregated wisdom of ages as a free gift, we visit the mansions where our instructors are said to have resided, we contemplate with pleasure the trees under whose shade they once reposed, and wish to see and to converse with those sages, whose labours have added strength to virtue, and efficacy to truth.

Shakspeare above all writers, since the days of Homer, has excited this curiosity in the highest degree; as perhaps no poet of any nation was ever more idolized by his countrymen. An ardent desire to understand and explain his works, has, to the honour of the present age, so much increased within these last thirty years, that more has been done done towards their elucidation, during that period*, than perhaps in a century before. All the ancient copies of his plays, hitherto discovered, have been collated with the most scrupulous accuracy. The meanest books have been carefully examined, only because they were of the age in which he lived, and might happily throw a light on some forgotten custom, or obsolete phraseology: and, this object being still kept in view, the toil of wading through all such reading as was never read, has been cheerfully endured, because no labour was thought too great, that might enable us to add one new laurel to the father of our drama. Almost every circumstance that tradition or history has preserved relative to him or his works, has been investigated, and laid before the publick; and the avidity with which all communications of this kind have been received, sufficiently proves that the time expended in the pursuit has not been wholly misemployed.

However, after the most diligent enquiries, very few particulars have been recovered, respecting his private life, or literary history: and while it has been the great object of all his editors and commentators, to illustrate his obscurities, and to regulate and correct his text, no attempt has been made to trace the progress and order of his plays. Yet surely it is no incurious speculation, to mark the gradations^b by

NOTES.

* Within the period here mentioned, the commentaries of Warburton, Edwards, Heath, Johnson, Tyrwhitt, Farmer, and Steevens, have been published.

^b It is not pretended that a regular scale of gradual improvement is here presented to the publick; or that, if even Shakspeare himself had left us a chronological list of his dramas, it would exhibit such a scale. All that is meant, is, that, as his knowledge increased, and as he became more conversant with the stage and with life, his performances in general were written more happily and with greater art; or (to use the words of Dr. Johnson) "that however favoured by nature, he could only impart what he had learned, and as he must increase his ideas, like other mortals, by gradual acquisition, he, like them, grew wiser as he grew older, could display life better as he knew it more, and instruct with more efficacy, as he was himself more amply instructed." Of this opinion also was Mr. Pope. "It must be observed, (says he) that when his performances had merited the protection of his prince, and when the encouragement of the court had succeeded to that of the town, the works of his latter years are manifestly raised above those of his former.— And I make by which he rose from mediocrity to the summit of excellence; from artless and uninteresting dialogues, to those unparalleled compositions, which have rendered him the delight and wonder of successive ages.

The materials for ascertaining the order in which his plays were written, are indeed so few, that, it is to be feared, nothing very decisive can be produced on this subject.

NOTES.

no doubt that this observation would be found true in every instance, were but editions extant from which we might learn the exact time when every piece was composed, and whether writ for the town or the court."—From the following lines it appears, that Dryden also thought that our author's most imperfect plays were his earliest dramatick compositions :

- " Your Ben and Fletcher in their first young flight;
- " Did no Volpone, no Arbaces write;
- " But hopp'd about, and short excursions made
- " On a bough to bough, as if they were afraid;
- " And ~~then~~ were guilty of some Slighted Maid.
- " Shakspeare's own muse his Pericles first bore,
- " The Prince of Tyre was elder than the Moor;
- " 'Tis a miracle to see a first good play;
- " As hawthorns do not bloom on Christmas-day.
- " A tender poet must have time to grow,
- " And spread and burnish as his brothers do:
- " Who still looks lean, sure will some p— is curst,
- " But no man can be Falstaff fat at first."

Prologue to the tragedy of Circe.

The plays which Shakspeare produced before the year 1600, are known, and are about eighteen in number. The rest of his dramas, we may conclude, were composed between that year and the time of his retiring to the country. It is incumbent on those, who differ in opinion from the great authorities abovementioned, who think with Rowe, that "we are not to look for his beginning in his least perfect works," it is incumbent, I say, on those persons, to enumerate in the former class, that is, among the plays produced before 1600, compositions of equal merit with Othello, King Lear, Macbeth, the Tempest and Twelfth Night, which we have reason to believe were all written in the latter period; and among his late performances, that is, among the plays which are supposed to have appeared after the year 1600, to point out five pieces, as hasty, indigested, and uninteresting, as the first and third parts of K. Henry VI. Love's Labour Lost, the Comedy of Errors, and the Two Gentlemen of Verona, which, we know, were among his earlier works.

In the following attempt to trace the progress of his dramatick art, probability alone is pretended to. The silence and inaccuracy of those persons, who, after his death, had the revisal of his papers, will perhaps for ever prevent our attaining to any thing like proof on this head. Little then remains, but to collect into one view, from his several dramas, and from the ancient tracts in which they are mentioned, or alluded to, all the circumstances that can throw any light on this new and curious enquiry. From these circumstances, and from the entries in the books of the Stationers' company, extracted and now first published by Mr. Steevens, (to whom every admirer of Shakspeare has the highest obligations), it is probable, that the plays ascribed to our author were written nearly in the following succession; which, though it cannot at this day be ascertained to be their true order, may yet be considered as approaching nearer to it, than any which has been observed in the various editions of his works. The rejected pieces are here enumerated with the rest; but no opinion is thereby meant to be given concerning their authenticity.

Of the nineteen genuine plays which were not printed in our author's life-time^c, the majority were, I believe, late compositions^d. The following arrangement is in some measure

NOTES.

^c They are, King Henry VI. P. I. The Two Gentlemen of Verona, The Winter's Tale, The Comedy of Errors, King John, All's Well that Ends Well, As you like it, King Henry VIII. Measure for Measure, Cymbeline, Macbeth, The Taming of the Shrew, Julius Caesar, Antony and Cleopatra, Coriolanus, Timon of Athens, Othello, The Tempest, and Twelfth Night. Of these nineteen plays, four, viz. The first part of K. Henry VI. King John, The Two Gentlemen of Verona, and The Comedy of Errors, were certainly early compositions, and are an exception to the general truth of this observation. Perhaps, the ill success of the two latter, was the occasion that they were not printed so soon as his other early performances. Two others, viz. The Winter's Tale, and All's well that ends well, though supposed to have been early productions, were; it must be acknowledged, not published in Shakspeare's life-time; but for the dates of these we rely only on conjecture.

^d This supposition is strongly confirmed by Meres's list of our author's plays, in 1598. From that list, and from other circumstances, we learn, that of the sixteen genuine plays which were printed in Shakspeare's life-time, thirteen were written before the end of the year 1600.—The sixteen plays published in our author's sure, formed on this idea. Two reasons may be assigned, why Shakspeare's late performances were not published till after his death. 1. If we suppose him to have written for the stage during a period of twenty years, those pieces which were produced in the latter part of that period, were less likely to pass through the press in his life-time, as the curiosity of the publick had not been so long engaged by them, as by his early compositions. 2. From the time that Shakspeare had the superintendence of a playhouse, that is, from the year 1603*, when he and several others obtained a licence from King James to exhibit comedies, tragedies, histories, &c. at the Globe Theatre, and elsewhere, it became strongly his interest to preserve those pieces unpublished, which were composed between that year and the time of his retiring to the country; manuscript plays being then the great support of every theatre. Nor were the plays which he wrote after he became a manager, so likely to get abroad, being confined to his own theatre, as his former productions, which probably had been acted on many different stages, &c. of consequence afforded the players at the several houses where they were exhibited, an easy opportunity of making out copies from the separate parts transcribed for their use, and of selling such copies to printers; by which means, there is great reason to believe, that they author's life-time, are—Love's Labour Lost, The Second and Third Parts of K. Henry VI. A Mussamur Night's Dream, Romio and Juliet, Hamlet, K. Richard II. K. Richard III. The First Part of K. Henry IV. The Merchant of Venice, The Second Part of K. Henry IV. K. Henry V. Much Ado about Nothing, The Merry Wives of Windsor, Troilus and Cressida, and K. Lear.

N O T E S.

* None of the plays which in the ensuing list are supposed to have been written subsequently to this year, were printed till after the author's death, except K. Lear, the publication of which was probably hastened by that of the old play with the same title, in 1605.—The copy of Troilus and Cressida, which seems to have been composed the year before K. James granted a licence to the company at the Globe Theatre, appears to have been obtained by some uncommon artifice. "Thank fortune (says the Editor) for the scape it hath made amongst you; since, by the grand possessors' wills, I believe, you should have play'd for them, rather than been pray'd."—By the grand possessors, Shakspeare and the other managers of the Globe Theatre, were clearly intended.

were submitted to the press, without the consent of the author.

1. Titus Andronicus ,	1589.
2. LOVE'S LABOUR LOST,	1591.
3. FIRST PART OF KING HENRY VI.	1591.
4. SECOND PART OF KING HENRY VI.	1592.
5. THIRD PART OF KING HENRY VI.	1592.
6. Pericles ,	1592.
7. Loocrine ,	1593.
8. THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA,	1593.
9. THE WINTER'S TALE,	1594.
10. A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM,	1595.
11. ROMEO AND JULIET,	1595.
12. THE COMEDY OF ERRORS,	1596.
13. HAMLET,	1596.
14. KING JOHN,	1596.
15. KING RICHARD II.	1597.
16. KING RICHARD III.	1597.
17. FIRST PART OF KING HENRY IV.	1597.
18. THE MERCHANT OF VENICE,	1598.
19. ALL'S WELL THAT END'S WELL,	1598.
20. Sir John Oldcastle ,	1598.
21. SECOND PART OF KING HENRY IV.	1598.
22. KING HENRY V.	1599.
23. The Puritan ,	1600.
24. MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING,	1600.
25. AS YOU LIKE IT.	1600.
26. MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR,	1601.
27. KING HENRY VIII.	1601.
28. Life and Death of Lord Cromwell ,	1602.
29. TROILUS AND CRESSIDA,	1602.
30. MEASURE FOR MEASURE,	1603.
31. CYMBELINE,	1604.
32. The London Prodigal ,	1605.
33. KING LEAR,	1605.
34. MACBETH,	1606.
35. THE TAMING OF THE SHREW,	1606.
36. JULIUS CÆSAR,	1607.
37. A Yorkshire Tragedy ,	1608.
38. ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA,	1608.
39. CORIOLANUS,	1609.
40. TIMON OF ATHENS,	1610.
41. OTHELLO,

41. OTHELLO,	1611.
42. THE TEMPEST,	1612.
43. TWELFTH NIGHT,	1614.

1. Titus Andronicus, 1589.

In what year our author began to write for the stage, or which was his first performance, has not been hitherto ascertained. And indeed we have so few lights to direct our enquiries, that any speculation on this subject may appear an idle expence of time. But the method which has been already marked out, requires that such facts should be mentioned, as may serve in any manner to elucidate these points.

Shakspeare was born on the 23d of April, 1564, and was probably married in, or before, September 1582, his eldest daughter Susanna, having been baptized on the 26th of May, 1583, what time he left Warwickshire, or was first employed in the playhouse, tradition does not inform us. However, as his son Samuel and his daughter Judith were baptized at Stratford Feb. 2, 1584—5, we may presume that he had not left the country at that time.

He could not have wanted an easy introduction to the theatre; for Thomas Greene, a celebrated comedian, was his

NOTES.

“ There was not (says Heywood in his preface to Greene's Tu quoque, a comedy,) an actor of his nature in his time, of better ability in the performance of what he undertook, more applauded by the audience, of greater grace at the court, or of more general love in the city.” The birth-place of Thomas Greene is ascertained by the following lines, which he speaks in one of the old comedies, in the character of a clown :

“ I prated poesie in my nurse's arms,
And, born where late our fiver of Avon sung,
In Avon's streams we both of us have lav'd,
And both came out together.”

Chetwood quotes this passage, in his British Theatre, from the comedy of the Two Maids of Moreclack; but no such passage is there to be found. He deserves but little credit; having certainly forged many of his dates; however, he probably met these lines in some ancient play, though he forgot the name of the piece from which he transcribed them. Greene was a writer as well as an his townsman, perhaps his relation, and Michael Drayton was likewise born in Warwickshire; the latter was nearly of his own age, and both were in some degree of reputation about the year 1590. If I were to indulge a conjecture, I should name the middle of the year 1591, as the era when our author commenced a writer for the stage; at which time he was somewhat more than twenty seven years old. The reasons that induce me to fix on that period are these. In Webbe's Discourse of English Poetry, published in 1586, we meet with the names of most of the celebrated poets of that time; particularly those of George Whetstone^s and Antony Munday^h, who were dramatick writers; but we find actor. There are some verses of his prefixed to a collection of Drayton's poems, published in the year 1613. He was perhaps a kinsman of Shakspeare's. In the register of the parish of Stratford, Thomas Greene, alias Shakspeare, is said to have been buried March 6, 1689. He might have been the actor's father.

NOTES.

^s The author of Promos and Cassandra, a play which furnished Shakspeare with the fable of Measure for Measure.

^h This poet is mentioned by Moles, in his Wit's Treasury, as an eminent comick writer, and the best plotter of his time. He seems to have been introduced under the name of Don Antonio Balladino, in a comedy that has been attributed to Ben Jonson, called The Case is Altered, and from the following passages in that piece appears to have been city-poet; whose business it was to compose an annual panegyrick on the Lord Mayor, and to write verses for the pageants: an office which has been discontinued since the death of Elkanah Settle in 1722:

Oron. "Shall I request your name?"

Ant. My name is Antonio Balladino.

Oron. Balladino! You are not pageant poet to the city of Milan, Sir, are you?

Ant. I supply the place, Sir, when a worse cannot be had, Sir.—Did you see the last pageant I set forth?"

Afterwards Antonio, speaking of the plays he had written, says,

"Let me have good ground—no matter for the pen; the plot shall carry it.

Oron. Indeed that's right; you are in print already, for THE BEST PLOTTER.

Ant. Ay; I might as well have been put in for a dumb-shew too."

It is evident, that this poet is here intended to be ridiculed by Ben Jonson: but he might, notwithstanding, have been deservedly eminent.

find no trace of our author, or of any of his works. Three years afterwards, Puttenham printed his Art of English Poesy; and in that work also we look in vain for the name of Shakspeare¹. Sir John Harrington in his Apologie for Poetry, prefixed to the Translation of Ariosto, (which was entered in the Stationers' books Feb 26, 1590—1, in which year, it was printed) takes occasion to speak of the theatre, and mentions some of the celebrated dramas of that time; but says not a word of Shakspeare, or of any of his plays. If even Love's Labour Lost had then appeared, which was probably his first dramattick composition, is it imaginable, that Harrington should have mentioned the Cambridge Pedantius, and The Play of the Cards, (which last, he tells us was a London comedy) and have passed by, unnoticed, the new prodigy of the dramattick world?

That Shakspeare had commenced a writer for the stage, and had even excited the jealousy of his contemporaries, before September 1592, is now decisively proved by a passage^k extracted

NOTES.

eminent. That malignity which endeavoured to tear a wreath from the brow of Shakspeare, would, certainly, not spare inferior writers.

¹ The thirty-first chapter of the first book of Puttenham's Art of English Poesy is thus entitled: "Who in any age have bene the most commended writers in our English Poelie, and the author's censure given upon them."

After having enumerated several authors who were then celebrated for various kinds of composition, he gives this succinct account of those who had written for the stage: "Of the later sort I thinke thus;—that for tragedie, the Lord Buckhurst and Maister Edward Ferrys, for such doings as I have sene of theirs, do deserve the best price; the Earl of Oxford and Maister Edwardes of her Majestie's Chappell, for comedie and enterlude."

* See vol. VI. p. ult. where the passage is given at large. The paragraph which immediately follows that quoted by Mr. Tyrwhitt, though obscure, is worth transcribing, as it seems to allude to Shakspeare's country education, and to intimate, that he had not removed to London long before the year 1592.—After having mentioned a person who had newly appeared in the double capacity of actor and author, one, "who is in his owne conceit the only Shake-scene in a country," and exhorted his brother poets to seek better masters than the players, Greene proceeds thus: "In this I might insert two more, that both have written against these buckram gentlemen [the players:] but let their owne worke serve to witnesse extracted by Mr. Tyrwhitt from Robert Greene's *Groatf-worth of Witte bought with a Million of Repentance*¹, in which there is an evident allusion to our author's name, as well as to one of his plays.

At what time soever he became acquainted with the theatre, we may presume that he had not composed his first play long before it was acted; for being early incumbered with a young family, and not in very affluent circumstances, it is improbable that he should have suffered it to lie in his closet, without endeavouring to derive some profit from it; and in the miserable state of the drama in those days, the meanest of his genuine plays must have been a valuable acquisition, and would hardly have been refused by any of the managers of our ancient theatres.

Titus Andronicus appears to have been acted before any other play attributed to Shakspeare; and therefore, as it has been admitted into all the editions of his works, whoever might have been the writer of it, it is entitled to the first place in this general list of his dramas. From Ben Jonson's induction to Bartholomew Fair, 1614, we learn that Andronicus had been exhibited twenty-five or thirty years before, that is, at the lowest computation, in 1589; or, taking a middle period, (which is perhaps more just) in 1587. In our author's dedication of his Venus and Adonis to lord Southampton, in 1593, he tells us, as Mr. Steevens has observed, that that poem was "the first beir of his invention;" and if we were sure that it was published immediately, or soon, after it was written, it would at once prove Titus Andronicus not to be the production of Shakspeare, and nearly ascertain the time when he commenced a dramatick writer. But we against their own wickednesse, if they persevere to maintaine any more such peasants. For other new-commers, I leave them to the mercie of these painted monsters, who, I doubt not, will drive the best minded to despise them, &c." Greene's Groatf-worth of Witte, &c. Sig. E. 4.

NOTES.

¹ This tract has no date, but was published after the author's death, agreeably to his dying request. It appears to have been written not long before his death; for near the conclusion he says, "Albeit weaknes will scarce suffer me to write, yet to my fellow schollers about this citie will I direct these few insuing lines." He died, according to Dr. Gabriel Harvey's account, on the third of September 1592. Additions by Oldys to Winstanley's Lives of the Poets, Mf.

do not know what interval might have elapsed between the composition and the publication of that poem. There is indeed a passage in the dedication already mentioned, which, if there were not such decisive evidence on the other side, might induce us to think that he had not written, in 1593, any piece of more dignity than a love-poem, or at least any on which he himself set a value. "If (says he to his noble patron) your honour seem but pleased, I account myself highly praised, and vow to take advantage of all idle hours, till I have honoured you with some graver labour."

"A booke, entitled a Noble Roman History of Titus Andronicus," (without any author's name) was entered at Stationers' Hall, Feb. 6, 1593—4. This I suppose to have been the play, as it was printed in that year, and acted (according to Langbaine, who alone appears to have seen the first edition) by the servants of the earls of Pembroke, Derby, and Essex.

Mr. Pope thought, that Titus Andronicus was not written by Shakspeare, because Ben Jonson spoke slightly of it, while Shakspeare was yet living. This argument will not, perhaps, bear a very strict examination. If it were allowed to have any validity, many of our author's genuine productions must be excluded from his works; for Ben Jonson has ridiculed several of his dramas, in the same piece in which he has mentioned Andronicus with contempt.

It has been said that Francis Meres, who in 1598 enumerated this among our author's plays, might have been misled by a title-page; but we may presume that he was informed or deceived by some other means; for Shakspeare's name is not in the title-page of the edition printed in 1611, and therefore, we may conclude, was not in the title page of that in 1594, of which the other was probably a re-impression.

However, (notwithstanding the authority of Meres) the high antiquity of the piece, its entry on the Stationers' books without the name of the writer, the regularity of the versification, the dissimilitude of the style from that of those plays which are undoubtedly composed by our author, and the tradition^m mentioned by Ravenscroft, at a period when

some

NOTES.

^m "I have been told, by some anciently conversant with the stage, that it [Titus Andronicus] was not originally his, but brought by a private author, to be acted, and he only gave some master some of his contemporaries had not been long dead^d, render it highly improbable that this play should have been the composition of Shakspeare.

2. LOVE'S LABOUR LOST, 1591.

Shakspeare's natural disposition leading him, as Dr. Johnson has observed, to comedy, it is highly probable that his first dramattick production was of the comick kind: and of his comedies none appears to me to bear stronger marks of a first essay than Love's Labour Lost. The frequent rhymes with which it abounds^o, of which, in his early performances touches to one or two of the principal parts or characters." Ravenscroft's preface to Titus Andronicus, altered by him.

NOTES.

^a John Lowin, and Joseph Taylor, two of the actors in Shakspeare's plays, were alive a few years before the Restoration of K. Charles II; and Sir William D'Avenant, who had himself written for the stage in 1629, (thirteen years after the death of our author) did not die till April 1668. Ravenscroft's alteration of Titus Andronicus was published in 1687.

^o As this circumstance is more than once mentioned, in the course of these observations, it may not be improper to add a few words on the subject of our author's metre. A mixture of rhymes with blank verse, in the same play, and sometimes in the same scene, is found in almost all his pieces, and is not peculiar to Shakspeare, being also found in the works of Jonson, and almost all our ancient dramattick writers. It is not, therefore, merely the use of rhymes, mingled with blank verse, but their frequency, that is here urged, as a circumstance which seems to characterize and distinguish our poet's earliest performances. In the whole number of pieces which were written antecedent to the year 1600, and which, for the sake of perspicuity, have been called his early compositions, more rhyming couplets are found, than in all the plays composed subsequently to that year; which have been named his late productions. Whether in process of time, Shakspeare grew weary of the bondage of rhyme, or whether he became convinced of its impropriety in a dramattick dialogue, his neglect of rhyming (for he never wholly disused it) seems to have been gradual. As, therefore, most of his early productions are characterized by the multitude of similar terminations which they exhibit, whenever, of two early pieces it is doubtful which preceded the other, I am disposed to believe, (other proofs being wanting) that play in which the greater number of rhymes is found, to have been first composed. This, however, must be acknowledged to be ances he seems to have been extremely fond, its imperfect versification, its artless and desultory dialogue, and the irregularity of the composition, may be all urged in support of this conjecture.

Love's Labour Lost was not entered at Stationers' hall till the 23d of January 1606, but is mentioned by Francis Meres^p in his Wit's Treasury, or the Second Part of Wit's Commonwealth^q, in 1598, and was printed in that year. In the title page of this edition, (the oldest hitherto discovered) this piece is said to have been presented before her majesty [Queen Elizabeth] the last Christmas [1597], and to be newly corrected and augmented: from which it should seem, that there had been a former impression.

Mr. Gildon, in his observations on Love's Labour Lost, says, "~~he cannot see why the author gave it this name~~"—The following lines exhibit the train of thoughts, which probably suggested to Shakspeare this title, as well as that which anciently was affixed to another of his comedies—Love's Labour Won.

"To be in love where scorn is bought with groans, Coy looks with heart-fore sighs; one fading moment's [mirth

With twenty watchful, weary, tedious nights:
If haply won, perhaps a hapless gain;
If lost, why then a grievous labour won."

Two Gentlemen of Verona. Act. I. sc. i.

N O T E S.

be but a fallible criterion; for the Three Parts of K. Henry VI. which appear to have been among our author's earliest compositions, do not abound in rhymes.

^p This writer, to whose list of our author's plays we are so much indebted, appears, from the following passage of the work here mentioned, to have been personally acquainted with Shakspeare:

"As the soul of Euphorbus was thought to live in Pythagoras, so the sweet witty soul of Ovid lives in mellifluous and honey-tongued Shakspeare. Witness his Venus and Adonis, his Lucrece, his sugred Sonnets among his private friends, &c." Wit's Treasury, p. 282. There is no edition of Shakspeare's Sonnets, now extant, of so early a date as 1598, when Meres's book was printed; so that we may conclude, he was one of those friends to whom they were privately recited, before their publication.

^q This book was probably published in the latter end of the year 1598; for it was not entered at Stationers' hall till September in that year.

3. THE FIRST PART OF KING HENRY VI. 1591.

The regular First Part of K. Henry VI. was not published till 1623, at which time it was entered 'at Stationers' hall by the printers of the earliest folio, under the name of the Third Part of K. Henry VI. In one sense it might be called so; for two parts had appeared before. But considering the history of that reign, and the period of time it comprehends, it ought to have been called, what in fact it is, the FIRST Part of K. Henry VI. Why this First Part was not entered on the Stationers' books with the other two, it is impossible now to determine. That it was written before the Second and Third Parts, Dr. Johnson thinks, appears indubitably from the series of events. "It is apparent," he says, "that the Second Part begins where the former ends, and continues the series of transactions of which it pre-supposes the first part already known. This is a sufficient proof that the Second and Third Parts were not written without dependence on the First, though they were printed as containing a complete period of history."

I once thought differently from the learned commentator; imagining that the First Part of King Henry VI. was not written till after the two other parts. But on an attentive examination of these three plays, I have found sufficient reason to subscribe to Dr. Johnson's opinion.

This piece is supposed to have been produced in the year 1591, on the authority of Thomas Nashe, who in a tract entitled Pierce Pennyles his Supplication to the Devil, which was published in '1592', expressly mentions one of the characters in it, who does not appear in the second or third Part of K. Henry VI. nor, I believe, in any other play of that time. "How (says he) would it have joyed brave Talbot, the terror of the French, to think that after he had lain two hundred years in his tomb, he should triumph again on the

NOTES.

* This was the first edition, for it was not entered on the Stationers' books before that year.

* Thus Talbot is described in the first part of K. Henry VI. Act I. sc. iii.

"Here, said they, is the terror of the French."

Again in Act V. sc. i.

"Is Talbot slain, the Frenchmens' only scourge,

"Your kingdom's terror?"—— stage,

stage, and have his bones new embalmed with the tears of ten thousand spectators at least (at several times), who, in the tragedian that represents his person, imagine they behold him fresh bleeding."

4. } SECOND AND THIRD PARTS OF KING HENRY VI.
5. } 1592.

In a tract already mentioned, entitled Greene's Groatsworth of Witte, &c. which was written before the end of the year 1592, there is, as Mr. Tyrwhitt has observed[†], a parody on a line in the Third Part of K. Henry VI. and an allusion to the name of Shakspeare.

These two historical dramas were entered on the books of the Stationers' company, March 12, 1593—4, but were not printed till the year 1600. In their second titles they are called—THE FIRST AND SECOND PARTS of the Contention of the two famous Houses of Yorke and Lancaster; but in reality they are THE SECOND and THIRD PARTS of King Henry VI.

In the last chorus of King Henry V. Shakspeare alludes to the Second Part, perhaps to all the parts of K. Henry VI. as popular performances, that had frequently been exhibited on the stage; and expresses a hope, that K. Henry V. may, for their sake, meet with a favourable reception: a plea, which he scarcely would have urged, if he had not been their author.

6. Pericles, Prince of Tyre, 1592.

There is reason to believe that Pericles, whoever was the writer of it, was composed about this time. The poet introduces John Gower by way of chorus to it, as Middleton introduces Rainulph, the monk of Chester, in his Mayor of Quinborough, and as Thomas Heywood does Skelton and Friar Tuck, in his Robert of Huntingdon: performances nearly of this date. Ben Jonson, in his ode on the ill reception of his New Inn, speaks of Pericles as a play of great antiquity, calling it a mouldy tale. It was not entered on the books of the Stationers' company till May 2, 1608, nor printed till 1609; but the following stanza, in a metrical

N O T E.

† See vol. VI. p. ult.

pamphlet, entitled Pymlico or Run away Redcap, published in 1596, ascertains it to have been written and exhibited on the stage, prior to that year:

“ Amaz’d I stood, to see a crowd
 “ Of civil throats stretch’d out so lowd:
 “ As at a new play, all the rooms
 “ Did swarm with gentles mix’d with grooms;
 “ So that I truly thought, all these
 “ Came to see *Shore, or Pericles.”

In this piece are introduced many dumb shews, which were much admired at this time; and they afford one argument against its being the production of Shakespeare; he having never admitted a serious dumb shew in any play unquestionably his: and having in Hamlet, four years after the date here assigned to Pericles, expressly marked his disapprobation of them, by calling them inexplicable. Dryden, however, seems to have thought Pericles genuine, and our author’s first composition:

“ Shakespeare’s own muse his Pericles first bore,
 “ The Prince of Tyre was elder than the Moor *.”

7. Locrine, 1593.

Entered on the Stationers’ books July 20, 1594. Printed in 1595, without any author’s name. In the title-page this piece is said to be newly set forth, overseene and corrected by W. S.

N O T E S.

* See the entry on the books of the Stationers’ company, June 19, 1594, where the lamentable End of Shore’s Wife is mentioned as a part of Richard III. This piece in which Shore’s wife was introduced was, probably, in possession of the stage a year or two before this entry; and from the manner in which these plays are mentioned in the verses above quoted, we may conclude that Pericles was equally ancient, and equally well known.

x Prologue to the tragedy of Circe, by Charles Davenant, 1677. —Mr. Rowe, in his Life of Shakespeare, (first edition) says, “ There is good reason to believe that the greatest part of Pericles was not written by him, though it is owned, some part of it certainly was, particularly the last act.” I have not been able to learn on what authority this latter assertion was grounded. —Rowe, in his second edition, omitted the passage.

8. THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA, 1593^r

This comedy was not entered on the books of the Stationers' company till 1623, at which time it was first printed; but is mentioned by Meres in 1598, and bears strong internal marks of an early composition.

9. THE WINTER'S TALE, 1594.

The Winter's Tale was, perhaps, entered on the Stationers' books, May 22, 1594, under the name of A Wynter Nyght's Pastime; which might have been the same play. It is observable that Shakspeare has two other similar titles;—Twelfth Night, and A Midsummer Night's Dream: and it appears that the titles of his plays were sometimes changed; thus, All's Well that Ends Well, we have reason to think, was called Love's Labour Won; and Hamlet was sometimes called Hamlet's REVENGE, sometimes The HISTORY of Hamlet. However, it must not be concealed, that The Winter's Tale is not enumerated among our author's plays, by Meres, in 1598: a circumstance which, yet, is not decisive to shew that it was not then written; for neither is Hamlet nor King Henry VI. mentioned by him.

Greene's Dorastus and Fawnia, from which the plot of this play is borrowed, was published in 1588.

The Winter's Tale was acted at court in the beginning of the year 1613^r. It was not printed till 1623.

*Mr. Walpole thinks, that this play was intended by Shakspeare as an indirect apology for Anne Boleyn; and considers it as a Second Part to K. Henry VIII.^r. My respect for that very judicious and ingenious writer, the silence of Meres, and the circumstance of there not being one rhyming couplet throughout this piece, except in the chorus, make me doubt whether it ought not to be ascribed to the year 1601, or 1602, rather than that in which it is here placed.

10. A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM, 1595.

The poetry of this piece, glowing with all the warmth

N O T E S.

^r Mf. of the late Mr. Vertue.

Historick Doubts. ^r

of a youthful and lively imagination, the many scenes, that it contains of almost continual rhyme^a, the poverty of the fable, and want of discrimination among the higher personages, dispose me to believe that it was one of our author's earliest attempts in comedy.

It seems to have been written, while the ridiculous competitions, prevalent among the histrionick tribe, were strongly impressed by novelty on his mind. He would naturally copy those manners first, with which he was first acquainted. The ambition of a theatrical candidate for applause he has happily ridiculed in Bottom the weaver. But among the more dignified persons of the drama we look in vain for any traits of character. The manners of Hippolita, the Amazon, are undistinguished from those of other females. Theseus, the associate of Hercules, is not engaged in any adventure, worthy of his rank or reputation, nor is he in reality an agent throughout the play. Like K. Henry VIII. he goes out a Maying. He meets the lovers in perplexity, and makes no effort to promote their happiness; but when supernatural accidents have reconciled them, he joins their company, and concludes his day's entertainment by uttering some miserable puns at an interlude represented by a troop of clowns. Over the fairy part of the drama he cannot be supposed to have any influence. This part of the fable, indeed, (at least as much of it as relates to the quarrels of Oberon and Titania) was not of our author's invention^b.—Through the whole

NOTES.

^a Ante p. 282.

^b The learned editor of Chaucer's Canterbury Tales, printed in 1775, observes in his introductory discourse (vol. IV. p. 161.) that Pluto and Proserpine in the Marchant's Tale, appear to have been "the true progenitors of Shakspeare's Oberon and Titania." In a tract already quoted, Greene's Groatsworth of Witte, 1532, a player is introduced, who boasts of having performed the part of the King of Fairies with applause. Greene himself wrote a play, entitled The Scottishe Story of James the Fourth, slaine at Floddon, intermixed with a pleasant Comedie presented by Oberon King of the Fairies; which was entered at Stationers' hall in 1594, and printed in 1599. Shakspeare, however, does not appear to have been indebted to this piece. The plan of it is shortly this: Bohan, a Scot, in consequence of being disgusted with the world, having retired to a tomb where he has fixed his dwelling, is met by After Oberon, king of the fairies, who entertains him with an antick or dance by his subjects. These two personages, after some conversation, whole piece, the more exalted characters are subservient to the interests of those beneath them. We laugh with Bottom and his fellows, but is a single passion agitated by the faint and childish sollicitudes of Hermia and Demetrius, of Helena and Lysander, those shadows of each other?—That a drama, of which the principal personages are thus insignificant, and the fable thus meagre and uninteresting, was one of our author's earliest compositions, does not, therefore, seem a very improbable conjecture; nor are the beauties with which it is embellished, inconsistent with this supposition; for the genius of Shakspeare, even in its minority, could embroider the coarsest materials with the brightest and most lasting colours.

A Midsummer Night's Dream was not entered at Stationers' hall till Oct. 8, 1600, in which year it was printed; but is mentioned by Meres in 1598.

From the comedy of Dr. Dodipoll Mr. Steevens has quoted a line, which the author seems to have borrowed from Shakspere:

" 'Twas I that led you through the painted meads,
 " Where the light fairies danc'd upon the flowers,
 " Hanging in ev'ry leaf an orient pearl."

So, in A Midsummer Night's Dream,

" And hang a pearl in ev'ry cowslip's ear."

Again,

" And that same dew, which sometimes on the buds
 " Was wont to swell, like round and orient pearls,
 " Stood now within the pretty flower's eyes,
 " Like tears," &c.—

There is no earlier edition of the anonymous play in which the foregoing lines are found, than that in 1600; but Dr. Dodipowle is mentioned by Nashe, in his preface to Gabriel Harvey's Hunt's up, printed in 1596. This, therefore, is another circumstance, that in some measure authorises the date here assigned to A Midsummer Night's Dream.

The passage in the fifth act, which, with some probabili-conversation, determine to listen to a tragedy, which is acted before them, and to which they make a kind of chorus, by moralizing at the end of each act.

NOTES.

ty, has been thought to allude to the death of Spenser*, is not inconsistent with the early appearance of this comedy; for it might have been inserted between the time of the poet's death, and the year 1600, when the play was published. And indeed, if the allusion was intended, the passage must have been added in that interval; for A Midsummer Night's Dream was certainly written in, or before, 1598, and Spenser, we are told by Sir James Ware, (whose testimony with respect to this controverted point must have great weight) did not die till 1599: "others, (he adds) have it wrongly, 1598." So careful a searcher into antiquity, who lived so near the time, is not likely to have been mistaken in a fact, concerning which he appears to have made particular enquiries.

II. ROMEO AND JULIET, 1595

It has been already observed, that our author, in his early plays appears to have been much addicted to rhyming; a practice from which he gradually departed, though he never wholly deserted it. In this piece more rhymes, I believe, are found, than in any other of his plays, Love's Labour Lost and A Midsummer Night's Dream only excepted. This circumstance, the story on which it is founded, so likely to captivate a young poet, the imperfect form in which it ori-

NOTES.

* "The thrice three muses mourning for the death
Of learning, late deceas'd in beggary."

• Preface to Spenser's View of the State of Ireland. Dublin, fol. 1633. This treatise was written, according to Sir James Ware, in 1596. The testimony of that historian, relative to the time of Spenser's death, is confirmed by a fact related by Ben Jonson to Mr. Drummond of Hawthornden, and recorded by that writer. When Spenser and his wife were forced in great distress to fly from their house, which was burnt in the Irish Rebellion, the Earl of Essex sent him twenty pieces; but he refused them; telling the person that brought them, he was sure he had no time to spend them. He died soon after, according to Ben Jonson's account, in King Street [Dublin.] Lord Essex was not in Ireland in 1598, and was there from April to September in the following year.—If Spenser had died in London, as Camden says he did, his death would probably have been mentioned by Rowland Whyte, in his letters to Sir Robert Sydney, (brother to the poet's great patron) which are still extant, and contain a minute detail of most of the memorable occurrences of that time.

ginally .

ginally appeared, and its very early publication^d, all incline me to believe that this was Shakspeare's first tragedy; for the three parts of K. Henry VI. do not pretend to that title.

"A new ballad of Romeo and Juliet," (perhaps our author's play) was entered on the Stationers' books August 5, 1596^e, and the first sketch of the play was printed in 1597; but it did not appear in its present form till two years afterwards.

Few of his plays appear to have been entered at Stationers' hall, till they had been some time in possession of the stage; on which account it may be conjectured that this tragedy was written in 1595.

If the following passage in an old comedy already mentioned, entitled Dr. Dodipoll, which had appeared before 1596, be considered as an imitation, it may add some weight to the supposition that Romeo and Juliet had been exhibited before that year:

"The glorious parts of fair Lucilia,

"Take them and join them in the heavenly spheres,

"And fix them there as an eternal light

"For lovers to adore and wonder at."

Dr. Dodipoll.

NOTES.

^a There is no edition of any of our author's genuine plays extant, prior to 1597, when Romeo and Juliet was published.

^b There is no entry in the Stationers' books relative to the tragedy of Romeo and Juliet, antecedent to its publication in 1597; if this does not relate to it. This entry was made by Edward Whyte, and therefore is not likely to have related to the poem called Romeo and Julietta, which was entered in 1582, by Richard Tottel. How vague the description of plays was at this time, may appear from the following entry, which is found in the Stationers' books, an. 1590, and seems to relate to Marlowe's tragedy of Tamburlaine, published in that year, by Richard Jones.

"To Richard Jones] Twoe Comical Discourses of Tamburlein, the Cythian Shepparde."

In Marlowe's Tamburlaine, as originally performed, several comick enterludes were introduced; whence perhaps, the epithet comical was added to the title.—As tragedies were sometimes entitled discourses, so a grave poem or sad discourse in verse, (to use the language of the times) was frequently denominated a tragedy. All the poems inserted in the Mirror for Magistrates, and some of Drayton's pieces, are called tragedies, by Meres and other ancient writers. Some of Sir David Lindsay's poems, though not in a dramattick form, are also by their author entitled tragedies.

“ Take him and cut him out into little stars,
 “ And he will make the face of heaven so fine,
 “ That all the world shall be in love with night,
 “ And pay no worship to the garish sun.”

Romeo and Juliet.

Mr. Steevens in his observations on Romeo and Juliet has quoted these lines from Daniel's Complaint of Rosamond :

“ And nought-respecting death (the last of paines) “ Plac'd his pale colours (th' ensign of his might)
 “ Upon his new-got spoil, &c.”

So in Romeo and Juliet, Act V. Sc. iii.

————— “ Beauty's ensign yet
 “ Is crimson in thy lips, and in thy cheeks,
 “ And death's pale flag is not advanced there.”

That Shakespeare imitated Daniel, or was imitated by him, there can, I think, be little doubt. The early appearance of The Complaint of Rosamond, (which is commended by Nashe, in a tract entitled Pierce Pennilesse his Supplication, &c. 1592,) seems to authorize the former opinion.

From a speech of the Nurse in this play, which contains these words—“ It is now since the earthquake eleven years, &c.” Mr. Tyrwhitt conjectures, that Romeo and Juliet, or at least part of it, was written in 1591; the novels from which Shakespeare may be supposed to have drawn his story, not mentioning any such circumstance; while, on the other hand, there actually was an earthquake in England on the 6th of April, 1580, which he might here have had in view.—It is not without great distrust of my own opinion that I express my dissent from a gentleman, to whose judgment the highest respect is due; but, I own, this argument does not appear to me conclusive. It seems extremely improbable, that Shakspeare, when he was writing this tragedy, should have adverted, with such precision, to the date of an earthquake that had been felt in his youth; unless we suppose him to have entertained so strange and incongruous a thought, as to wish to persuade his audience, that the events which

N O T E S.

1 “ A booke called Delia containynge diverse sonates, with the Complainte of Rosamonde,” was entered at Stationers' hall by Simon Waterson in Feb. 1591—2.

2 See Romeo and Juliet, Act I. Sc. iii.

are the subject of his play, happened at Verona in 1591, at the very moment that a dramatick representation of them was exhibiting in London: (for if Romeo and Juliet was written in 1591, it probably was then also represented.) The passage quoted strikes me, as only displaying one of those characteristical traits, which distinguish old people of the lower class; who delight in enumerating a multitude of minute circumstances that have no relation to the business immediately under their consideration^h, and are particularly fond of computing time from extraordinary events, such as battles, comets, plagues, and earthquakes. This feature of their character our author has in various places, strongly marked. Thus (to mention one of many instances) the Grave-digger in Hamlet says, that he came to his employment, "Of all the days i'th'year, that day that the last king o'ercame Fortinbras—that very day that young Hamlet was born."—Shakspeare probably remembered the earthquake in 1580, and thought he might introduce one, for the nonce, at Mantua. Why he has placed this earthquake at the distance of eleven years, it is not very easy to determine. However, it may be observed, that having supposed it to have happened on the day on which Juliet was weaned, he could not well have made it more distant than thirteen years; which, indeed, from the context, should seem to be the true reading. Supposing the author to have used figures, the mistake might easily have happened.—At present there is a manifest contradiction in the Nurse's account; for she expressly says that Juliet was within a fortnight and odd days of completing her fourteenth year; and yet, according to the computation here made, she could not well be much more than twelve years old. Perhaps Shakspeare was more careful to mark the garrulity, than the precision, of the old woman—or perhaps, he meant this very incorrectness as a trait of her character:—or, without having recourse to either of these suppositions, shall we say, that our author was here, as in some other places, hasty and inattentive? It is certain

NOTE.

^h Thus "Mrs. Quickly in K. Henry IV. reminds Falstaff, that he "swore on a parcel-gilt goblet, to marry her, sitting in her Dolphin chamber, at a round table, by a sea-coal fire, on Wednesday in Whitsun week, when the prince broke his head for liking his father to a singing man of Windsor."

that there is nothing in which he is less accurate, than the computation of time. Of his negligence in this respect, As you Like It, The Merry Wives of Windsor, Measure for Measure, and Othello, furnish remarkable instances.¹

12. COMEDY OF ERRORS, 1596.

In a tract, written by Thomas Decker, entitled Newes from Hell brought by the Devil's Carrier, 1606, there seems to be an allusion to this comedy:

"— his ignorance (arising from his blindness) is the only cause of this Comedie of Errors."

This play was neither entered on the Stationers' books, nor printed, till 1623, but is mentioned by Meres in 1598; and exhibits internal proofs of having been an early production. It could not, however, have been written before 1596; for the translation of the Menæchmi of Plautus, from which the plot was taken, was not published till 1595.

13. HAMLET, 1596.

The tragedy of Hamlet was not registered in the books of the Stationers' company till the 26th of July 1602, nor printed till 1604. This circumstance, and indeed the general air of the play itself, which has not, it must be owned, the appearance of an early composition, might induce us to class it five or six years later than 1596, were we not overpowered by the proof adduced by Dr. Farmer, and by other circumstances, from which it appears to have been acted in, or before, that year^k. The piece, however, which was then exhibited, was probably but a rude sketch of that which we now possess; for from the title page of the first edition, in 1604, we learn, that (like Romeo and Juliet, and the

NOTES.

¹ See Merry Wives of Windsor, A& II. Sc. last.—Meas. for Meas. A& I. Sc. iii. and iv.—As you Like It, A& IV. Sc. i. and iii.—Othello, A& III. Sc. iii. "I slept the next night well," &c.

^k "Dr. Lodge published, in the year 1596, a pamphlet called Wit's Miseric, or the World's Madnesse, discovering the incarnate Devils of the age, quarto. One of these devils is Hate-virtue, or sorrow for another man's success, who, says the doctor, is a foule lubber, and looks as pale as the vizard of the ghost, who cried so miserably at the theatre, Hamlet revenge." Farmer's Essay on the Learning of Shakespeare.

Merry Wives of Windsor) it had been enlarged to almost twice its original size.

The Case is altered, a comedy, attributed to Ben Jonson, and written before the end of the year 1599¹, contains a passage, which seems to me to have a reference to this play:

Angelo. "But first I'll play the ghost; I'll call him out^m."

In the second act of Hamlet, a contest between the children of the queen's chapelⁿ, and the actors of the established theatres, is alluded to. At what time that contest began, is uncertain. But, should it appear not to have commenced till some years after the date here assigned, it would not, I apprehend, be a sufficient reason for ascribing this play to a later period; for, as we are certain that considerable additions were made to it after its first production, and have some authority for attributing the first sketch of it to 1596, till that authority is shaken, we may presume, that any passage which is inconsistent with that date, was not in the play originally, but a subsequent insertion.

^a With respect to the allusion in question, it probably was an addition; for it is not found in the quarto of 1604, (which has not the appearance of a mutilated or imperfect copy,) nor did it appear in print till the publication of the folio in 1623.

The same observation may be made on the passage produced by Mr. Holt, to prove that this play was not written till after 1597. "Their inhibition comes by means of the late innovation." This, indeed, does appear in the quarto of 1604, but, we may presume, was added in the interval be-ⁿ Between the years 1595 and 1600, some of Lilly's comedies were performed by these children. Many of the plays of Jonson were represented by them between 1600 and 1609.—From a passage in Jack Drum's Entertainment, or the Comedy of Pasquil and Catherine, which was printed in 1601, we learn that they were much followed at that time.

N O T E S.

¹ This comedy was not printed till 1609, but it had appeared many years before. The time when it was written, is ascertained with great precision by the following circumstances. It contains an allusion to Meres's Wit's Treasury, first printed in the latter end of the year 1598, (Ante p. 276.) and is itself mentioned by Nashe in his Lenten Stuff, 4to. 1599.—"It is right of the merry cobbler's stuff, in that witty play of the Case is Altered."

^m Jonson's works, vol. VII. p. 362. Whalley's edit.

tween 1597, (when the statute alluded to,—39 Eliz. ch. 4—was enacted) and that year.

Hamlet° Sadler was one of the witnesses to Shakspeare's Will. He was probably born soon after the first exhibition of this play; and, according to this date, was twenty years old at the time of his attestation.

If this tragedy had not appeared till some years after the date here assigned, he would not have been at the time of Shakspeare's death above sixteen or seventeen years old; at which age he scarcely would have been chosen as a witness to so solemn an act.

The following passage, in An Epistle to the Gentlemen Students of the Two Universities by Thomas Nashe, prefixed to Greene's Arcadia, (which has no date) has been thought to allude to this play.—“I will turn back to my first text of studies of delight, and talk a little in friendship with a few of our trivial translator. It is a common practice now a-days, among a sort of shifting companions, that runne through every art, and thrive by none, to leave the trayle of Noverint, whereto they were born, and busie themselves with the endeavors of art, that could scarcely latinize their neck-verse if they should have neede; yet English Seneca, read by candle light, yeelds many good sentences, as Bloud is a beggar, and so forth: and if you intreat him faire in a frosty morning he will afford you whole hamlets, I should say, handfulls of tragical speeches. But O grief! Tempus edax rerum—what is that will last always? The sea exhaled by drops will in continuance be drie; and Seneca, let bloud line by line and page by page, at length must needes die to our stage.”

This passage does not, in my apprehension, decisively prove that our author's Hamlet was written so early as 1591; (in which year° Dr. Farmer, on good grounds, conjectures that

NOTES.

° It has been observed to me, that there are other instances of this being used as a christian name; it is certainly very uncommon; and may be fairly supposed, in this case, to have taken its rise from the play.—After all, however, it is not quite clear that this was his name. The name subscribed to Shakspeare's original Will (which I have seen) seems to be Hamnet: but in the body of the Will, he is called Hamlet Sadler.

° Mr. Oldys, in his Mss. Additions to Langbaine's Lives of the Dramatick Poets, says, on I know not what authority, that Greene's Arcadia° that Greene's Arcadia was published:) for supposing this to have been a sneer at Shakspeare, it might have been inserted in some new edition of this tract after 1596; it being a frequent practice of Nashe and Greene, to make additions to their pamphlets at every re-impression.

But it is by no means clear, that Shakspeare was the person whom Nashe had here in contemplation. He seems to point at some dramattick writer of that time, who had been originally a scrivener or attorney:

"A clerk foredoom'd his father's soul to cross, Who pen'd a stanza when he should engross"— who, instead of transcribing deeds and pleadings, chose to imitate Seneca's plays, of which a translation had been published not many years before.—"The trade of Noverrint" is the trade of an attorney or notary^a. Shakspeare was not bred to the law, at least we have no such tradition; nor, however freely he may have borrowed from North's Plutarch and Holinshed's Chronicle, does he appear to be at all indebted to the translation of Seneca.

Of all the writers of the age of queen Elizabeth, Nashe is the most licentious in his language; perpetually distorting words from their primitive signification, in a manner often puerile and ridiculous, but more frequently incomprehensible and absurd. His prose works, if they were collected together, would perhaps exhibit a greater variety of unintelligible jargon, than is to be found in the productions of any author ancient or modern. An argument that rests on a term used by such a writer, has but a weak foundation.

The phrase—"whole Hamlets of trivial speeches"—is certainly intelligible, without supposing an allusion to the play; and might have only meant a large quantity.—We meet a similar expression in our author's Cymbeline.

"I'd let a parish of such Clotens blood."—

NOTES.

Arcadia was printed in 1589. If he is right, it is still less probable that this passage should have related to our author's Hamlet.

^a *"The Country Lawyers too jog down apace,
Each with his noverrint universi face."*

Ravencroft's Prologue prefixed to Titus Andronicus.
Our ancient deeds were written in Latin, and frequently began with the words, Noverrint Universi. The form is still retained.
Know all men, &c.

It should also be observed, that "hamlets," in the foregoing passage, is not printed in Italicks, though the word Seneca, in the same sentence, is; and all the quotations, authors' names, and books mentioned in this epistle, are distinguished by that character.

14. KING JOHN, 1596.

This is the only one of the uncontested plays of Shakspeare, that is not entered in the books of the Stationers' company. It was not printed till 1623, but is mentioned by Meres in 1598, unless he mistook the old play in two parts, printed in 1591, for the composition of Shakspeare.

In the first act of King John, an ancient tragedy, entitled Solyman and Perseda, is alluded to. The earliest edition of that play, now extant, is that of 1599, but it was written, and probably acted, many years before; for it was entered on the Stationers' books, by Edward Whyte, Nov. 20, 1592.

Marston's Insatiate Countess, printed in 1603, contains a passage, which, if it should be considered as an imitation of a similar one in King John, will ascertain this historical drama to have been written at least before that year:

"Then how much more in me, whose youthful veins,

"Like a proud river, overflow their bounds."

So in King John:

"Why holds thine eye that lamentable rheum,

"Like a proud river peering o'er his bounds."

15. RICHARD II. 1597.

King Richard II. was entered on the Stationers' books, August, 29, 1597, and printed in that year.

Dr Farmer supposes that there was a former play on this subject, because when Sir Gilly Merricke, one of the fol-

N O T E.

It is observable, that on the republication of this old play in 1611, the two parts are set forth—"as they were (undry times) lately acted by the Queene's Majesties servants"—a description, which, probably, was copied literally from the former edition in 1591. If this had been really Shakspeare's performance, it would have been described, on its re-impression, as acted by his Majesty's servants; for so runs the title of most of his genuine pieces, that were either originally printed or re-published after the year 1603. The bookseller, the better to impose on the publick, prefixed the letters W. Sh. to the new edition of this play in 1611, which do not appear in the former impression in 1591.

lowers of the Earl of Essex, on the 7th of February 1600—1,¹ desired a company of actors to perform King Richard II. they alleged “that the play was old, and that they should have a loss in playing it.”

Our author's performance, however, might have been intended; and the players, perhaps, considered a play as old, that had been three or four years in possession of the stage. They might have only meant, that it was not of that season. Indeed, I the rather think that this was their meaning, because there is no trace in the Stationers' books, nor in any ancient catalogue that I have seen, of any play on this subject, except that of Shakspeare.

In further support of his hypothesis, Dr. Farmer relies on the doctrines of indefeasible right contained in this play, which, he thinks, could not have been agreeable to the insurgents abovementioned. But they do not appear to have been so much concerned about the sentiments of the piece, (with which, perhaps, they were unacquainted) as desirous to behold the catastrophe that it exhibits.—This, I conceive, may be collected from the paragraph subjoined to that which Dr. Farmer has quoted—“So earnest hee (Merrick) was, to satisfy his eyes with a sight of that tragedie, which he thought soone after his Lord should bring from the stage to the state.”

16. RICHARD III. 1597.

Entered at the Stationers' hall, Oct. 20, 1597. Printed in that year.

17. FIRST PART OF K. HENRY IV. 1597.

Entered Feb. 25, 1597, according to our present reckoning, 1598. Written therefore probably in 1597. Printed in 1598.

18. THE MERCHANT OF VENICE, 1598.

Entered July 22, 1598; and mentioned by Meres in that year. Published in 1600.

19. ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL, 1598.

All's Well that Ends Well was not registered at Stationers'

NOTE.

- * Proceedings at the Arraignment of Sir Gilly Merricke, 4to. 1601. hall, hall, nor printed, till 1623; but probably is the play mentioned by Meres, in 1598, under the title of Love's Labour Won. This comedy was, I believe, also sometimes called A Bad Beginning makes a Good Ending; for I find that a play with that title, together with Hotspur, Benedict and Beatrix, and several others, was acted at court, by John Heminge's company in the year 1613: and no such piece is to be found in any collection however complete or extensive, nor is such a title preserved in any list or catalogue whatsoever. As the titles of Hotspur, and Benedict and Beatrix, were substituted in the place of the first part of K. Henry IV. and Much about Nothing, it is probable that the other was only a new name for All's Well that Ends Well.

By an entry in the hand writing of king Charles I. in a copy of the second edition of our author's plays in folio, which formerly belonged to that monarch, and is now in the possession of Mr. Steevens, it appears, that this play was also sometimes called Mr. Parolles.

20. Sir John Oldcastle, 1598,

This play was entered at Stationers' hall, August 4, 1600, and printed in the same year. It was acted very early in that year, by the Lord Chamberlain's servants, before Mons. Vereiken, ambassador to Queen Elizabeth from the Archduke and the Infanta.

The prologue to this piece furnishes a strong argument to shew that it was not written by Shakspeare. The following lines particularly deserve our attention:

- " The doubtfull title, (gentlemen) prefix
- " Upon the argument we have in hand
- " May breed suspence ———
- " To stop which scruple let this breefe suffice:
- " It is no pamper'd glutton we present,
- " Nor aged counsellour to youthfull sinne;
- " But one whose vertue shone above the rest,
- " A valiant martyr, and a vertuous peere—
- " ————— Let fa'r truth be grac'd,
- " Since forg'd invention former time defac'd."

N O T E.

* On the 16th of March 1599, in fact 1600. See the Letters of the Sydney Family, vol. II. p. 175.

The..

The character here alluded to, which the author was apprehensive the audience might confound with his virtuous peer, appears to have been one that had been exhibited in the old play of King Henry V. (* prior to Shakspeare's) under the name of Sir John Oldcastle². This exhibition was the forg'd invention that had defaced former time. In this old play are found the outlines of some of the characters which Shakspeare has introduced in the two parts of King Henry IV. and King Henry V. The Sir John Oldcastle of the old play was probably the prototype of Sir John Falstaff. It is not necessary here to enter into the question, whether Falstaff was originally called by the name of Oldcastle. Whether he was or not, these lines could not, I apprehend, have come from the pen of Shakspeare. If Falstaff originally went by the name of Oldcastle, Shakspeare was then as guilty as the author of the old Henry V. and he never would have arraigned himself for exhibiting the pampered glutton and aged debauchee, under the name of Sir John Oldcastle, the good lord Cobham. Though this were not the case, and the fat knight bore originally the name of Falstaff, Shakspeare would hardly have touched upon this string; for the representing of Sir John Fastolfe, a celebrated general, and a knight of the garter, under the character of a debauchee and a counsellor to youthful sin, was no less a forgery, and a departure from the truth of history, than the other.

Our author himself too seems to ridicule this very prologue, in his epilogue to the Second Part of King Henry IV. "For Oldcastle dyed a martyr, and this is not the man."— This surely ought to decide the question.

This reference induces me to think that Sir John Oldcastle was written before the Second Part of King Henry IV.

21. SECOND PART OF K. HENRY IV. 1598.

The Second Part of K. Henry IV. was entered on the Sta-

N O T E S.

* The old K. Henry V. must have been written before 1590, for Tarleton, who acted two parts in it, (the Clown, and the Judge) died in that year.

* If the allusion should be supposed to have been, not to the Oldcastle of the old play, but to our author's Sir John Falstaff, as exhibited in THE FIRST PART of King Henry IV. such a supposition will not at all weaken the argument in the text.

tioners' books, August 23, 1600, and was printed in that year. It was probably written in the latter end of the year 1598, for from the epilogue it appears to have been composed before K. Henry V. which itself must have been written in, or before, 1599.

It is observable that the FIRST PART of K. Henry IV. was entered at Stationers' hall, in the beginning of the year 1598, by the name of "A Booke entitled the Historie of Henry the Fourth, &c." At that time, it is probable, the author had not conceived the idea of exhibiting Falstaff in a second drama, and therefore that play was not then distinguished by the title of The FIRST Part. When the same piece was entered about a year afterwards, on the 9th of Jan. 1598—9, it was entitled, "A booke called The FIRST Part of the Life and Reign of K. Henry IV. extending to the end of the first year of his reign." The poet having now composed two plays on this subject, distinction became necessary. The SECOND Part of K. Henry IV. we may, therefore, conclude with certainty, was written in the interval between these two entries, that is, some time in the year 1598, probably in the latter part of it; for Meres, who in his Wit's Treasury, (which was not published before September in that year) has enumerated Henry IV. among our author's plays, does not speak of it as a first part, nor does he mention it as a play in two parts. His words are these: "As Plautus and Seneca are accounted the best for comedy and tragedy, among the Latines, so Shakespeare, among the English, is the most excellent in both kinds for the stage: for comedy, witness his Gentlemen of Verona, his Errors, his Love's Labour Lost, his Love's Labour Wonne, his Midsummer Night's Dream, and his Merchant of Venice; for tragedy, his Richard II. Richard III. HENRY IV. K. John, Titus Andronicus, and his Romeo and Juliet."

The following allusion to one of the characters in this play, which is found in Ben Jonson's Every Man out of his Humour, Act V. Sc. ii. first acted in 1599, is an additional

NOTES.

1 The circumstance of Hotspur's death in this play, and its being an historical drama, I suppose, induced Meres to denominate the First Part of Henry IV. a tragedy.

* Wit's Treasury, p. 282.

authority for supposing the Second Part of K. Henry IV. to have been written in 1598.

“ Savi. What’s he, gentle Monf. Brisk? Not that gentleman?

“ Fast. No, Lady; this is a kinsman to Justice Silence.”

22. K. HENRY V. 1599.

Mr. Pope thought that this historical drama was one of our author’s latest compositions; but he was evidently mistaken. King Henry V. was entered on the Stationers’ books, August 14, 1600, and printed in the same year. It was written after the Second Part of K. Henry IV. being promised in the epilogue of that play; and while the Earl of Essex was in Ireland*. Lord Essex went to Ireland April 15, 1599, and returned to London on the 28th of September in the same year. So that this play (unless the passage relative to him was inserted after the piece was finished) must have been composed between April and September, 1599. Supposing that passage a subsequent insertion, the play was probably not written long before; for it is not mentioned by Meres in 1598.

The prologue^b to Ben Jonson’s Every Man in his Humour seems clearly to allude to this play; and, if we were sure that it was written at the same time with the piece itself, might induce us, notwithstanding the silence of Meres, to place King Henry V. a year or two earlier; for Every Man in his Humour is said to have been acted in 1598. But I suspect that the prologue which now appears before it was not writ.

N O T E S,

* See the Chorus to the fifth act of King Henry V.

b “ He rather prays you will be pleased to see

“ One such, to-day, as other plays should be;

“ Where neither Chorus wafts you o’er the seas, &c.”

Prologue to Every Man in his Humour.

These lines formerly appeared to me so decisive with respect to the date of this piece, that I have quoted them, in a note on K. Henry V. to show that this historical drama must have been written before 1598; an opinion from which, for the reasons above stated, I am now disposed to recede.

ten till 1601, when the play was printed^c. It appears to have been Jonson's first performance^d; and we may presume that it was the very play, which, we are told, was brought on the stage by the good offices of Shakspeare, who himself acted in it^e. Malignant and envious as Jonson appears to have been, he hardly would have ridiculed his benefactor at the very time he was so essentially obliged to him. In two or three years afterwards, his jealousy probably broke out, and vented itself in this prologue. It is certain that, not long after the year 1600, a coolness^f arose between Shakspeare

NOTES.

* That this attack on King Henry V. was made in 1601, appears the more probable from this circumstance:—in Ben Jonson's Poetaster, which was first acted in that year, several passages of this play are ridiculed.

^d Jonson himself tells us in his Induction to the Magnetick Lady, that this was his first dramatick performance.—“The author beginning his studies of this kind with Every Man in his Humour.”

^e If the names of the actors, prefixed to this play, were arranged in the same order as the persons represented, which is very probable, Shakspeare played the part of Old Knowell. It is said, that he also played the part of Adam in As you Like It; and we are informed by Betterton that he performed the Ghost in his own Hamlet. We may presume, therefore, that he usually represented old men.

^f See an old comedy called The Return from Parthassus: [This piece was not published till 1606; but appears to have been written in 1602—certainly was produced before the death of Queen Elizabeth, which happened on the 24th of March 1603.] “Why here's our fellow Shakspeare puts them all down; ay and Ben Jonson too. O that Ben Jonson is a pestilent fellow; he brought up Horace giving the poets a pill, but our fellow Shakspeare hath given him a purge that made him bewray his credit.”

The play of Jonson's in which he gave the poets a pill, and endeavoured to ridicule some words used by Shakspeare, is the Poetaster, acted in 1601. In what manner Shakspeare put him down, or made him bewray his credit, does not appear. His retaliation, we may be well assured, contained no gross or illiberal abuse; and, perhaps, did not go beyond a ballad or an epigram, which may have perished with things of greater consequence. He has, however, marked his disregard for the calumniator of his fame, by not leaving him any memorial by his Will.—In an apologetical dialogue that Jonson annexed to the Poetaster, he says, he had been provoked for three years (i. e. from 1597 to 1601) on every stage by slanderers; as for the players, he says,

“It

Shakspeare and him, which, however, he may talk of his almost idolatrous affection, produced on his part, from that time to the death of our author, and for many years afterwards, much clumsy farcasm and many malevolent reflections.

On

NOTES.

“ It is true, I tax’d them,
And yet but some, and those so sparingly,
As all the rest might have sat still unquestion’d —
——— What they have done against me
I am not mov’d with. If it gave them meat,
Or got them cloaths, ’tis well; that was their end.
Only, amongst them, I am sorry for Some better natures, by the rest drawn in
To run in that vile line.”

By the words “ Some better natures” there can, I think, be little doubt that Shakspeare was alluded to.

§ In his Silent Woman, Act V. Sc. ii. 1609. Jonson seems to point at Shakspeare, as one whom he viewed with scornful, yet with jealous, eyes:

“ So, they may censure poets and authors, and compare them; Daniel with Spenser, Jonson with t’other youth, and so forth.”

In the Induction to Bartholomew Fair, which was acted in 1614, two years before the death of our author, three of his plays, and in the piece itself two others, are attempted to be ridiculed.

The Induction to The Staple of News, which appeared in 1625, not very long after the publication of our author’s plays in folio, contains a sneer at a passage in Julius Cæsar —

“ Know Cæsar doth not wrong; nor without cause
Will he be satisfied —” which for the purpose of ridicule is quoted unfaithfully; and in the same play may be found an effort, as impotent as that of Voltaire*, to raise a laugh at Hamlet’s exclamation when he kills Polonius.

Some other passages which are found in Jonson’s works, might be mentioned in support of this observation, but being quoted hereafter for other purposes, they are here omitted.

Notwithstanding these proofs, Jonson’s malevolence to Shakspeare, and jealousy of his superior reputation, have been doubted by Mr. Pope and others; and much stress has been laid on a passage in his Discoveries, and on the commendatory verses prefixed to the first edition of our author’s plays in folio.—The reader,

* “ Ab! ma mere, s’écrie-t-il, il y a un gros rat derrière la tapisserie—il tire la queue, court au rat, et tue le bon homme Polonius.”—Oeuvres de Voltaire. Tome XV. p. 473. 4to.

On this play Mr. Pope has the following note, Act I. Sc. i.

“ This first scene was added since the edition of 1608, which is much short of the present editions, wherein the speeches are generally enlarged, and raised; several whole scenes besides, and the choruses also, were since added by Shakespeare.”——

Dr. Warburton also positively asserts that this first scene was written after the accession of K. James I. and the subsequent editors agree, that several additions were made by the author to King Henry V. after it was originally composed. But there is, I believe, no good ground for these assertions. It is true that no perfect edition of this play was published der, after having perused the following character of Jonson, drawn by Mr. Drummond of Hawthornden, a contemporary, and an intimate acquaintance of his, will not, perhaps, readily believe these posthumous encomiums to have been sincere. “ Jonson, (says that writer) was a great lover and praiser of himself; a contemner and scorner of others, rather chusing to lose a friend than a jest; jealous of every word and action of those about him, especially after drink, which was one of the elements he lived in; a dissembler of the parts which reigned in him; a bragger of some good that he wanted: he thought nothing right, but what either himself or some of his friends had done. He was passionately kind and angry; careless either to gain or to keep; vindictive, but, if he was well answered, greatly chagrined; interpreting the best sayings often to the worst *. He was for any religion, being versed in all. His inventions were smooth and easy, but above all, he excelled in translation. In short, he was, in his personal character, the very reverse of Shakespeare; as furly, ill-natured, proud and disagreeable, as Shakespeare, with ten times his merit, was gentle, good-natured, easy, and amiable.” Drummond's Works, fol. 1711.

N O T E S.

In the year 1619 Jonson went to Scotland, to visit Mr. Drummond, who has left a curious account of a conversation that passed between them, relative to the principal poets of those times.

From a natural partiality to his author, the foregoing well-authenticated character was suppressed by the last learned editor of Jonson's works.

* His misquoting a line of Julius Cæsar, so as to render it nonsense, at a time when the play was in print, is a strong illustration of this part of his character. The plea of an unfaithful memory cannot be urged in his defence, for he tells us in his Discoveries, that till he was past forty, he could repeat every thing that he had written.

before that in folio, in 1623; but it does not follow from thence, that the scenes which then first appeared in print, and all the choruses, were added by Shakspeare, as Mr. Pope supposes, after 1608. We know indeed the contrary to be true; for the chorus to the fifth act must have been written in 1599. The fair inference to be drawn from the imperfect and mutilated copies of this play; published in 1600, 1602, and 1608, is, not that the whole play, as we now have it, did not then exist, but that those copies were surreptitious, (probably taken down in short hand, during the representation;) and that the editor in 1600, not being able to publish the whole, published what he could.

I have not indeed met with any evidence (except in three plays) that the several scenes which are found in the folio of 1623, and are not in the preceding quartos, were added by the second labour of the author.—The last chorus of K. Henry V. already mentioned, affords a striking proof that this was not always the case. The two copies of the Second Part of K. Henry IV. printed in the same year (1600) furnish another. In one of these, the whole first scene of Act III. is wanting; not because it was then unwritten, (for it is found in the other copy published in that year) but because the editor was not possessed of it. That what have been called additions by the author, were not really such, may be also collected from another circumstance; that in some of the quartos where these supposed additions are wanting, references and replies are found to the passages omitted^b.

I do not however mean to say, that Shakspeare never made any alterations in his plays. We have reason to believe that Romeo and Juliet, Hamlet, and the Merry Wives of Windsor, were entirely new written; and a second revival or temporary topicks might have suggested, in a course of years, some additions and alterations in all his pieces. But with respect to the entire scenes that are wanting in some of the

NOTE.

^b Of this see a remarkable instance in K. Henry IV. P. II. Act 1. sc. i. where Morton in a long speech having informed Northumberland that the archbishop of York had joined the rebel party, the Earl replies,—“I knew of this before”—The quarto contains the reply, but not a single line of the narrative to which it relates.

early editions, (particularly those of K. Henry V. the Second and Third Part of King Henry VI. and the Second Part of King Henry IV.) I suppose the omissions to have arisen from the imperfection of the copies; and instead of saying that "the first scene of K. Henry V. was added by the author after the publication of the quarto in 1600," all that we can pronounce with certainty is, that this scene is not found in the quarto of 1600.

23. The Puritan, 1600.

Printed in 1600, without the name of Shakspeare. In the title page are the letters W. S.

24. MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING, 1600.

Much Ado about Nothing, was written, we may presume, early in the year 1600; for it was entered at Stationers' hall, August 23, 1600, and printed in that year.

It is not mentioned by Meres in his list of our author's plays, published in the latter end of the year 1598.

25. AS YOU LIKE IT, 1600.

This comedy was not printed till 1623, and the caveat or memorandum¹ in the second volume of the books of the Stationers' company, relative to the three plays of As You Like it, Henry V. and Much Ado about Nothing, has no date except Aug. 4. But immediately above that caveat there is an entry, dated May 27, 1600,—and the entry, immediately following it, is dated Jan. 23, 1603. We may therefore presume that this caveat was entered between those two periods: more especially, as the dates scattered over the pages where this entry is found, are, except in one instance, in a regular series from 1596 to 1615. This will appear more clearly by exhibiting the entry exactly as stands in the book:

NOTE.

¹ See Mr. Steevens's extracts from the books of the Stationers' company, ante p. 256.

27 May 1600.

To Mr. Roberts.] Allarum to London:

4 Aug.

As You Like It, a book.

Henry the Fifth, a book.

Every Man in his Humour, a book.

Comedy of Much Ado about Nothing.

} to be staied;

23 Jan. 1603.

To Thomas Thorpe,
and William Aspley.

} This to be their copy, &c.

It is extremely probable that this 4th of August was of the year 1600; which standing a little higher on the paper, the clerk of the Stationers' company might have thought unnecessary to be repeated. All the plays which were entered with As You Like it, and are here said to be staied, were printed in the year 1600 or 1601. The stay or injunction against the printing appears to have been very speedily taken off; for in ten days afterwards, on the 14th of August 1600, King Henry V. was entered, and published in the same year. So, Much Ado about Nothing, was entered August 23, 1600, and printed also in that year: and Every Man in his Humour was published in 1601.

Shakspeare, it is said, played the part of Adam in As You Like It. As he was not eminent on the stage, it is probable that he ceased to act some years before he retired to the country. His appearance, however, in this comedy, is not inconsistent with the date here assigned; for we know that he performed a part in Jonson's Sejanus in 1603.

26. MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR, 1601.

The first sketch of this comedy was printed in 1602. It was entered in the books of the Stationers' company, on the 18th of January 1601—2, and was therefore probably written in 1601, after the two parts of K. Henry IV. being, it is said, composed at the desire of queen Elizabeth, in order to exhibit Falstaff in love, when all the pleasantry which he could afford in any other situation was exhausted. But it may not be thought so clear, that it was written after K.

Henry V. Nym and Bardolph are both hanged in K. Henry V. yet appear in The Merry Wives of Windsor. Falstaff is disgraced in the Second Part of K. Henry IV. and dies in K. Henry V. But in the Merry Wives of Windsor he talks as if he were yet in favour at court; “If it should come to the ear of the court how I have been transformed, &c.” and Mr. Page discountenances Fenton’s addresses to his daughter, because he kept company with the wild Prince and with Pointz. These circumstances seem to favour the supposition that this play was written between the First and Second Parts of K. Henry IV. But that it was not written then, may be collected from the tradition above mentioned. If it should be placed (as Dr. Johnson observes it should be read) between the Second Part of K. Henry IV. and Henry V. it must be remembered, that Mrs. Quickly, who is half-bawd half-hostess in K. Henry IV. is, in the Merry Wives of Windsor, Dr. Caius’s house-keeper, and makes a decent appearance; and in K. Henry V. is Pistol’s wife, and dies in an hospital; a progression that is not very natural. Besides on Mrs. Quickly’s first appearance in the Merry Wives of Windsor, Falstaff does not know her, nor does she know Pistol nor Bardolph. The truth, I believe, is, that it was written after K. Henry V. and after Shakspeare had killed Falstaff. In obedience to the royal commands, having revived him, he found it necessary at the same time to revive all those persons with whom he was wont to be exhibited; Nym, Pistol, Bardolph and the Page: and disposed of them as he found it convenient, without a strict regard to their situations or catastrophes in former plays.

There is reason to believe that The Merry Wives of Windsor was revised and considerably enlarged by the author, after its first production. The old edition in 1602, like that of Romeo and Juliet, is apparently a rough draught, and not a mutilated or imperfect copy. At what time the alterations and additions were made, is uncertain. Mr. War-ton supposes them to have been made in 1607. Dr. Farmer concurs with him in that opinion, though he does not think the argument on which it is founded, conclusive. I have not met with any information on this head.

This comedy was not printed in its present state, till 1623, when it was published with the rest of our author’s plays in folio.

27. K. HENRY VIII. 1601.

This play seems to have been entered on the Stationers' books, February 12, 1604, under the title of *the Enterlude of K. Henry VIII. It was probably written, as Dr. Johnson and Mr. Steevens observe, before the death of queen Elizabeth, which happened on the 24th of March 1603. The eulogium on king James, which is blended with the panegyrick on Elizabeth, in the last scene, was evidently a subsequent insertion, after the accession of the Scottish monarch to the throne: for Shakspeare was too well acquainted with courts, to compliment in the life-time of queen Elizabeth, her presumptive successor, of whom history informs us she was not a little jealous. That the prediction concerning king James was added after the death of the queen, is still more clearly evinced, as Dr. Johnson has remarked, by the awkward manner in which it is connected with the foregoing and subsequent lines.

It may be objected, that if this play was written after the accession of king James, the author could not introduce a panegyrick on him, without making queen Elizabeth the vehicle of it, she being the object immediately presented to the audience in the last act of K. Henry VIII. and that, therefore, the praises so profusely lavished on her, do not prove this play to have been written in her life-time; on the contrary, that the concluding lines of her character seem to imply that she was dead, when it was composed. The objection certainly has weight; but, I apprehend, the following observations afford a sufficient answer to it.

1. It is more likely that Shakspeare should have written a play, the chief subject of which is, the disgrace of queen Catharine, the aggrandizement of Anne Boleyn, and the birth of her daughter, in the life-time of that daughter, than after her death; at a time when the subject must have been

NOTE.

* This appears to be one of the many titles by which plays were anciently described. "An Enterlude, entituled the tragedie of Richard III." (not our author's) was entered on the Stationers' books, by Thomas Creede, June 19, 1594; and in the same year, Mother Bombie, a comedy by Lilly, appears to have been entered under the description of "A booke entituled Mother Bombie, being an Enterlude."

highly pleasing at court, rather than at a period when it must have been less interesting.

Queen Catherine, it is true, is represented as an amiable character, but still she is eclipsed; and the greater her merit, the higher was the compliment to the mother of Elizabeth, to whose superior beauty she was obliged to give way.

2. Had K. Henry VIII. been written in the time of king James I. the author, instead of expatiating so largely in the last scene, in praise of the queen, which he could not think would be very acceptable to her successor, would probably have made him the principal figure in the prophecy, and thrown her into the back-ground as much as possible.

3. Were James I. Shakspeare's chief object in the original construction of the last act of this play, he would probably have given a very short character of Elizabeth, and have dwelt on that of James, with whose praise he would have concluded, in order to make the stronger impression on the audience, instead of returning again to queen Elizabeth, in a very awkward and abrupt manner, after her character seemed to be quite finished: an awkwardness that can only be accounted for, by supposing the panegyrick on king James an after-production¹.

4. If

NOTE.

¹ After having enumerated some of the blessings that were to ensue from the birth of Elizabeth, and celebrated her majesty's various virtues, the poet thus proceeds:

Cran. "In her days every man shall eat in safety
Under his own vine, what he plants, and sing
The merry songs of peace to all his neighbours.
God shall be truly known; and those about her
From her shall read the perfect ways of honour,
And by those claim their greatness, not by blood, [Nor shall this peace sleep with her; but as when
The bird of wonder dies, the maiden phoenix,
Her ashes new-create another heir,
As great in admiration as herself;
So shall she leave her blessedness to one, &c.
————— He shall flourish,
And like a mountain cedar, reach his branches
To all the plains about him:—our children's children
Shall see this, and bless heaven.

King. Thou speakest wonders.]

Cran. She shall be, to the happiness of England
An aged princess; many days shall see her

4. If the queen had been dead when our author wrote this play, he would have been acquainted with the particular circumstances attending her death, the situation of the kingdom at that time, and of foreign states, &c. and as archbishop Cranmer is supposed to have had the gift of prophecy, Shakspeare, probably, would have made him mention some of those circumstances. Whereas the prediction, as it stands at present, is quite general, and such as might, without any hazard of error, have been pronounced in the life-time of her majesty; for the principal facts that it foretells, are, that she should die aged, and a virgin. Of the former, supposing this piece to have been written in 1601, the author was sufficiently secure; for she was then near seventy years old. The latter may perhaps be thought too delicate a subject, to have been mentioned while she was yet living. But, we may presume, it was far from being an ungrateful topick; for very early after her accession to the throne, she appears to have been proud of her maiden character; declaring that she was wedded to her people, and that she desired no other inscription on her tomb, than—Here lyeth Elizabeth, who reigned and died a virgin^m. Besides, if Shakspeare knew, as probably most people at that time did, that she became very solicitous about the reputation of virginity, when her title to it was at least equivocal, this would be an additional inducement to him to compliment her on that head.

5. Granting that the latter part of the panegyrick on Elizabeth implies that she was dead when it was composed, it would not prove that this play was written in the time of king James; for these latter lines in praise of the queen, as well as the whole of the compliment to the king, might have been added after his accession to the throne, in order to bring the speaker back to the object immediately before him, the infant Elizabeth. And this Mr. Theobald conjectured to have been the case. I do not, however, see any necessity for this supposition; as there is nothing, in my apprehen-

NOTES.

And yet no day without a deed to crown it.

Wou'd I had known no more! but she must die,

She must, the saints must have her; yet a virgin, &c."

The lines between crotchets, are those, supposed to have been inserted by the author after the accession of king James.

^m Camden 27. Melvil 49.

sion,* contained in any of the lines in praise of the queen, inconsistent with the idea of the whole of the panegyrick on her having been composed in her life-time.

In further confirmation of what has been here advanced to shew that this play was probably written while queen Elizabeth was yet alive, it may be observed, (to use the words of an anonymous writer,) that “Shakspeare has cast the disagreeable parts of her father's character as much into shade as possible; that he has represented him as greatly displeased with the grievances of his subjects, and ordering them to be relieved; tender and obliging [in the early part of the play] to his queen, grateful to the cardinal, and in the case of Cranmer, capable of distinguishing and rewarding true merit.” “He has exerted (adds the same author) an equal degree of complaisance, by the amiable lights in which he has shewn the mother of Elizabeth. Anne Bullen is represented as affected with the most tender concern for the sufferings of her mistress, queen Catherine; receiving the honour the king confers on her, by making her marchioness of Pembroke, with a graceful humility; and more anxious to conceal her advancement from the queen, lest it should aggravate her sorrows, than solicitous to penetrate into the meaning of so extraordinary a favour, or of indulging herself in the flattering prospect of future royalty.”

It is unnecessary to quote particular passages in support of these assertions; but the following lines which are spoken of Anne Boleyn by the Lord Chamberlain, appear to me so evidently calculated for the ear of Elizabeth, (to whom such incense was by no means displeasing) that I cannot forbear to transcribe them:—

—— “I have perused her well;
 “Beauty and honour are in her so mingled,
 “That they have caught the king: and who knows yet,
 “But from this Lady may proceed a gem,
 “To lighten all this isle.”

The Globe play-house, we are told by the continuator of Stowe's Chronicle, was burnt down, on St. Peter's day, in the year 1613, while the play of K. Henry VIII. was exhibiting. Sir Henry Wotton, (as Mr. Tyrwhitt has observed) says in one of his letters, that this accident happened during the exhibition of a new play, called All is True; which, however, appears both from Sir Henry's minute description of the piece, and from the account given by Stowe's continuator, to have been our author's play of K. Henry VIII. If indeed Sir H. Wotton was accurate in calling it a new play, all the foregoing reasoning on this subject would be at once overthrown; and this piece, instead of being ascribed to 1601, should have been placed twelve years later. But I strongly suspect that the only novelty attending this play, in the year 1613, was its title, decorations, and perhaps the prologue and epilogue. The Elector Palatine was in London in that year; and it appears from the M. register of lord Harrington, treasurer of the chambers to K. James I. that many of our author's plays were then exhibited for the entertainment of him and the princess Elizabeth. By the same register we learn, that the titles of many of them were changed^o in that year. Princes are fond of opportunities to display their magnificence before strangers of distinction; and James, who on his arrival here, must have been dazzled by a splendour foreign to the poverty of his native kingdom, might have been peculiarly ambitious to exhibit before his son-in-law the mimic pomp of an English coronation^p. King Henry VIII. therefore, after having lain by for some years unacted, on account of the costliness of the exhibition, might have been revived in 1613, under the title of All is True, with new decorations and a new prologue and epilogue. Mr. Tyrwhitt observes, that the prologue has two or three direct references to this title; a circumstance which authorizes us to conclude, almost with certainty, that it was an occasional production, written some years after the composition of the play.

N O T E.

The author of Shakspeare illustrated.

N O T E S.

^o Thus Henry IV. P. I. was called Hoffspur; Henry IV. P. II. or The Merry Wives of Windsor, was exhibited under the name of Sir John Falstaff; Much Ado about Nothing was new named Benedict and Beatrix, and Julius Cæsar seems to have been represented under the title of Cæsar's Tragedy.

^p The Prince Palatine was not present at the representation of K. Henry VIII. on the 30th of June O. S. when the Globe play-house was burnt down, having left England some time before. But the play might have been revived for his entertainment in the beginning of the year 1613; and might have been occasionally represented afterwards.

Dr. Johnson long since suspected, from the contemptuous manner in which "the noise of targets, and the fellow in a long motley coat," or, in other words, most of our author's plays, are spoken of, in this prologue, that it was not the composition of Shakspeare, but written after his departure from the stage, on some accidental revival of K. Henry VIII. by B. Jonson, whose style, it seemed to him to resemble.¹

Dr.

NOTE.

¹ In support of this conjecture it may be observed that Ben Jonson has in many places endeavoured to ridicule our author for representing battles on the stage. So in his prologue to Every Man in his Humour:

— "Yet ours for want, hath not so lov'd the stage,
As he dare serve the ill customs of the age,
Or purchase your delight at such a rate
As, for it, he himself must justly hate;
To make, &c. —

— or *with three rusty swords,
And help of some few foot and half-foot words,
Fight over York and Lancaster's long jars,
And in the tiring house bring wounds to jars.*"

Again, in his Silent Woman, Act IV. sc. iv.

"Nay, I would sit out a play, that were nothing but fights at sea, drum, trumpet, and target."

We are told in the memoirs of Ben Jonson's life, that he went to France in the year 1613. But at the time of the revival of King Henry VIII. he either had not left England, or was then returned; for he was a spectator of the fire which happened at the Globe theatre during the representation of that piece. [See the next note.]

It may, perhaps, seem extraordinary, that he should have presumed to prefix this covert censure of Shakspeare, to one of his own plays. But he appears to have eagerly embraced every opportunity of depreciating him. This occasional prologue (whoever was the writer of it) confirms the tradition handed down by Rowe, that our author retired from the stage about three years before his death. Had he been at that time joined with Heminge and Burbage in the management of the Globe theatre, he scarcely would have suffered the lines above alluded to, to have been spoken. In lord Harrington's account of the money disbursed for the plays that were exhibited by his majesty's servants, in the year 1613, before the Elector Palatine, all the payments are said to have been made to "John Heminge, for himself and the rest of his fellows;" from which we may conclude that he was then the principal manager. A correspondent, however, of Sir Thomas Puckering's (as I learn

Dr. Farmer is of the same opinion, and thinks he sees something of Jonson's hand, here and there, in the dialogue also. After our author's retirement to the country, Jonson was perhaps employed to give a novelty to the piece by a new title and prologue, and to furnish the managers of the Globe with a description of the coronation ceremony, and of those other decorations, with which, from his connection with Inigo Jones, and his attendance at court, he was peculiarly conversant.

The piece appears to have been revived with some degree of splendour, for Sir Henry Wotton gives a very pompous account of the representation. The unlucky accident that happened to the house during the exhibition, was occasioned by discharging some small pieces, called chambers, on K. Henry's arrival at cardinal Wolsey's gate at Whitehall, one of which, being injudiciously managed, set fire to the thatched roof of the theatre¹.

The

NOTES.

I learn from Mr. Tyrwhitt) in a MS. letter, preserved in the Museum, and dated in the year 1613, calls the company at the Globe, "Bourbage's company"—Shakspeare's name stands before either of these, in the licence granted by K. James; and had he not left London before that time, the players at the Globe theatre, I should imagine, would rather have been entitled, his company.—The burlesque parody on the account of Falstaff's death, which is contained in Fletcher's comedy of the Captain, acted in 1613, and the ridicule of Hamlet's celebrated soliloquy, and of Ophelia's death, in his Scornful Lady, which was represented about the same time, confirm the tradition that our author had then retired from the stage, careless of the fate of his writings, inattentive to the illiberal attacks of his contemporaries, and negligent alike of present and posthumous fame.

¹ The Globe theatre (as I learn from the MS. of Mr. Oldys) was thatched with reeds, and had an open area in its center. This area we may suppose to have been filled by the lowest part of the audience, whom Shakspeare calls the groundlings.—Chambers are not, like other guns, pointed horizontally, but are discharged as they stand erect on their breeches. The accident may, therefore, be easily accounted for. If these pieces were let off behind the scenes, the paper or wadding with which their charges were confined, would reach the thatch on the inside; or if fixed without the walls, it might have been carried by the wind to the top of the roof.

This accident is alluded to, in the following lines of Ben Jonson's Exegesis upon Vulcan, from which it appears, that he was

The play, thus revived and new-named, was probably called, in the bills of that time, a new play; which might have led Sir Henry Wotton to describe it as such. And thus his account may be reconciled with that of the other contemporary writers, as well as with those arguments which have been here urged in support of the early date of K. Henry VIII. Every thing has been fully stated on each side of the question. The reader must judge.

Mr. Roderick in his notes on our author, (appended to Mr. Edwards's Canons of Criticism) takes notice of some peculiarities in the metre of the play before us; viz. "that there are many more verses in it than in any other, which end with a redundant syllable"—"very near two to one"—and that "the cæsura or pauses of the verse are full as remarkable."—The re-

N O T E.

at the Globe playhouse when it was burnt; a circumstance which in some measure strengthens the conjecture that he was employed on the revival of King Henry VIII. for this was not the theatre at which his pieces were usually represented:

"Well fare the wise men yet on the Bank-side,
 "My friends, the watermen! they could provide
 "Against thy fury, when, to serve their needs,
 "They made a Vulcan of a sheaf of reeds;
 "Whom they durst handle in their holy-day coats,
 "And safely trust to dress, not burn their boats.
 "But O those reeds! thy mere disdain of them
 "Made thee beget that cruel stratagem,
 "(Which some are pleas'd to style but thy mad prank)
 "Against the Globe, the glory of the Bank:
 "Which, though it were the fort of the whole parish,
 "Flank'd with a ditch and forc'd out of a marish,
 "I saw with two poor chambers taken in,
 "And raz'd; ere thought could urge this might have been.
 "See the world's ruins! nothing but the piles
 "Left, and wit since to cover it with tiles.
 "The breth'ren, they straight nois'd it out for news,
 "'Twas verily some relick of the fews,
 "And this a sparkle of that fire let loose,
 "That was lock'd up in the Winchesterian goose,
 "Bred on the Bank in time of popery,
 "When Venus there maintain'd her mis
 "But others fell, with that conceit, by th
 "And cried, it was a threat'ning to the beas,
 "And that accursed ground, the Paris-garden, &c."

dundancy,

dundancy, &c. observed by this critick, Mr. Steevens thinks (a remark, which, having omitted to introduce in its proper place, he desires me to insert here) "was rather the effect of chance, than of design in the author; and might have arisen either from the negligence of Shakspeare, who in this play has borrowed whole scenes and speeches from Holinshed, whose words he was probably in too much haste to compress into versification strictly regular and harmonious; or from the interpolations of Ben Jonson, whose hand Dr. Farmer thinks he occasionally perceives in the dialogue."

Whether Mr. Roderick's position be well founded, is hardly worth a contest; but the peculiarities which he has animadverted on, (if such there be) add probability to the conjecture that this piece underwent some alterations, after it had passed out of the hands of Shakspeare.

Our author had produced so many plays in the preceding years, that it is not likely that K. Henry VIII. was written before 1601. It might perhaps with equal propriety be ascribed to 1602, and it is not easy to determine in which of those years it was composed; but it is extremely probable that it was written in one of them. K. Henry VIII. was not printed till 1623.

"A book or poem, called the Life and Death of Thomas Woolsey Cardinall," which was entered on the books of the Stationers' company, in the year 1599, perhaps suggested this subject to Shakspeare.

28. The Life and Death of Lord Cromwell, 1602.

Entered at Stationers' hall, August 11, 1602. Printed in 1613, with the letters W. S. only, in the title page.

29. TROILUS AND CRESSIDA, 1602.

Troilus and Cressida was entered at Stationers' hall Feb. 7. 1602—3, by J. Roberts, the printer of Hamlet, the Merchant of Venice, and A Midsummer Night's Dream. It was therefore, probably, written in 1602. It was printed in 1609, with a preface by the editor, who speaks of it as if it had not been then acted. But it is entered in 1602—3, "as acted by my Lord Chamberlen's men." The players at the Globe theatre, to which Shakspeare belonged, were called the Lord Chamberlain's servants, till the year 1603. In that year year they obtained a licence for their exhibitions from king James; and from that time they bore the more honourable appellation of his majesty's servants. There can, therefore, be little doubt, that the Troilus and Cressida which is here entered, as acted at Shakspeare's theatre, was his play, and was, if not represented, intended to have been represented there*.

Perhaps the two discordant accounts, relative, to this piece, may be thus reconciled. It might have been performed in 1602 at court, by the lord chamberlain's servants, (as many plays at that time were) and yet not have been exhibited on the publick stage till some years afterwards. The editor in 1609 only says, "it had never been staied with the stage, never clapperclaw'd with the palms of the vulgar."

As a further proof of the early appearance of Troilus and Cressida, it may be observed, that an incident in it seems to be burlesqued in a comedy entitled Histrionastix, which, though not printed till 1610, must have been written before the death of queen Elizabeth, who, in the last act of the piece, is shadowed under the character of Astræa, and is spoken of as then living.

In our author's play, when Troilus and Cressida part, he gives her his sleeve, and she, in return, presents, him with her glove.

To this circumstance these lines in Histrionastix seem to refer. They are spoken by Troilus and Cressida, who are introduced in an interlude:

Troi. "Come Cressida, my cresset light,
Thy face doth shine both day and night.
Behold, behold, thy garter blue
Thy knight his valiant elbow weares,
That, when he shakes his furious speare,
The foe in shivering fearful fort
May lay him down in death to snort.

Cress. O knight, with valour in thy face,
Here take my skreene, weare it for grace;
Within thy helmet put the same,
Therewith to make thy enemies lame."

NOTE.

* No other play with this title has come down to us. We have therefore a right to conclude that the play entered in the books of the Stationers' company, was Shakspeare's.

Dryden

Dryden supposed Troilus and Cressida to have been one of Shakspeare's earliest performances¹; but has not mentioned on what principles he founded his judgment. Pope, on the other hand, thought it one of his last; grounding his opinion not only on the preface by the editor in 1609, but on "the great number of observations both moral and political with which this piece is crowded, more than any other of our author's." For my own part, were it not for the entry in the Stationers' books, I should have been led, both by the colour of the writing and by the above-mentioned preface, to class it (though not one of our author's happiest effusions) in 1608, rather than in that year in which it is here placed.

30. MEASURE FOR MEASURE, 1603.

This play was not registered at Stationers' hall, nor printed, till 1623. But from two passages in it, which seem intended as a courtly apology for the stately and ungracious demeanour of K. James I. on his entry into England, it appears probable that it was written soon after his accession to the throne:

"I'll privily away. I love the people,
But do not like to stage me to their eyes.
Though it do well, I do not relish well
Their loud applause, and aves vehement;
Nor do I think the man of state discretion
That does affect it."

Meas. for Meas. Act I. sc. i.

Again, Act II. sc. iv.

————— "So
The general, subject to a well-wish'd king,
Quit their own part, and in obsequious fondness
Croud to his presence, where their untaught love
Must needs appear offence."

N O T E S.

¹ "The tragedy which I have undertaken to correct, was in all probability, one of his first endeavours on the stage.—Shakspeare (as I hinted) in the apprenticeship of his writing modelled it [the story of Lollus] into that play which is now called by the name of Troilus and Cressida."—Dryden's pref. to Troilus and Cressida.

² "See Mr. Tyrwhitt's note.

° King

King James was so much offended by the untaught, and, we may add, undeserved, gratulations of his subjects, on his entry into England, that he issued a proclamation, forbidding the people to resort to him.—“Afterwards,” says the historian of his reign, “in his publick appearances, especially in his sports, the accessses of the people made him so impatient, that he often dispersed them with frowns, that we may not say with curfes.”

That Measure for Measure was written before 1607, may be fairly concluded from the following passage in a poem published in that year, which we have good ground to believe was copied from a similar thought in this play, as the author, at the end of his piece, professes a personal regard for Shakspeare, and highly praises his Venus and Adonis:

“So play the foolish throngs with one that fwoons;
Come all to help him, and so stop the air
By which he should revive.”

Meas. for Meas. A& II. Sc. iv.

“And like as when some sudden extasie
Seizeth the nature of a sicklie man;
When he’s discern’d to fwoune, strait by and by Folke to his helpe confusedly have ran,
And seeking with their art to fetch him backe,
So many throng that he the ayre doth lacke.”

Myrrha the Mother of Adonis, or Luste’s Prodigies, by William Barksted, a poem, 1607.

31. CYMBELINE, 1604.

Cymbeline was not entered on the Stationers’ books, nor printed, till 1623. It stands the last in the earliest folio edition; but nothing can be collected from thence, for the folio editors manifestly paid no attention to chronological arrangement. Not containing any intrinsic evidence by which its date might be ascertained, it is attributed to this year, chiefly because there is no proof that any other play was written by Shakspeare in 1604. And as in the course of somewhat more than twenty years, he produced, according to some, forty-three, in the opinion of others, thirty-five

N O T E.

• Wilson’s Hist. of K. James, 2d edn. 1603.

dramas,

dramas, we may presume that he was not idle during any one year of that time.

This play was perhaps alluded to, in an old comedy called The Return from Parnassus:

“ Frame as well we might, with easy strain,
 “ With far more praise, and with as little pain,
 “ „Stories of love, where ’fore the wond’ring bench
 “ The lisping gallant might enjoy his wench;
 “ Or make some fire acknowledge his lost son^r,
 “ Found, when the weary act is almost done.”

If the author^s of this piece had Cymbeline in contemplation, it must have been more ancient than it is here supposed; for from several passages in the Return from Parnassus, that comedy appears to have been written before the death of queen Elizabeth, which happened on the 24th of March 1603.

Mr. Steevens has observed, that there is a passage in B. and Fletcher’s Philaster, which bears a strong resemblance to a speech of Jachimo in Cymbeline:

“ I hear the tread of people: I am hurt;
 “ The Gods take part against me: could this boor
 “ Have held me thus, else?”

Philaster, Act IV. Sc. i.

————— “ I have bely’d a lady
 “ The princess of this country; and the air of’t “ Revengingly enfeebles me; or could this carle,
 “ A very drudge of nature, have subdu’d me,
 “ In my profession?”

Cymbeline, Act V. Sc. ii.

Philaster is supposed to have appeared on the stage about 1609; being mentioned by John Davies of Hereford, in his Epigrams, which have no date, but were printed, according to Oldys, in or about that year².

One edition of the tract called Westward for Smelts, from which part of the fable of Cymbeline is borrowed, was published in 1603.

NOTES.

¹ In the last act of Cymbeline two sons are found. But the author might have written son on account of the rhyme.

² Additions to Langbaine’s Account of the Dramatick Poets, Ms.

32. The London Prodigal, 1605.

There is good ground for thinking that The London Prodigal was written long before 1605; but not affording any marks to ascertain the precise time of its composition, and not deserving any very minute inquiry, it is here ascribed to that year, in which it was published.

Shakspeare's name is printed in the title page of this play, as well as in three other contested pieces;—Pericles, Sir John Oldcastle, and A Yorkshire Tragedy. But how little the bookfellers of that time scrupled to avail themselves of his name, in order to procure a sale for their publications, appears from its being prefixed to two of Ovid's Epistles, (which have ever since been published among his poems) though they were translated by Thomas Heywood; and printed (as Dr. Farmer has observed) in a work of his entitled Brytaine's Troy, fol. 1609^a, before they were ascribed to Shakspeare.

33. KING LEAR, 1605.

The tragedy of King Lear was entered on the books of the Stationers' company Nov. 26, 1607, and is there mentioned to have been played the preceding Christmas, before his majesty at Whitehall. But this, I conjecture, was not its first exhibition. It seems extremely probable that its first appearance was in 1605; in which year the old play of K. Lear, that had been entered at Stationers' hall in 1594, was printed by Simon Stafford, for John Wright, who, we may presume, finding Shakspeare's play successful, hoped to palm the spurious one on the publick for his^b.

Our author's King Lear was not published till 1608. Harfnet's Declaration of Popish Impostures, from which Shakspeare borrowed some fantastick names of spirits, mentioned in this play, was printed in 1603.

N O T E S.

^a "These two epistles, being so pertinent to our historie, I thought necessarie to translate."—Bryt. Troy, p. 211.

^b Shakspeare has copied one of the passages in this old play. This he might have done, though we should suppose it not to have been published till after his K. Lear was written and acted; for the old play had been in possession of the stage for many years before 1605.

34. MACBETH, 1606.

From a book entitled Rex Platonicus, cited by Dr. Farmer,, we learn that king James, when he visited Oxford in 1605, was addressed by three students of St. John's college, who personated the three weird sisters, and recited a short dramatick poem, founded on the prediction of those sybils, (as the author calls them) relative to Banquo and Macbeth.

Dr. Farmer is of opinion, that this little piece ^c preceded Shakspeare's play; a supposition which is strengthened by the silence of the author of Rex Platonicus, who, if Macbeth had then appeared on the stage, would probably have mentioned something of it. It should be likewise remembered, that there subsisted at that time a spirit of opposition and rivalry between the regular players and the academicks of the two universities; the latter of whom frequently acted plays both in Latin and English, and seem to have piqued themselves on the superiority of their exhibitions to those of the established theatres ^d. Withing probably to manifest this superiority to the royal pedant, it is not likely that they would chuse for a collegiate interlude, a subject, which had already appeared on the public stage, with all the embellishments that the magick hand of Shakspeare could bestow.

This tragedy contains an allusion to the union of the three kingdoms of England, Scotland and Ireland, under one sovereign, and also to the cure of the king's-evil by the royal touch ^e; but in what year that pretended power was

NOTES.

^c In Rex Platonicus it is called Lufuncula.

^d Ab ejusdem collegii alumni (qui et cothurno tragico et focco comico principes semper habebantur) Vertumnus, comœdia faceta, ad principes exhilarandos exhibetur. Rex Platonicus, p. 78.

Arcadium restauratam Iliacorum Arcadum lectissimi cecinerunt, unoque opere, principum omniumque spectantium animos immenta et ultra fidem affecerunt voluptate; simulque patrios ludiones, etsi exercitatissimos, quantum intersit inter scenam mercenariam & eruditam docuerunt, Ib. p. 228. See also the lines quoted above from the Return from Parnassus, and Act IV. Sc. iii. of that piece, which was acted publicly at St. John's college in Cambridge.

^e Macbeth, Act IV. Sc. i. ii.

assumed by king James I. is uncertain. Macbeth was not entered in the Stationers' books, nor printed, till 1623.

In The Tragedy of Cæsar and Pompey, or Cæsar's Revenge, are these lines:

"Why think you, lords, that 'tis ambition's spur
"That pricketh Cæsar to these high attempts?"

If the author of that play, which was published in 1607, should be thought to have had Macbeth's soliloquy in view, (which is not unlikely) this circumstance may add some degree of probability to the supposition that this tragedy had appeared before that year:

————— "I have no spur
"To prick the sides of my intent, but only
"Vaulting ambition, which o'er-leaps itself
"And falls at the other"——

At the time when Macbeth is supposed to have been written, the subject, it is probable, was considered as a topic the most likely to conciliate the favour of the court. In the additions to Warner's Albion's England, which were first printed in 1606, the story of "the Three Fairies or Weird Elves," as he calls them, is shortly told, and king James's descent from Banquo carefully deduced.

Ben Jonson, a few years afterwards, paid his court to his majesty by his Masque of Queens[†], presented at Whitehall, Feb. 12, 1609; in which he has given a minute detail of all the magick rites that are recorded by king James in his book of Dæmonologie, or by any other author ancient or modern.

Mr. Steevens has lately discovered a Ms. play, entitled THE WITCH, written by Thomas Middleton[‡], which renders

NOTES.

[†] Mr. Upton was of opinion that this masque preceded Macbeth. But the only ground that he states for this conjecture, is, "that Jonson's pride would not suffer him to borrow from Shakespeare, though he stole from the ancients."

[‡] In an advertisement prefixed to an edition of A Mad World my Masters, a comedy by Thomas Middleton, 1640, the printer says, that the author was "long since dead." Middleton probably died soon after the year 1626. He was chronologer to the city of London, and it does not appear that any masque or pageant, in honour of the Lord Mayor, was set forth by him after that year.

ders it questionable, whether Shakspeare was not indebted to that author for the first hint of the magick introduced in this tragedy. The reader will find an account of this singular curiosity in the note ^b.—To the observations of Mr. Steevens year *. From the dates of his printed plays, and from the ensuing verses on his last performance, by Sir William Lower, we may conclude, that he was as early a writer, and at least as old, as Shakspeare.

NOTES.

“ Tom Middleton his numerous issue brings,
 “ And his last muse delights us when she sings :
 “ His halting age a pleasure doth impart,
 “ And his white locks shew master of his art.”

The following dramatick pieces by Middleton appear to have been published in his life-time.—Your Five Gallants, 1601.—Blurt Master Constable, or the Spaniard's Night Walke, 1602.—Michaclmas Term, 1607.—The Phoenix, 1607.—The Family of Love, 1608.—A Trick to catch the Old One, 1608.—A Mad World my Masters, 1608.—The Roaring Girl, or Moll Cutpurse, 1611.—Fair Quarrel, 1617.—A Chaste Maid of Cheapside, 1620.—A Game at Chess, 1625.—Most of his other plays were printed, about thirty years after his death, by Kirkman and other booksellers, into whose hands his manuscripts fell.

^b In a former note on this tragedy, I have said that the original edition contains only the two first words of the song in the 4th act, beginning—Black spirits, &c; but have lately discovered the entire stanza in an unpublished dramatic piece, viz. “A Tragi-Commodie called THE WITCH; long since acted by his Majties Servants at the Black Friers; written by Tho. Middleton.” The song is there called—“A charme-song, about a vessell.” The other song omitted in the 5th scene of the 3d act of Macbeth, together with the imperfect couplet there, may likewise be found, as follows, in Middleton's performance.—The Hecate of Shakspeare, says:—

“ I am for the air, &c.”

The Hecate of Middleton (who like the former is summoned away by aerial spirits) has the same declaration in almost the same words:—“I am for aloft,” &c.

“ Song.] Come away, come away: } in the aire.
 “ Heccat, Heccat, come away. }

“ Hec. I come, I come, I come,
 “ With all the speed I may,

* The Triumph of Health and Prosperity at the Inauguration of the most worthy Brother, the Right Hon. Cuthbert Hasket, draper; composed by Thomas Middleton, draper, 1626, 4to.

“ With all the speed I may.
“ Wher’s Stadlin?

“Wher’s Puckle?”

"Here.] in the air.

“ And Hoppo too, and Hellwaine too, “ Welack but you, welack but you: } in the aire.
 “ Come away, make up the count.

"Come away, make up the count.

" Hec. I will but 'noynt, and then I mount.

“ A spiritlikea { There's one comes downe to fetch his dues, cat descends. { A kisse, a coll, a sip of blood:
{ And why thou staist so long } above

" I muse, I muse,

" Since the air's so sweet and good.

"Hec. Oh, art thou come?"

“What newes, what newes?”

"All goes still to our delight,

“ Either come, or else

Refuse, refuse.

“ Hec.] Now I am furnish’d for the flight.

“ Firc.] Hark, hark, the catt sings a brave treble in her owne language.

"Hec. going up.] Now I goe, now I flie, “ Malkin my sweete spirit and I;

“ Oh what a daintie pleasure ’tis

"To ride in the aire,

* " When the moone shines faire

"And fing, and daunce, and toy and kifs!

“ Over woods, high rocks and mountains,

“Over seas, our mistris’ fountains,

Over steepe towres and turrets,

We fly by night 'mongst troopes of spiritts.

No ring of bells to our ears sounds,

No howles of woolves, no yelpes of hounds ;

“ No, not the noyse of waters'-breache,

"Or cannons' throat, our height can reach.

“ No ring of bells, &c.] above.

"Fire.] Well mother, I thank your kindness: you must be gambolling i' th'aire, and leave me to walk here, like a foole and a mortall. Exit. Finis Actus Tercii."

This Fire-stone, who occasionally interposes in the course of the dialogue, is called, in the list of Persons Represented,—“The Glowing and Heccar's son.”

Again,

length in The Witch, while only the two first words of them are printed in Macbeth, favour the supposition that Middleton's

NOTES.

Again, the Hecate of Shakespeare says to her sisters :—

“ I'll charm the air to give a sound,

“ While you perform your antique round, &c.

[Musick. The Witches dance and vanish.”]

The Hecate of Middleton says on a similar occasion :—

“ Come, my sweete sisters, let the aire strike our tune, “ Whilst we shew reverence to yond peeping moone.

[Here they dance and Exeunt.”]

In this play, the motives which incline the witches to mischief, their manners, the contents of their cauldron, &c. seem to have more than accidental resemblance to the same particulars in Macbeth. The hags of Middleton, like the weird sisters of Shakespeare, destroy cattle because they have been refused provisions at farm houses. The owl and the cat (Gray Malkin) give them notice when it is time to proceed on their several expeditions.—Thus Shakespeare's Witch :—

“ Harper cries ;—'tis time, 'tis time.”

Thus too the Hecate of Middleton :—

“ Hec.] Heard you the owle yet ?

“ Stad.] Briefely in the coppes.

“ Hec.] 'Tis high time for us then.”

The Hecate of Shakespeare, addressing her sisters, observes, that Macbeth is but a wayward son, who loves for his own ends, not for them. The Hecate of Middleton has the same observation, when the youth who has been consulting her, retires :—

“ I know he loves me not, nor there's no hope on't.”

Instead of the grease that's sweaten from the murderer's gibbet, and the finger of birth-strangled babe, the witches of Middleton employ “ the gristle of a man that bangs after sunset,” (i. e. of a murderer, for all other criminals were anciently cut down before evening) and the “ fat of an unbaptized child.” They likewise boast of the power to raise tempests that shall blow down trees, overthrow buildings, and occasion shipwreck ; and, more particularly, that they can “ make miles of woods walk.” Here too the Grecian Hecate is degraded into a presiding witch, and exercised in superstitions peculiar to our own country. So much for the scenes of enchantment ; but even other parts of Middleton's play coincide more than once with that of Shakespeare. Lady Macbeth says, in act II :

————— the surfeited grooms

“ Do mock their charge with snores. I have drugg'd their possets.”—

So too Francisca in the piece of Middleton :

VOL. I.

[X 4]

“ —they're ton's piece preceded that of Shakspeare; the latter, it should seem, thinking it unnecessary to set down verses which were probably

NOTES.

-they're now all at rest,

" And Gasper there and all :—Lift !—fast asleepe ;

" He cries it hither.—I must disease you straight, Sir :

" For the maide-servants, and the girles o' th' house,

" I spie'd them lately with a drowsie posset,

" They will not hear in haste."

And Francisca, like lady Macbeth, is watching late at night to encourage the perpetration of a murder.

The expression which Shakspeare has put into the mouth of Macbeth, when he is sufficiently recollected to perceive that the dagger and the blood on it, were the creations of his own fancy, —" There's no such thing"—is likewise appropriated to Francisca, when she undeceives her brother, whose imagination had been equally abused.

From the instances already produced, perhaps the reader would allow, that if Middleton's piece preceded Shakspeare's, the originality of the magic introduced by the latter, might be fairly questioned ; for our author (who as actor, and manager, had access to unpublished dramatic performances) has so often condescended to receive hints from his contemporaries, that our suspicion of his having been a copyist in the present instance, might not be without foundation. Nay, perhaps, a time may arrive, in which it will become evident from books and manuscripts yet undiscovered and unexamined, that Shakspeare never attempted a play on any argument, till the effect of the same story, or at least the ruling incidents in it, had been already tried on the stage, and familiarized to his audience. Let it be remembered, in support of this conjecture, that dramatic pieces on the following subjects,—viz. King John, King Richard II. and III. King Henry IV. and V. King Henry VIII. King Lear, Antony and Cleopatra, Measure for Measure, the Merchant of Venice, the Taming of a Shrew, and the Comedy of Errors,—had appeared before those of Shakspeare, and that he has taken somewhat from all of them that we have hitherto seen. I must observe at the same time, that Middleton, in his other dramas, is found to have borrowed little from the sentiments, and nothing from the fables of his predecessors. He is known to have written in concert with Jonson, Fletcher, Masfonger, and Rowley ; but appears to have been unacquainted, or at least unconnected, with Shakspeare.

It is true that the date of THE WITCH cannot be ascertained. The author, however, in his dedication (to the true lie-wo. thin and generously-affected Thomas Holmes Esquire) observes, that he recovered this ignorant-ill-fated labour of his (from the play-house, I suppose) not without much difficulty. Witches (continues he) are, jipso facto, probably well known, and perhaps then in possession of the managers of the Globe theatre. The high reputation of facto, by the law condemn'd, and that only, I think, hath made her lie so long in an imprison'd obscuritie. It is probable, therefore from these words, as well as from the title-page, that the play was written long* before the dedication, which seems to have been added soon after the year 1603, when the act of K. James against witches passed into a law. If it be objected, that THE WITCH appears from this title-page to have been acted only by his majesty's servants, let it be remembered that these were the very players who had been before in the service of the Queen; but Middleton, dedicating his work in the time of James, speaks of them only as dependants on the reigning prince.

NOTES.

Here too it may be remarked, that the first dramatic piece in which Middleton is known to have had a hand, viz. The Old Law, was acted in 1599; so that THE WITCH might have been composed, if not performed at an earlier period † than the accession of James to the crown; for the belief of witchcraft was sufficiently popular in the preceding reigns. The piece in question might likewise have been neglected through the caprice of players, or retarded till it could be known that James would permit such representations; (for on his arrival here, both authors and actors who should have ventured to bring the midnight mirth and jollity of witches on the stage, would probably have been indicted as favourers of magic and enchantment) or, it might have shrunk into obscurity after the appearance of Macbeth; or perhaps was forbidden by the command of the king. The witches of Shakespeare (exclusive of the flattering circumstance to which their prophecy alludes) are solemn in their operations, and therefore behaved in conformity to his majesty's own opinions. On the contrary, the hags of Middleton are ludicrous in their conduct, and lessen, by ridiculous combinations of images, the solemnity of that magic in which our scepter'd persecutor of old women most reverently and potently believed.

The conclusion to Middleton's dedication has likewise a degree of singularity that deserves notice.—“For your sake alone, the

* That dramatic pieces were sometimes written long before they were printed, may be proved from the example of Marlowe's Rich Jew of Malta, which was entered on the books of the Stationers' company in the year 1594, but was not published till 1633, as we learn from the preface to it written by Heywood. It appears likewise from the same registers, that several plays were written, that were never published at all.

† The spelling in the MS. is sometimes more antiquated than any to be met with in the printed copies of Shakespeare, as the following instances may prove:—Byn for been—sollemnly for solemnly—dampnation for damnation—quight for quite—grinpel for gristle—dea for dee—olhyff for olive, &c.

of Shakspeare's performances (to mention a circumstance which in the course of these observations will be more than once insisted upon) likewise strengthens this conjecture; for it is very improbable, that Middleton, or any other poet of that time, should have ventured into those regions of fiction, in which our author had already expatiated :

— "Shakespeare's magick could not copy'd be, Within that circle none durst walk but he."

Other pieces of equal antiquity may, perhaps, be hereafter discovered; for the names of several ancient plays are preserved, which are not known to have been ever printed. Thus we hear of Valentine and Orson, plaied by her Majestie's players—The tragedy of Ninus and Semiramis—Titirus and Galuthea—Godfrey of Bulligne—The Cradle of Securitie—Hit hath thus conjur'd her self abroad; and beares no other charmes about her, but what may tend to your recreation; nor no other spell, but to posses you with a beleif, that as she, so he, that first taught her to enchant, will alwaies be, &c."—"He that taught her to enchant," would have sufficiently expressed the obvious meaning of the writer, without aid from the word first, which seems to imply a covert censure on some person who had engaged his Hecate in a secondary course of witchcraft.

N O T E S.

The reader must have inferred from the specimen of incantation already given, that this Ms. play (which was purchased by Major Peirson out of the collection of one Griffin, a player, and is in all probability the presentation copy) had indubitably passed through the hands of Sir William Davenant; for almost all the additions which he pretends to have made to the scenes of witchcraft in Macbeth (together with the names of the supplemental agents) are adopted from Middleton. It was not the interest therefore of Sir William, that this piece should ever appear in print: but time that makes important discoveries, has likewise brought his petty plagiarism to light *.

I should remark, that Sir W. D. has corrupted several words as well as proper names in the songs, &c. but it were needless to particularize his mistakes, as this entire tragi-comedy will hereafter be published for the satisfaction of the curious and intelligent readers of Shakspeare.

STEEVENS.

* Sir William Davenant might likewise have formed his play of Albwin King of Lombardy on some of the tragic scenes in this unpublished piece of Middleton. Yet the chief circumstances on which they are both founded, occur in the fourth volume of the Histoires Tragiques, &c. par François de Belleforest, 1580, p. 297, and at the beginning of Machiavel's Florentine History.

STEEVENS.

the Naile o'the Head—The Marriage of Wit and Wisdom—Sir Thomas More—(Harl. Ms. 7368) The Isle of Dogs, by Thomas Nashe—The comedy of Fidele and Fortunatus—The famous tragedy of The Destruction of Jerusalem, by Dr. Legge—The Freeman's Honour, by William Smith—Mahomet and Irene the Faire Greek—The Play of the Cards—Gardenio—The Knaves—The Knot of Fools—Raymond Duke of Lyons—The Nobleman, by Cyril Tourneur—[the five last, acted in the year 1613] The honoured Loves—The Parliament of Love—and Nonfuch, a comedy; all by William Rowley—The Pilgrimage to Parnassus, by the author of the Return from Parnassus—Believe as you List, by Massinger—The Pirate, by Davenport—Rosania or Love's Victory, a comedy by Shirley, (some of whose plays were extant in Ms. in Langbaine's time)—The Twins, a tragedy, acted in 1613—Tancredo, a tragedy, by Sir Henry Wotton—Demetrius and Marfina, or the imperial Impostor and unhappy Heroine, a tragedy—The Tyrant, a tragedy—The Queen of Corsica—The Bugbears—The Second Maid's Tragedy—Timon, a comedy, &c. &c. Soon after the Restoration, one Kirkman a bookseller, printed many dramattick pieces that had remained unpublished for more than sixty years; and in an advertisement subjoined to "A true, perfect, and exact catalogue of all the comedies, tragedies, &c. that were ever yet printed and published, till this present year 1671," he says, that although there were, at that time, but eight hundred and six plays in print, yet many more had been written and acted, and that "he himself had some quantity in manuscript."—The resemblance between Macbeth and this newly discovered piece by Middleton, naturally suggests a wish, that if any of the unpublished plays, above enumerated, be yet in being, (besides Timon and Sir Thomas More, which are known to be extant) their possessors would condescend to examine them with attention; as hence, perhaps, new lights might be thrown on others of our author's plays.

35. THE TAMING OF THE SHREW, 1606.

The Taming of the Shrew, which, together with Romeo and Juliet, and Love's Labour Lost, was entered at Stationers' hall by Nich. Ling, Jan. 22, 1606—7, was not, I believe, Shakspeare's play, but the old comedy of the same name, on which our author's piece was manifestly formed. Nich. Ling never printed either Romeo and Juliet, or Love's Labour Lost; though in the books of the Stationers' company they were entered by him. The old Taming of the Shrew, which had had been originally entered in 1594, and perhaps soon afterwards printed*, was republished in 1607 by Nich. Ling. As it bore the same title with Shakspeare's play, (which was not printed till 1623) the hope of getting a sale for it, under the shelter of a celebrated name, was probably the inducement to issue it out at that time: and its publication then, gives weight to the supposition that Shakspeare's play was written and first acted in the latter end of the year 1606. It was entered by John Smythwick, Nov. 19, 1607; from which circumstance, we may conclude, that he had procured a copy of it, and had then thoughts of publishing it. It was not, however, printed by him till 1631, eight years after it had appeared in the edition of the players in folio.

In this play there seems to be an allusion^h to a comedy of Thomas Heywood's, entitled a Woman Killed with Kindness, which, though not printed till 1617, must have been acted before 1604, being mentioned in an old tract called the Black Book, published in that year.

36. JULIUS CÆSAR, 1607.

A tragedy on the subject, and with the title, of Julius Cæsar, written by Mr. William Alexander, who was afterwards Earl of Sterline, was printed in the year 1607. This, I imagine, was prior to our author's performance. Shakspeare, we know, formed seven or eight plays on fables that had been unsuccessfully managed by other poetsⁱ; but no contemporary writer was daring enough to enter the lists with him, in his life-time, or to model into a drama a subject that had already employed his pen: and it is not likely that Lord Sterline, who was then a very young man, and

N O T E S.

* From a passage in a tract written by Sir John Harrington, entitled The Metamorphoses of Ajax, 1596, this old play appears to have been printed before that year, though no edition of so early a date has hitherto been discovered. "Read the booke of Taming a Shrew, which hath made a number of us so perfect, that now every one can rule a shrew in our country, save he that hath hir."

^h " This is a way to kill a wife with kindness." The Taming of the Shrew. Act IV. Sc. i.

ⁱ See a note on Julius Cæsar, Act I. Sc. i. in which they are enumerated.

had scarcely unlearned the Scottish idiom, should have been more hardy than any other poet of that age.

I am aware, it may be objected, that this writer might have formed a drama on this story, not knowing that Shakspeare had previously composed the tragedy of Julius Cæsar; and that, therefore, the publication of Mr. Alexander's play in 1607, is no proof that our author's performance did not then exist.—In answer to this objection, it may, perhaps, be sufficient to observe, that Mr. Alexander had, before that year, very wisely left the bleak fields of Menstrie in Clackmananshire, for a warmer and more courtly residence in London, having been appointed gentleman of the privy chamber to prince Henry; in which situation his literary curiosity must have been gratified by the earliest notice of the productions of his brother dramatists.

Lord Sterline's Julius Cæsar, though not printed till 1607, might have been written a year or two before; and perhaps its publication in that year was in consequence of our author's play on the same subject being then first exhibited. The same observation may be made with respect to an anonymous performance, called The Tragedie of Cæsar and Pompey or Cæsar's Revenge^k, which was likewise printed in 1607. The subject of that piece is the defeat of Pompey at Pharfalia, the death of Julius, and the final overthrow of Brutus and Cassius at Philippi. The attention of the town being, perhaps, drawn to the history of the book-nosed fellow of Rome, by the exhibition of our author's Julius Cæsar, the bookfellers, who printed these two plays, might have flattered themselves with the hope of an expeditious sale for them at that time, especially as Shakspeare's play was not then published.

We have certain proof that Antony and Cleopatra was composed before the middle of the year 1608. An attentive review of that play and Julius Cæsar, will, I think, lead us to conclude that this latter was first written^l. Not to insist on

NOTES.

^k This play, as appears by the title-page, was privately acted by the students of Trinity College in Oxford. In the running title it is called The Tragedy of Julius Cæsar; perhaps the better to impose it on the publick for the performance of Shakspeare.

^l The following passages in Antony and Cleopatra, (and others of the same kind may perhaps be found) seem to me to discover such a knowledge of the appropriated characters of the persons exhibited on the chronology of the story, which would naturally suggest this subject to our author before the other, in Julius Cæsar, Shakspeare does not seem to have been thoroughly possessed of Antony's character. He has indeed marked one or two of the striking features of it, but Antony is not fully delineated till he appears in that play which takes its name from him and Cleopatra. The rough sketch would naturally precede the finished picture.

From a passage in the comedy of Every Woman in her Humour, which was printed in 1609, we learn, that a droll on the subject of Julius Cæsar, had been exhibited before that year. "I have seen, (says one of the personages in that comedy) the City of Nineveh, and Julius Cæsar, acted by marmets." Most of our ancient drolls and puppet-shews are known to have been regular abridgments of celebrated plays, or particular scenes of them, only. It does not appear that lord Sterline's Julius Cæsar was ever celebrated, or even acted; neither that nor his other plays being at all calculated for dramattick representation. On the other hand, we know that Shakspeare's Julius Cæsar was a very popular piece; Digges, a contemporary writer, having, in his com-

NOTES.

hibited in Julius Cæsar, and of the events there dilated and enlarged upon, as Shakspeare would necessarily have acquired from having previously written a play on that subject :

Pompey. — "I do not know

Wherefore my father should revengers want,
Having a son and friends, since Julius Cæsar,
Who at Philippi the good Brutus ghosted,
There saw you labouring for him. What was't
That mov'd pale Cassius to conspire? And what Made all-honour'd, honest, Roman Brutus,
With the arm'd rest, courtiers of beauteous freedom,
To drench the capitol, but that they would
Have one man but a man?"

So, in another place,

"When Antony found Julius Cæsar dead,
He cry'd almost to roaring; and he wept
When at Philippi he found Brutus slain."

Again,

Ant. He at Philippi kept
His sword ev'n like a dancer, while I struck
The lean and wrinkled Cassius; and 'twas I
That the mad Brutus ended."

mentary verses on our author's works, particularly alluded to it, as one of his most applauded performances^m. The droll here mentioned, was therefore, probably formed out of Shakspeare's play: and we may presume that it had been in possession of the stage at least a year or two, before it was exhibited in this degraded form. Though the term mammets, in the passage above quoted, should be considered as contemptuously applied to the children of Paul's or those of the Chapelⁿ, (an interpretation which it will commodiously enough admit) the argument with respect to the date of Julius Cæsar will still remain in its full force.

In the prologue to The False One, by Beaumont and Fletcher, this play is alluded to^o; but in what year that tragedy was written, is unknown.

If the date of The Maid's Tragedy by the same authors, were ascertained, it might throw some light on the present enquiry; the quarreling scene between Melantius and his friend, being manifestly copied from a similar scene in Julius Cæsar. Dryden mentions a tradition (which he might have received from Sir William D'Avenant) that Philaster

NOTES.

^m "Nor fire nor cank'ring age, as Naso said
Of his, thy wit-fraught book shall once invade:
Nor shall I e'er believe or think thee dead
(Though mis'd) untill our bankrout stage be sped (Impossible!) with some new strain, t'out do
Passions of Juliet and her Romeo;
Or till I hear a scene more nobly take
Than when thy half-sword-parlying Romans spake."

Verses by L. Digges, prefixed to the first edition of our author's plays, in 1623.

ⁿ By a similar figure these children are in Hamlet called "little Eyases." —

• "New titles warrant not a play for new,
The subject being old; and 'tis as true,
Fresh and neat matter may with ease be fram'd
Out of their stories that have oft been nam'd
With glory on the stage. What borrows he
From him that wrought old Priam's tragedy,
Th' it writes his love for Hecuba? Sure to tell
Of Cæsar's amorous heats, and how he fell
In the Capitol, can never be the same
To the judicious."

Prologue to the False One.

, was

was the first play that brought Beaumont and Fletcher into reputation. That play, as has been already mentioned, was acted about the year 1609. We may therefore presume that the Maid's Tragedy did not appear before that year; for we cannot suppose it to have been one of the unsuccessful pieces that preceded Philaster. That the Maid's Tragedy was written before 1611, is ascertained by a Ms. play, now extant, entitled The SECOND Maid's Tragedy, which was licensed by Sir George Buck, on the 31st of Oct. 1611. I believe it never was printed^p.

If, therefore, we fix the date of the original Maid's Tragedy in 1610, it agrees sufficiently well with that here assigned to Julius Cæsar.

It appears by the papers of the late Mr. George Vertue, that a play called Cæsar's Tragedy was acted at court before the 10th of April, in the year 1613. This was probably Shakspeare's Julius Cæsar, it being much the fashion at that time to alter the titles of his plays.

37. A Yorkshire Tragedy, 1608.

A Yorkshire Tragedy, (whoever was the author of it) could not have been written before August 1604, when the murder, on which it was founded, was committed^q. It was entered at Stationers' hall May 2, 1608, and printed in that year.

It is observable, that, in the title-page of this play, the name of Shakspeare is spelt in the same manner as he has himself subscribed it to his Will; and the piece is said to have been acted by his majestie's players at the Globe; the theatre in which almost all our author's plays were originally performed.

The very name, however, of the publisher of this piece, (independent of other circumstances) is sufficient to create a doubt concerning its authenticity; for it is printed for Thomas Pavier, who appears, from the Stationers' books, to

NOTES.

^p This tragedy (as I learn from a Ms. of Mr. — was formerly in the possession of John Warburton, Esq. Some Herald. It had no author's name to it, when it was licensed, but as afterwards ascribed to George Chapman, whose name is by another hand, and that of Shakspeare inserted.

^q See Dr. Farmer's Essay on the Learning of Shakspeare.

have

have had an interest also in Titus Andronicus, in Pericles, The Puritan, and Sir John Oldcastle; and whose name is not prefixed to any one of Shakspeare's undisputed performances, except K. Henry V. and two parts of K. Henry VI. of which plays he printed copies manifestly spurious and imperfect.

38. ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA, 1608.

Antony and Cleopatra was entered on the Stationers' books, May 2, 1608; but was not printed till 1623.

In Ben Jonson's Silent Woman, Act IV. Sc. iv. 1609, this play seems to be alluded to:

“Morose. Nay, I would sit out a play that were nothing but fights at sea, drum, trumpet and target.”

39. CORIOLANUS, 1609.

40. TIMON OF ATHENS, 1610.

These two plays, which were neither entered in the books of the Stationers' company, nor printed, till 1623, are classed here only on the principle mentioned in a preceding article^r. Shakspeare, in the course of about twenty years, produced, if the rejected plays and Titus Andronicus were his, forty-three dramas; if they were spurious, thirty-five. Most of his other plays have been attributed, on plausible grounds at least, to former years. As we have no proof to ascertain when these were written, it seems reasonable to ascribe them to that period, to which we are not led by any particular circumstance to attribute any other of his works; at which, it is supposed, he had not ceased to write; which yet, unless these pieces were then composed, must, for aught that now appears, have been unemployed. When once he had availed himself of North's Plutarch, and had thrown any one of the lives into a dramatick form, he probably found it so easy as to induce him to proceed, till he had exhausted all the subjects which he imagined that book would afford. Hence the four plays of Julius Cæsar, Antony and Cleopatra, Coriolanus, and Timon, are supposed to have been written in succession.

N O T E.

^r Ante No. 31.

Cominius, in the panegyrick which he pronounces on Coriolanus, says,

—“ In the brunt of seventeen battles since
“ He lurch’d all fwords of the garland.”

In Ben Jonson’s Silent Woman, Act V. Sc. last, we meet (as Mr. Steevens has observed) the same uncommon phraseology: “ You have lurch’d your friends of the better half of the garland.”

Whether this was a snear at Shakspeare, or a new phrase of that day, it adds some degree of probability to the date here assigned to Coriolanus; for The Silent Woman also made its first appearance in 1609.

There is a Ms. comedy now extant, on the subject of Timon, which, from the hand-writing and the style, appears to be of the age of Shakspeare. In this piece a steward is introduced, under the name of Laches, who, like Flavius in that of our author, endeavours to restrain his master’s profusion, and faithfully attends him when he is forsaken by all his other followers.—Here too a mock-banquet is given by Timon to his false friends; but, instead of warm water, stones painted like artichokes are served up, which he throws at his guests.—From a line in Shakspeare’s play, one might be tempted to think that something of this sort was introduced by him; though, through the omission of a marginal direction in the only ancient copy of this piece, it has not been customary to exhibit it:

“ Second Senator. Lord Timon’s mad.

“ 3d Sen. I feel it on my bones.

“ 4th Sen. One day he gives us diamonds, next day stones.”

This comedy, (which is evidently the production of a scholar, many lines of Greek being introduced into it,) appears to have been written after Ben Jonson’s Every Man out of his Humour, (1599) to which it contains a reference; but I have not discovered the precise time when it was composed. If it were ascertained, it might be some guide to us in fixing the date of our author’s Timon, which, on the grounds that have been already stated, I suppose to have been posterior to this anonymous play.

N O T E.

• Ante p. 324.

41. OTHELLO, 1611:

Dr. Warburton thinks that there is in this tragedy a satirical allusion to the institution of the order of Baronets, which dignity was created by king James I. in the year 1611:

—“ The hearts of old gave hands,
“ But our new heraldry is hands, not hearts.”

Othello, Act III. Sc. iv.

“ Amongst their other prerogatives of honour,” (says that commentator) “ they [the new-created baronets] had an addition to their paternal arms, of an hand gules in an escutcheon argent. And we are not to doubt but that this was the new heraldry alluded to by our author; by which he insinuates, that some then created had hands indeed, but not hearts; that is, money to pay for the creation, but no virtue to purchase the honour.”

Such is the observation of this critick. But by what chymistry can the sense which he has affixed to this passage, be extracted from it? Or is it probable, that Shakspeare, who has more than once condescended to be the encomiast of the unworthy founder of the order of Baronets, who had been personally honoured by a letter from his majesty, and substantially benefited by the royal licence granted to him and his fellow-comedians, should have been so impolitick, as to satirize the king, or to deprectate his new-created dignity?

These lines appear to me to afford an obvious meaning, without supposing them to contain such a multitude of allusions:

Of old, (says Othello) in matrimonial alliances, the heart dictated the union of hands; but our modern junctions are those of hands, not of hearts.

On every marriage the arms of the wife are united to those of the husband. This circumstance, I believe, it was, that suggested heraldry, in this place, to our author. I know not whether a heart was ever used as an armorial ensign, nor is it, I conceive, necessary to enquire. It was the office of the herald to join, or, to speak technically, to quarter the arms of the new-married pair^t. Hence, with his usual li-

NOTE.

^t “ I may quarter, coz,” says Slender in the Merry Wives of Windsor. “ You may (replies justice Shallow) by marrying.”

cence, Shakspeare uses heraldry for junction, or union in general.—Thus, in his Rape of Lucrece, the same term is employed to denote that union of colours which constitutes a beautiful complexion :

“ This heraldry in Lucrece’s face was seen,
“ Argued by beauty’s red, and virtue’s white.”

This passage not affording us any assistance, we are next to consider one in The Alchemist, by Ben Jonson, which, if it alluded to an incident in Othello, (as Mr. Steevens seems to think it does) would ascertain this play to have appeared before 1610, in which year The Alchemist was first acted :

“ Loverwit. Didst thou hear a cry, say’st thou?
“ Neighbb. Yes, Sir, like unto a man that had been strangled an hour, and could not speak.”

But I doubt whether Othello was here in Jonson’s contemplation. Old Ben generally spoke out; and if he had intended to sneer at the manner of Desdemona’s death, I think, he would have taken care that his meaning should not be mis’d, and would have written—“ like unto a woman,” &c.

This tragedy was not entered on the books of the Stationers’ company, till Oct. 6, 1621, nor printed till the following year; but it was acted at court early in the year 1613^u. How long before that time it had appeared, I have not been able to ascertain, either from the play itself, or from any contemporary production. I have, however, persuaded myself that it was one of Shakspeare’s latest performances: a supposition, to which the acknowledged excellence of the piece gives some degree of probability. It is here attributed to the year 1611, because Dr. Warburton’s comment on the passage above-cited, may convince others, though, I confess it does not satisfy me.

Emilia and Lodovico, two of the characters in this play, are likewise two of the persons represented in May-day, a comedy by Chapman, first printed in 1611.

NOTE.

▪ Mf. Vertue.

Though

42. THE TEMPEST, 1612.

Though some account of the Bermuda Islands, which are mentioned in this play, had been published in 1600, (as Dr. Farmer has observed) yet as they were not generally known till Sir George Somers arrived there in 1609, The Tempest may be fairly attributed to a period subsequent to that year; especially as it exhibits such strong internal marks of having been a late production.

The entry at Stationers' hall does not contribute to ascertain the time of its composition; for it appears not on the Stationers' books, nor was it printed, till 1623, when it was published with the rest of our author's plays in folio: in which edition, having, I suppose by mere accident, obtained the first place, it has ever since preserved a station to which it indubitably is not entitled.

As the circumstance from which this piece receives its name, is at an end in the very first scene, and as many other titles, all equally proper, might have occurred to Shakspeare, (such as The Enchanted Island—The Banished Duke—Ferdinand and Miranda, &c.) it is possible, that some particular and recent event determined him to call it The Tempest. It appears from Stowe's Chronicle, p. 913, that in the October, November, and December of the year 1612, a dreadful tempest happened in England, "which did exceeding great damage, with extreame shipwrack throughout the ocean." "There perished" (says the historian) above an hundred ships in the space of two houres."—Several pamphlets were published on this occasion, decorated with prints of sinking vessels, castles toppling on their warders' heads, the devil overturning steeples, &c. In one of them, the author describing the appearance of the waves at Dover, says, "the whole seas appeared like a fiery world, all sparkling red." Another of these narratives recounts the escape of Edmond Pet, a sailor; whose preservation appears to have been no less marvellous than that of Trinculo or Stephano: and so great a terror did this tempest create in the minds of the people, that a form of prayer was ordered on the occasion, which is annexed to one of the publications above mentioned.

There is reason to believe that some of our author's dramas obtained their names from the seasons at which they were produced. It is not very easy to account for the title of Twelfth Night, but by supposing it to have been first exhibited in the Christmas holidays*. Neither the title of

A Midsummer Night's Dream, nor 'that of The Winter's Tale, denotes the season of the action; the events which are the subject of the latter, occurring at the time of sheep-shearing, and the dream, from which the former receives its name, happening on the night preceding May-day. — These titles, therefore, were probably suggested by the season at which the plays were exhibited, to which they belong; A Midsummer Night's Dream having, we may presume, been first represented in June, and The Winter's Tale in December.

Perhaps, then, it may not be thought a very improbable conjecture, that this comedy was written in the summer of 1612, and produced on the stage in the latter end of that year; and that the author availed himself of a circumstance then fresh in the minds of his audience, by affixing a title to it, which was more likely to excite curiosity than any other that he could have chosen, while at the same time it was sufficiently justified by the subject of the drama.

Mr. Steevens, in his observations on this play, has quoted from the tragedy of Darius by the earl of Sterline, first printed in 1603, some lines* so strongly resembling a celebrated

NOTES.

* Perhaps it was formerly an established custom to have plays represented at court in the Christmas holidays, and particularly on Twelfth Night. Two of Lilly's comedies (Alexander and Campaspe, 1591 — and Mydas, 1592) are said in their title pages, to have been played befoore the queenes majestie on Twelfe-day at night; and several of Ben Jonson's masques were presented at Whitehall, on the same festival. Our author's Love's Labour's Lost was exhibited before queen Elizabeth in the Christmas holidays; and his King Lear was acted before king James at St. Stephen's night; (the night after Christmas-day.).

“ Let greatness of her glassy scepters vaunt,
Not scepters, no but reeds, soon bruised, soon broken,
And let this worldly pomp our wits enchant,
All fades, and scarcely leaves behind a token.
Those golden palaces, those gorgeous halls,
With furniture superfluously fair,
Those stately courts, those sky-encompassing walls,
Evanish all like vapours in the air.”

Darius, Act III. Ed. 1603.

“ — These

brated passage in the Tempest, that one author must, I apprehend, have been indebted to the other. Shakspeare, I imagine, borrowed from lord Sterline^z.

Mr. Holt conjectured^a, that the masque in the fifth act of this comedy was intended by the poet as a compliment to the earl of Essex, on his being united in wedlock, in 1611, to lady Frances Howard, to whom he had been contracted some years before^b. However this might have been, the date which that commentator has assigned to this play (1614) is certainly too late; for it appears from the Mss. of Mr. Vertue, that the Tempest was acted by John Heminge and the rest of the King's Company, before prince Charles, the lady Elizabeth, and the prince Palatine elector, in the beginning of the year 1613.

The names of Trinculo and Antonio, two of the characters in this comedy, are likewise found in that of Albunazar; which was first printed in 1614, but is supposed by Dryden to have appeared some years before.

43. TWELFTH NIGHT, 1614.

It has been generally believed, that Shakspeare retired from the theatre, and ceased to write, about three years

N O T E S.

— “ These our actors,
As I foretold you, were all spirits, and
Ave melted into air, into thin air;
And, like the baseless fabrick of this vision,
The cloud-capt towers, the gorgeous palaces
The solemn temples, the great globe itself,
Yea, all which it inherit, shall dissolve,
And like this unsubstantial pageant faded,
Leave not a rack behind.” Tempest, Act IV. Sc. i.

Whether we suppose Shakspeare to have imitated lord Sterline, or lord Sterline to have borrowed from him, the fourth line above quoted from the tragedy of Darius, renders it highly probable that Shakspeare wrote, (as Sir Thomas Hanmer conjectured,)

“ Leave not a track behind.”

^z See a note on Julius Caesar, Act I. Sc. i.

^a Observations on the Tempest, p. 67. Mr. Holt imagined, that lord Essex was united to lady Frances Howard in 1610; but he was mistaken: their union did not take place till the next year.

^b Jan. 5, 1606—7. The earl continued abroad four years from that time; so that he did not cohabit with his wife till 1611.

before he died. The latter supposition must now be considered as extremely doubtful; for Mr. Tyrwhitt, with great probability, conjectures, that Twelfth Night was written in 1614: grounding his opinion on an allusion^c, which it seems to contain, to those parliamentary undertakers, of whom frequent mention is made in the Journals of the House of Commons for that year^d; who were stigmatized with this invidious name, on account of their having undertaken to manage the elections of knights and burgesses in such a manner as to secure a majority in parliament for the court. If this allusion was intended, Twelfth Night, was probably our author's last production; and, we may presume, was written after he had retired to Stratford. It is observable that Mr. Ashley, a member of the House of Commons, in one of the debates on this subject, says, "that the rumour concerning these undertakers had spread into the country."

When Shakspeare quitted London and his profession, for the tranquillity of a rural retirement, it is improbable that such an excursive genius should have been immediately reconciled to a state of mental inactivity. It is more natural to conceive, that he should have occasionally bent his thoughts towards the theatre, which his muse had supported, and the interest of his associates whom he had left behind him to struggle with the capricious vicissitudes of publick taste, and whom, his last Will shews us, he had not forgotten. To the necessity, therefore, of literary amusement to every cultivated mind, or to the dictates of friendship, or to both these incentives, we are perhaps indebted for the comedy of Twelfth Night; which bears evident marks of having been composed at leisure, as most of the characters that it contains, are finished to a higher degree of dramatick perfection, than is discoverable in some of our author's earlier comick performances^e.

In the third act of this comedy, Decker's Westward Ho seems to be alluded to. Westward Ho was printed in 1607,

NOTES.

^c "Nay, if you be an undertaker I am for you." See Twelfth Night, Act IV. Sc. iii. and the note there.

^d Comm. Journ. Vol. I. p. 456, 457, 470.

^e The comedies particularly alluded to, are, Love's Labour Lost, The Two Gentlemen of Verona, A Midsummer Night's Dream, and The Comedy of Errors.

and from the prologue to Eastward Ho appears to have been acted in 1604, or before.

Maria, in Twelfth Night, speaking of Malvolio, says, "he does smile his face into more lines than the new map with the augmentation of the Indies." I have not been able to learn the date of the map here alluded to; but, as it is spoken of as a recent publication, it may, when discovered, serve to ascertain the date of this play more exactly.

The comedy of What you Will, (the second title of the play now before us) which was entered at Stationers' hall, Aug. 9, 1607, was probably Marston's play, as it was printed in that year; and it appears to have been the general practice of the booksellers at that time, recently before publication, to enter those plays of which they had procured copies.

Twelfth Night was not registered on the Stationers' books, nor printed, till 1623.

It has been thought, that Ben Jonson intended to ridicule the conduct of this play, in his Every Man out of his Humour, at the end of Act III. Sc. vi. where he makes Mitis say,—“That the argument of his comedy might have been of some other nature, as of a duke to be in love with a countess, and that countess to be in love with the duke's son, and the son in love with the lady's waiting maid: some such cross wooing, with a clown to their serving man, better than be thus near and familiarly allied to the time.”

I doubt, however, whether Jonson had here Twelfth Night in contemplation. If an allusion to this comedy were intended, it would ascertain it to have been written before 1599, when Every Man out of his Humour was first acted. But Meres does not mention Twelfth Night in 1598: nor is there any reason to believe that it then existed. I know not whether this passage is found in the quarto copy of Every Man out of his Humour, published in 1600². Perhaps it first appeared in the folio edition of Jonson's

NOTES.

1 See the first note on Twelfth Night, Act I. Sc. i.

2 “A comical satyre of Every Man out of his Humour,” was entered on the Stationers' books, by John Helme, in the year 1600; and the piece was, I suppose, then published, for several passages of it are found in a miscellaneous collection of poetry, entitled England's Parnassus, printed in that year.

works, printed in 1616; in which case, though it should be admitted to have been a sneer at Shakspeare, it would not affect the date now attributed to Twelfth Night. It is certain that Jonson made alterations in some of his pieces, when he collected and reprinted them. Every Man in his Humour, in particular, underwent an entire reform; all the persons of the drama, to whom English names were given on its republication, having in the former edition appeared as natives of Italy, in which country the scene originally was laid.

If the dates here assigned to our author's plays should not, in every instance, bring with them conviction of their propriety, let it be remembered, that this is a subject on which conviction cannot at this day be obtained: and that the observations now submitted to the publick, do not pretend to any higher title than that of "AN ATTEMPT to ascertain the chronology of the dramas of Shakspeare."

Should the errors and deficiencies of this essay invite others to deeper and more successful researches, the end proposed by it will be attained: and he who offers the present arrangement of Shakspeare's dramas, will be happy to transfer the slender portion of credit that may result from the novelty of his undertaking, to some future claimant, who may be supplied with ampler materials, and endued with a superior degree of antiquarian sagacity.

To some, he is not unapprized, this enquiry will appear a tedious and barren speculation. But there are many, it is hoped, who think nothing that relates to the brightest ornament of the English nation, wholly uninteresting: who will be gratified by observing, how the genius of our great poet gradually expanded itself, till, like his own Ariel, it flamed amazement in every quarter, blazing forth with a lustre, that has not hitherto been equalled, and perhaps will never be surpassed.

MALONE.

PLAYS, &c. contained in each VOLUME.

CONTENTS of VOL. I.

Head of Shakespeare, from an Engraving by Martin Droeshout, before the Folio 1623.

Preface by Johnson.

Advertifement by Steevens.

Extraet from the Gul's Hornbook, by Decker, concerning our ancient theatres, &c.

The Globe Theatre, from the Long Antwerp View of London in the Pepysian Library.

Catalogue of the earliest Translations from Greek and Roman Classicks.

Appendix to Colman's Terence, relative to the Learning of Shakespeare.

Dedication by Heminge and Condell to the Folio, 1623.

Preface by the same.

—— by Pope.

—— by Theobald.

—— by Hanmer.

—— by Warburton.

Advertifement prefix'd to Steevens's Twenty Plays, &c.

Rowe's Life of Shakespeare.

Mss. in the Herald's Office.

Licences to Shakespeare, &c. from Rymer's Fœdera, and his Mss.

Head of Shakespeare from that by Marshall, prefixed to the Poems 1640.

Fac-Simile of Shakespeare's Hand-writing.

Anecdotes of Shakespeare, from Oldys's Mss. &c.

Farmcr's Account of a Pamphlet falsely imputed to Shakespeare; together with Remarks on a passage in Warton's Life of Dr. Bathurst.

Observations on Passages in the Preface to the French Translation of Shakespeare.

Re-

C O N T E N T S.

Registers of the Shakespeare Family.

Grainger's Catalogue of the Portraits of Shakespeare.

Ancient and Modern Commendatory Verses on Shakespeare, with Notes, &c.

List of Editions of Shakespeare's Plays, both ancient and modern;—of Plays alter'd from him;—of detach'd Pieces of Criticism, &c.

Entries of Shakespeare's Plays on the Books of the Stationers' Company.

An Attempt to ascertain the Order in which the Plays attributed to Shakespeare were written, by Edmond Malone, Esq.

Tempest.

Two Gentlemen of Verona.

Merry Wives of Windsor.

V O L. II.

Measure for Measure.

Comedy of Errors.

Much Ado about Nothing.

Love's Labour Lost.

V O L. III.

Midsummer Night's Dream.

Merchant of Venice.

As You Like It.

Taming of a Shrew.

V O L. IV.

All's Well that Ends Well.

Twelfth Night.

Winter's Tale.

Macbeth.

V O L. V.

King John.

King Richard II.

C O N T E N T S.

King Henry IV. Part First.

King Henry IV. Part Second.

V O L. VI.

King Henry V.

King Henry VI. Part First.

King Henry VI. Part Second.

King Henry VI. Part Third.

V O L. VII.

King Richard III.

King Henry VIII.

Coriolanus.

V O L. VIII.

Julius Cæsar.

Antony and Cleopatra.

Timon of Athens.

Titus Andronicus.

V O L. IX.

Troilus and Cressida.

Cymbeline.

King Lear.

V O L. X.

Romeo and Juliet

Hamlet.

Othello.

Supplemental Note on Hamlet, p. 263, and 426
[The rugged Pyrrhus &c.]

ERRATA.

VOL. I.

Page

Prefaces, &c.

276. Note line 5. for 1689, read, 1589.
 278. Line 22. for 1580, read, 1589.
 300. Since all our other sheets were printed off, it has been discovered, that the entry at Stationers' Hall, "Jan. 9. 1598," (see Prefaces, p. 257) was Haywarde's History of K. Henry IV. and not our author's play with the same title. Part of the argument therefore founded by Mr. Malone on the latter supposition (p. 300) must be considered as erroneous, whilst I alone remain answerable for his mistake, which happily does not affect the date allotted by him to the piece in question.

STEEVENS.

325. In the first line of Steevens's note on Macbeth, dele the full point, and substitute a comma.

Plays.

4. At the end of Note 1. for act III. read act IV.
 23. Note 5. and five lines from the bottom, for lest, read last.
 57. Note 7. for Ital. Gaverdina, read, Gabardina, Spanisb. BARETTI.
 239. Note 1. line 4. for see froth, read, see thee froth.
 281. At the end of Note 9. add, STEEVENS.
 288. Note 4. line 1. for see the join, read, see thee join.
 305. In Dr. Johnson's note, line 3. for text, read, jest.

VOL. II.

84. Note 3. line 5. dele first old.
 123. Note 9. at bottom, for deed charity, read, deed of charity.
 250. Note. For the great majority, read, a great majority.
 313. Note 6. line 2. for the regular, read, a regular.
 498. At the end of Note 7. add, STEEVENS.

VOL. III.

38. In Mr. Tyrwhitt's note, for It, read, I.
 44. Note 4. for Sigismunda, read Gismunda.
 83. Note 3. line 4. from the bottom, for, informs as, read, informs us.
 236. Note 9. line 19. for, latter, read, former.
 245. Note 2. for, full duplicity, read, full of duplicity.
 322. In Mr. Toller's continuation of Note 3. for,—But can Atalanta's &c. read,—But cannot Atalanta's &c.
 339. In Mr. Tyrwhitt's note, l. 4. for seem to be preserved, read, has as yet been produced.
 416. In Mr. Tyrwhitt's note, l. 10. after Shakespeare, insert, elsewhere.
 448. At the end of Note 8. add, STEEVENS.
 462. In Mr. Malone's continuation of Note 4. for, instead of new, read, instead of new?

VOL. IV.

184. In Mr. Malone's continuation of Note 1. for, unexpressing, read, unexpressible.
 352. In the text, line 13. for, drop, read, dropp'd.
 421. Text, line 2. for, earge, read, charge.
 430. Text, line 12. for, woulstst, read, wouldst.
 506. For, Gray's Inn Journal N°. 17. read, Gray's Inn Journal N°. 15.
 590. Note 7. line 1. for, as, read, was.

E R R A T A.

Page.

VOL. V.

205. In Note 6. line 3. dele to, after with.
 446. Note 4. instead of "Percy's dea," and, "thine ey," read,
 "Percy's dead," and, "thine eye."
 516. End of Note 3. instead of, which plain language, read, which in plain language.

VOL. VI.

61. At the end of Note 1. for, sc. i. read, sc. ii.

VOL. VII.

36. In Mr. Walpole's Note, instead of, reduce, read, deduce,
 66. Note 8. for camer regia, read, camera regia.
 418. Line 1. Dele—Begone.
 2. read, Men. Be gone.
 3. Dele—Men.

This error is entirely mine: I meant to have followed Mr:
 Tyrwhitt's division of the speech. STEEVENS.

425. Text, line 4. from the bottom, for, roated, read, roted.
 452. Text, line 2. for, whoop'd out Rome, read, whoop'd out of Rome.

VOL. VIII.

81. Text, line 1. for, have no will, read, I have no will.
 182. Note 6. for, you shall come, read, you should come.

VOL. IX.

73. Line 13. for, Pan, read, Par.
 253. Note 7. for, Alexander Menfrie, read, William Alexander of Menfrie.
 284. Text, line 19. After, That's all I reck, instead of a comma, a full point.
 286. Stage direction, line 16. for, bearing her his arms, read, bearing her in his arms.
 At the end of Note 5. add, STEEVENS.
 Note 6. for, a little is the reading, read, a little is the common reading.
 Text, line 1. for, contenst, read, contents.
 In Mr. Tyrwhitt's note, a comma after necessaries.
 At the end of Note 3. add. STEEVENS.

VOL. X.

- Line 1. Note. For, t moist, read, the moist; and in line 2: ibid.
 i, read, his.

line 9. for, νοσηπιος, read, ισχυριμος.

line 18. Terra in antiquum sit reditura chaos.]

This line of Muretus is here quoted from an incorrect edition. The false quantity in it, however, was sufficiently obvious; but as such mistakes in prosody are sometimes to be met with among modern writers of Latin verse, (especially the Poste Italorum.) I passed over the present imperfection, without pointing it out to the public. Yet perhaps we should read, with an older copy of this author, printed at Paris in his lifetime: .

Tetras in antiquum &c,

i. e. quaternis elementorum, the four elements out of which the universe was made. MALONE.

614. at the end of Note 4. add, STEEVENS.

The

E R R A T A.

The following Mistakes are chargeable on the Editor only.

Page.

Vol. II.

471. for, J. Middleton, read, T. Middleton.

Vol. III.

18. Note 3. for Campaspe 1591, read, 1584.

452. Note 5. for, Cyril Turner's All's lost by Lust, read, Rowley's All's lost &c.

Vol. V.

296. Note 8. for, Shirley's Match &c. read, Rowley's Match &c.

347. Note 4. for Sir J. Gresham, read, Sir T. Gresham.

568. End of Note 9. for Dryden, read, Waller.

Vol. VI.

560. For, Melancholy Lover, read, Lover's Melancholy.

Vol. VII.

4. Note 3. As the date of the Mirraour for Magistrates, for, 1587, read, 1575.

Vol. VIII.

142. In Note 6. for, B. and Fletcher, read only, Fletcher.

Vol. X.

219. Note 9. For, Heywood's Jew of Malta, read, Marlowe's.

DIRECTIONS to the BINDER.

The large Head of Shakespeare, to face the title-page to Vol. I.

The small Head of Shakespeare (marked by mistake N°. 3.) to face his will; i. e. to front p. 196 of the Prefaces.

The Fac-simile, to front the printed signature to Shakespeare's will; i. e. p. 200.

The Morris-dancers, to be folded in at the end of K. Henry IV. P. I. Vol. V. and not P. II. as marked by mistake.

The two Heads, and the Fac-simile, are to be cut down to 8vo. size.

TEMPEST.

VOL. I.

B

Persons Represented *

Alonso, king of Naples.

Sebastian, his brother.

Prospero, the rightful duke of Milan.

Anthonio, his brother, the usurping duke of Milan.

Ferdinand, son to the king of Naples.

Gonzalo, an honest old counsellor of Naples.

Adrian, }

Francisco, } lords.

Caliban, a savage and deformed slave.

Trinculo, a jester.

Stephano, a drunken butler.

Master of a ship, boatswain, and mariners.

Miranda, daughter to Prospero.

Ariel, an airy spirit.

Iris,

Ceres,

Juno,

Nymphs,

Reapers,

} spirits.

} .

Other spirits attending on Prospero.

SCENE, the sea, with a ship; afterwards an uninhabited island.

* This enumeration of persons is taken from the Folio 1623.
STEEVENS.

TEMPEST.

A·C·T I. S·C·E·N·E I.

On a ship at sea.

A tempestuous noise of thunder and lightning heard.

Enter a Ship-master and a Boatswain.

Master. Boatswain,— Boatsf. Here, master: What cheer?

Music.

¹ Tempest.] The Tempest and The Midsummer's Night's Dream, are the noblest efforts of that sublime and amazing imagination peculiar to Shakespeare, which soars above the bounds of nature without forsaking sense: or, more properly, carries nature along with him beyond her established limits. Fletcher seems particularly to have admired these two plays, and hath wrote two in imitation of them, The Sea Voyage and The Faithful Shepherdess. But when he presumes to break a lance with Shakespeare, and write in emulation of him, as he does in The False One, which is the rival of Anthony and Cleopatra, he is not so successful. After him, sir John Suckling and Milton caught the brightest fire of their imagination from these two plays; which shines fantastically indeed in The Goblins, but much more nobly and serenely in The Mask at Ludlow-Castle.
WARBURTON.

No one has been hitherto lucky enough to discover the romance on which Shakespeare may be supposed to have founded this play, the beauties of which could not secure it from the criticism of Ben Jonson, whose malignity appears to have been more than equal to his wit. In the induction to Bartholomew Fair, he says: "If there be never a servant monster in the fair, who can help it, nor a nest of antiques? He is loth to make nature afraid in his plays, like those that beget Tales, Tempests, and such like drolleries." STEELE.

Mr. Theobald tells us, that the Tempest must have been written after 1609, because the Bermuda islands, which are men-

T E M P E S T.

Maſt. Good : Speak to the mariners :—' fall to't yarely, or we run ourſelves aground : beſtir, beſtir. Exit.]

Enter Mariners.

Boatſ. Heigh, my hearts ; cheerly, cheerly, my hearts ; yare, yare : Take in the top-ſail ; Tend to the tioned in it, were unknown to the Engliſh until that year ; but this is a miſtake. He might have ſeen in Hackluyt, 1600, folio, a deſcription of Bermuda, by Henry May, who was ſhipwrecked there in 1593.

It was however one of our author's laſt works. In 1598 he played a part in the original Every Man in his Humour. Two of the characters are Proſpero and Stephano. Here Ben Jonſon taught him the pronunciation of the latter word, which is always right in the Tempeſt.

" Is not this Stephano, my drunken butler ?"

And always wrong in his earlier play, the Merchant of Venice, which had been on the ſtage at leaſt two or three years before its publication in 1600.

" My friend Stephano, ſignify, I pray you," &c.

—— So little did a late editor know of his author, when he idly ſuppoſed his ſchool literature might perhaps have been loſt by the diſſipation of youth, or the buſy ſcenes of publick life !

FARMER.

See a Note on The cloud-capt Towers, &c. act III. STEVENS.

" In this naval dialogue, perhaps the firſt example of ſailor's language exhibited on the ſtage, there are, as I have been told by a ſkilful navigator, ſome inaccuracies and contradictory orders. JOHNSON.

" —fall to't yarely, — J i. e. Readily, nimbly. Our author is frequent in his uſe of this word. So in Decker's Satyromastix.

" They'll make his muſe as yare as a rumbler." SEAVENS.

Here it is applied as a ſea-term, and in other parts of the ſcene. So he uſes the adjective, act V. ſc. v. " Our ſhip is " tight and yare." And in one of the Henries, " yare are our " ſhips." To this day the ſailors ſay, " ſet yare to the helm." Again in Anton. and Cleop. II. iii. " The tackles yarely frame the office." It occurs in its general acceptation, in Robert of Gloſter's Chronicle ; where Edward the Confeſſor receives from two pilgrims the notice of his approaching death, edit. Hearne, vol. I. p. 342. In conſequence of this unexpected admonition, ſays the chronicler,

" His gold he delide to pouere men, and made his bernea bare,

" And his treſurie all ſo gude, and so God hym made as yare."

Gare

the master's whistle;—Blow, till thou burst thy wind, if room enough!

Enter Alonso, Sebastian, Antonio, Ferdinand, Gonzalo, and others.

Alon. Good boatswain, have care. Where's the master? Play the men!

Boats. I pray now, keep below.

Ant. Where is the master, boatswain?

Boats. Do you not hear him? You mar our labour; Keep your cabins: you do assist the storm.

Gon. Nay, good, be patient.

Boats. When the sea is. Hence! What care these roarers for the name of king? To cabin: silence: trouble us not.

Gare is yare, g and y being convertible. "He distributed his goods to the poor, and made himself ready for God." The same writer has also gare y made, i. e. "finished, well-prepared." Chaucer, who wrote many years afterwards, has it both as a ship-phrased, and in its general sense. But the common and unrestrained use of this word was grown obsolete before the age of Shakespeare; who, notwithstanding, seems affectingly fond of introducing it in that signification. In Twelfth-Night, act III. sc. xii. Sir Toby says, "Dismount thy tuck, be yare in thy preparation." And in Ant. and Cleop. and other plays. WARTON.

* Perhaps it might be read, — blow till thou burst, wind, if room enough. JOHNSON.

Perhaps rather — blow till thou burst thee, wind! if room enough. Beaum. and Fletcher have copied this passage in The Pilgrim.

— Blow, blow west wind,

Blow till thou rise!

Again in Pericles Prince of Tyre, 1609.

"1st Saylor. Blow and split thyself!"

* "2d Saylor. But sea-room, and the brine and cloudy billow
"Kiss the moon, I care not."

And yet, desiring the wind to blow till they burst their winds, is not unlike many other conceits of Shakespeare. STEVENS.

* Play the men, i. e. act with spirit, behave like men.

So in K. Henry VI. p. I. sc. vi.

"When they shall hear how we have play'd the men."

Again in Marlow's Tamburlaine, 1590, p. 2.

"Viceroys and peeres of Turkey, play the men."

Anyt is, phan. STEVENS.

Gon. Good ; yet remember whom thou hast aboard.

Boatf. None that I more love than myself. You are a counsellor ; if you can command these elements to silence, and work the peace of the present⁶, we will not handle a rope more ; use your authority. If you cannot, give thanks you have liv'd so long, and make yourself ready in your cabin for the mischance of the hour, if it so hap.—Cheerly, good hearts—Out of our way, I say. [Exit.

Gon. I have great comfort from this fellow : methinks, he hath no drowning mark upon him ; his complexion is perfect gallows. Stand fast, good fate, to his hanging ; make the rope of his destiny uncable, for our own doth little advantage : If he be not born to be hang'd, our case is miserable. [Exeunt.

Re-enter Boatswain.

Boatf. Down with the top-mast ; yare, lower, lower ; bring her to try with main-course. [A cry within.] A plague upon this howling ! they are louder than the weather, or our office.—

Re-enter Sebastian, Antonio, and Gonzalo.

Yet again ? What do you here ? Shall we give o'er, and drown ? Have you a mind to sink ?

Seb. A pox o' your throat ! you bawling, blasphemous, uncharitable dog !

Boatf. Work you then.

Ant. Hang, cur, hang ! you whoreson, insolent noisemaker ! we are less afraid to be drown'd, than thou art.

Gon. I'll warrant him from drowning ; though the ⁶ — of the present,] It may mean of the present instant.

STEVENS.

⁷ Gonzalo.] It may be observed of Gonzalo, that, being the only good man that appears with the king, he is the only man that preserves his cheerfulness in the wreck, and his hope on the island. JOHNSON.

Ship were no stronger than a nut-shell, and as leaky as an unstan^d'd wench.

Boats. 'Lay her a-hold, a-hold; 'set her two courses; off to sea again, lay her off.

Enter Mariners wet.

Mar. All lost! to prayers, to prayers! all lost!

[Exeunt.]

Boats. What, must our mouths be cold?

Gon. The king and prince at prayers! let us assist them,

For our case is as theirs.

Seb. I am out of patience.

Ant. We're ²merely cheated of our lives by drunkards,—

This wide-chopp'd rascal;—Would, thou might'st lie drowning,

The washing of ten tides!

Gon. He'll be hang'd yet;

¹ — an unstan^d'd wench.]

Unstan^d'd, I believe, means incontinent. STEEVENS.

² Lay her a-hold, a-hold; —] To lay a ship a-hold, is to bring her to lie as near the wind as she can, in order to keep clear of the land, and get her out to sea. STEEVENS.

¹ — set her two courses off to sea again, —] The courses are the main-sail and foresail. This term is used by Raleigh, in his Discourse on Shipping. JOHNSON.

The passage, as Mr. Holt has observed, should be pointed, Set her two courses; off, &c.

Such another expression occurs in Decker's, If this be not a good Play, the Devil is in it. 1612.

“ — off with your Drablers and your Banners; out with your Courses.” STEEVENS.

² — merely —] In this place signifies absolutely. In which sense it is used in Hamlet, act I. sc. iii.

“ — Things rank and gross in nature

“ Possess it merely.” —

So in Ben Jonson's Poetaster:

“ — at request

“ Of some mere friends, some honourable Romans.”

STEEVENS.

T E M P E S T.

Though every drop of water swear against it,
And gape at wid'st ' to glut him.

[A confused noise within.] Mercy on us!—

We split, we split!—Farewell, my wife and children!—⁴ Farewell, brother!—We split, we split, we split—

Ant. Let's all sink with the king.

[Exit.

Seb. Let's take leave of him.

[Exit.

Gon. Now would I give a thousand furlongs of sea for an acre of barren ground; ⁵ long heath, brown furze,

³ ——— to glut him.] Shakespeare probably wrote, 'englut him, to swallow him; for which I know not that glut is ever used by him. In this signification englut, from engloutir, French, occurs frequently, as in Henry VI.

“ ——— Thou art so near the gulf

“ Thou needs must be englutted.”

And again in Timon and Othello. Yet Milton writes glutted off for swallowed, and therefore perhaps the present text may stand.

JOHNSON.

Thus in Sir A. Gorges's translation of Lucan. B. 6.

“ ——— oylie fragments scarcely burn'd,

“ Together she doth scrape and glut.”

i. e. swallow. * SPELLENS.

⁴ Brother, farewell!] All these lines have been hitherto given to Gonzalo, who has no brother in the ship. It is probable that the lines succeeding the confused noise within should be considered as spoken by no determinate characters, but should be printed thus.

¹ Sailor. Mercy on us!

We split, we split!

² Sailor. Farewell, my, &c.

³ Sailor. Brother, farewell, &c. JOHNSON.

⁵ ——— long heath, ———] This is the common name for the erica baccifera. WARBURTON.

——— long heath] The distinctions between the different sorts of erica, are either — vulgaris, teuifolia or brabantica. There is no such plant as erica baccifera. WARNER.

“ An acre of barren ground, long heath, brown furze,” &c. Sir T. Hanmer reads ling, heath, broom, furze.—Perhaps rightly, though he has been charged with tautology. I find in Harrison's Description of Britain, prefixed to our author's good friend Holinghead, p. vi. “ Brume, heath, ling brakes, whinnies, “ ling,” &c. FARMER.

Mr.

T E M P E S T.

furze, any thing : The wills above be done, but I would fain die a dry death ! [Exit.]

S C E N E II.

The enchanted island : before the cell of Prospero.

Enter Prospero and Miranda.

Mira. If by your art, my dearest father, you have Put the wild waters in this roar, allay them :
The sky, it seems, would pour down stinking pitch,
But that the sea, mounting to the welkin's cheek,
Dashes the fire-out. O, I have suffer'd
With those that I saw suffer ! a brave vessel,
Who had, no doubt, some noble creatures in her,
Dash'd all to pieces. O, the cry did knock Against my very heart ! Poor souls ! they perish'd.
Had I been any god of power, I would Have sunk the sea within the earth, or ere
It should the good ship so have swallow'd, and
The freighting souls within her.

Pro. Be collected ;
No more amazement : tell your piteous heart,
There's no harm done.

Mira. O, woe the day !

Pro. ' No harm.

I have

Mr. Tollet has sufficiently vindicated Sir Thomas Hanmer from the charge of tautology, by favouring me with specimens of three different kinds of heath which grow in his own neighbourhood. I would gladly have inserted his observations at length, but, to stay the truth, our author, like one of Cato's soldiers who was bit by a serpent, Ipse latet penitus congesto corpore mersus. STEEVENS.

Or ere, is before. Of this use, many instances are given hereafter. STEEVENS.

' Pro. No harm.] I know not whether Shakespear did not make Miranda speak thus :

O, woe the day ! no harm ?
To which Prospero properly answers :

I have done nothing but in care of thee.

Miranda,

I have done nothing but in care of thee,
(Of thee, my dear one! thee, my daughter!) who Art ignorant of what thou art, nought knowing
Of whence I am; nor that I am more better^a
Than Prospero, master of a full poor cell,^b
And thy no greater father.

Mira. More to know
Did never meddle^c with my thoughts.

Pro. 'Tis time,
I should inform thee further. Lend thy hand,
And pluck my magick garment from me.—So;
[Lays down his mantle,
Lye there my art^d.—Wipe thou thine eyes; have comfort.

The direful spectacle of the wreck, which touch'd
The very^e virtue of compassion in thee,

Miranda, when she speaks the words, O, woe the day! supposes, not that the crew had escaped, but that her father thought differently from her, and counted their destruction no harm.

JOHNSON.

* —more better.—] This ungrammatical expression is very frequent among our oldest writers. So in the History of Hebys Knight of the Swan. bl. L. no date: imprinted by William Copland. “And also the more sooner to come, without prolixity, to the true Chronicles, &c.” Again in the True Tragedies of Marius and Scilla. 1594.

“To wait a message of more better worth.”

Again, ibid.

“That hale more greater than Cassandra now.” STEEVENS.

* —full poor cell, &c. a cell in a great degree of poverty.
So in Antony and Cleopatra, act I. sc. i.—I am full sorry.
STEEVENS.

^a Did never meddle with my thoughts.] To meddle, in this instance, seems to signify to mingle. Hence the substantive medley. To meddle for to mix is used at least twenty times in the ancient Book of Hawking, &c, commonly called the Book of St. Alban's, and yet more often by Chaucer. STEEVENS.

^b Lye there my art.] Sir W. Cecil, lord Burleigh, lord high treasurer, &c. in the reign of queen Elizabeth, when he put off his gown at night, used to say, Lie there, lord treasurer. See Peck's Desiderata Curiosa. STEEVENS.

^c —virtue of compassion—] Virtue, the most efficacious part, the energetic quality; in a like sense we say, The virtue of lant is in the extract. JOHNSON.

I have

I have with such provision in mine art
 So safely order'd, * that there is no soul—
 No, not so much perdition as an hair,
 Betid to any creature in the vessel
 Which thou heard'st cry, which thou saw'st sink. Sit down ;

For thou must now know further,

Mira. You have often
 Begun to tell me what I am ; but stopp'd,
 And left me to a bootless inquisition ;
 Concluding, Stay, not yet.—

Pro. The hour's now come ;
 The very minute bids thee ope thine ear ;
 Obey, and be attentive. Canst thou remember
 A time before we came unto this cell ?
 I do not think, thou canst ; for then thou wast not † Out three years old.

Mira. Certainly, sir, I can.

Pro. By what ? by any other house, or person ?

* —that there is no soul—] Thus the old editions read, but this is apparently defective. Mr. Rowe, and after him Dr. Warburton, read that there is no soul lost, without any notice of the variation. Mr. Theobald substitutes no foil, and Mr. Pope follows him. To come so near the right, and yet to miss it, is unlucky : the author probably wrote no foil, no stain, no spot : for so Ariel tells,

Not a hair perisb'd ;

On their sustaining garments not a blemish,

But fresher than before.

And Gonzalo, The rarity of it is, that our garments being drench'd in the sea, keep notwithstanding their freshness and glosses. Of this emendation I find that the author of notes on The Tempest had a glimpse, but could not keep it. JOHNSON.

—no soul—] Such interruptions are not uncommon to Shakespeare. He sometimes begins a sentence, and before he concludes it, entirely changes the construction, because another, more forcible, occurs. As this change frequently happens in conversation, it may be suffered to pass uncensured in the language of the stage. STEVENS.

† Out three years old.] i. e. Quite three years old, three years old full-out, complete. Mr. Pope, without occasion, reads, •FULL three years old. STEVENS.

Of any thing the image tell me, that
Hath kept with thy remembrance.

Mira. 'Tis far off;
And rather like a dream, than an assurance
That my remembrance warrants: Had I not
Four or five women once, that tended me?
Pro. Thou hadst, and more, Miranda: But how is it,

That this lives in thy mind? What seest thou else
In the dark back-ward and abyssm of time?⁶
If thou remember'st aught, ere thou cam'st here;
How thou cam'st here, thou may'st.

Mira. But that I do not.

Pro. Twelve years since, Miranda, twelve years since,
Thy father was the duke of Milan, and
A prince of power.

Mira. Sir, are not you my father?

Pro. Thy mother was a piece of virtue, and
She said—thou wast my daughter; and thy father
Was duke of Milan; ⁷ thou his only heir
And princess, no worse issu'd.

Mira. O the heavens!
What foul play had we, that we came from thence?
Or blessed was't, we did?

Pro. Both, both, my girl:
By foul play, as thou say'st, were we heav'd thence;
But blessedly help hither.

⁶ ——— abyssm of time.]

This method of spelling the word, is common to other ancient writers. They took it from the French abyssme, now written abime.

So in Heywood's Brazen Age, 1613.

" And chase him from the deep abyssm below. STEEVENS.

⁷ Perhaps—and thou his only heir. JOHNSON.

The old copy reads ——— and his only heir and princess ———

Perhaps we should read, —and his only heir

A princess: —no worse issued.

Issued is descended. So in Greene's Card of Fancy, 1608.

" For I am by birth a gentleman, and issued of such parents,"

&c. STEEVENS.

Mira.

Mira. O, my heart bleeds
To think o' the 'teen that I have turn'd you to,
Which is from my remembrance! Please you, further.

Pro. My brother, and thy uncle, called Anthonio,—
I pray thee, mark me,—that a brother should
Be so perfidious!—he whom, next thyself,
Of all the world I lov'd, and to him put
The manage of my state; as, at that time,
Through all the signiories it was the first,
And Prospero the prime duke; being so reputed
In dignity, and, for the liberal arts,
Without a parallel; those being all my study,
The government I cast upon my brother,
And to my state grew stranger, being transported,
And wrapp'd in secret studies. Thy false uncle—
Dost thou attend me?

Mira. Sir, most heedfully.

Pro. Being once perfected how to grant suits,
How to deny them; whom to advance, and whom
' To trash for over-topping; new created
The creatures that were mine; I say, or chang'd 'em,
Or else new form'd 'em: having both the ' key

Of

* —teen.—] Is sorrow, grief, trouble. So in Romeo and Juliet:

“ —to my teen be it spoken.” STEEVENS.

° To trash for over-topping;] To trash, as Dr. Warburton observes, is to cut away the superfluities. This word I have met with in books containing directions for gardeners, published in the time of queen Elizabeth.

The present explanation may be countenanced by the following passage in Warner's Albions England, 1602. b. x. ch. 57.

“ Who fuffeth none by might, by wealth or blood to overtopp,

“ Himself gives all preferment, and whom listeth him, doth lop.”
Again in our author's K. Richard II.

Go thou, and like an executioner,

Cut off the heads of too-fast-growing sprays

That look too lofty in our commonwealth.

Mr. Warton's note, however, on —“ trash for his quick hunting,” in the second act of Othello, leaves my interpretation of this passage exceedingly disputable. STEEVENS.

* —both the key] Key in this place seems to signify the key of a musical instrument, by which he set Hearts to tune. JOHNSON.

This

Of officer and office, set all hearts i' the state
 To what tune pleas'd his ear; that now he was
 The ivy, which had hid my princely trunk,
 And suck'd my verdure out on't.—Thou attend'st not.

Mira. O good Sir, I do.

Pro. I pray thee, mark me.

I thus neglecting worldly ends, all dedicated
 To closeness, and the bettering of my mind
 With that, which, but by being so retir'd,
 O'er-priz'd all popular rate, in my false brother
 Awak'd an evil nature: and my trust,
 Like a good parent², did beget of him
 A falsehood, in its contrary as great
 As my trust was; which had, indeed, no limit,
 A confidence sans bound. He being thus lorded,
 Not only with what my revenue yielded,
 But what my power might else exact,—³ like one,
 Who

This doubtless is meant of a key for tuning the harpsichord, spinnet, or virginal; we call it now a tuning hammer, as it is used as well to strike down the iron pins whereon the strings are wound, as to turn them. As a key it acts like that of a watch.
Sir J. HAWKINS.

² Like a good, &c.] Alluding to the observation, "that a father above the common rate of men has commonly a son below it. Heroum filii noxae. JOHNSON.

³ ————like one,

Who having, INTO truth, by telling of it,

Made such a sinner of his memory,

To credit his own lie,——] The corrupted reading of the second line has rendered this beautiful similitude quite unintelligible. For what is [having into truth?] or what doth [it] refer to? not to [truth,] because if he told truth he could never credit a lie. And yet there is no other correlative to which [it] can belong.

I read and point it thus:

—————like one

Who having, UNTO truth, by telling OFT,

Made such a sinner of his memory,

To credit his own lie,——

i. e. by often repeating the same story, made his memory such a sinner unto truth, as to give credit to his own lie. A miserable delusion, to which story-tellers are frequently subject. The Oxford

Who having, unto truth, by telling of it,
 Made such a sinner of his memory,
 To credit his own lie,—he did believe
 He was, indeed, the duke; ⁴ out of the substitution,
 And executing the outward face of royalty,
 With all prerogative :—Hence his ambition growing,—

Dost thou hear ?

Mira. Your tale, sir, would cure deafness.

Pro. To have no screen between this part he play'd
 And him he play'd it for, he needs will be Absolute Milan : Me, poor man !—my library
 Was dukedom large enough ; of temporal royalties
 He thinks me now incapable : confederates,
⁵ So dry he was for sway, with the king of Naples
 To give him annual tribute, do him homage ;
 Subject his coronet to his crown, and bend
 The dukedom, yet unbow'd (alas, poor Milan !)
 To most ignoble stooping.

Mira. O the heavens !

Pro. Mark his condition, and the event ; then tell me,

Oxford Editor having, by this correction, been let into the sense of the passage, gives us this sense in his own words :

Who loving an untruth, and telling't oft,

Makes ————— WARBURTON. •

I agree with Dr. Warburton, that perhaps there is no correlative to which the word it can with grammatical propriety belong, and, that unto was the original reading. Lie, however, seems to have been the correlative to which the poet meant to refer, however ungrammatically. STEEVENS.

I would read :

• ————— ————— like one

Who having fin'd to truth, by telling of

Makes such a sinner of his memory too

• To credit his own lie—— MUSGRAVE.

⁴ ————— out of the substitution,] Is the old reading. The modern editors, for the sake of smoother versification, read—from substitution. STEEVENS.

⁵ So dry he was for sway,——] i. e. So thirsty. The expression, I am told, is not uncommon in the midland counties.

STEEVENS.

If

If this might be a brother.

Mira. I should fin

To think but nobly⁶ of my grandmother :
Good wombs have borne bad sons.

Pro. Now the condition.

This king of Naples, being an enemy
To me inveterate, hearkens my brother's suit ;
Which was, that he in lieu o' the premises,—
Of homage, and I know not how much tribute,—
Should presently extirpate me and mine
Out of the dukedom ; and confer fair Milan,
With all the honours, on my brother : Whereon,
A treacherous army levy'd, one mid-night
Fated to the purpose, did Anthonio open
The gates of Milan ; and, i' the dead of darkness,
The ministers for the purpose hurried thence
Me, and thy crying self.

Mira. Alack, for pity !

I, not remembering how I cried out then,⁷
Will cry it o'er again ; it is a hint,⁸
That wrings mine eyes to't.

Pro. Hear a little further,
And then I'll bring thee to the present business
Which now's upon us ; without the which, this story
Were most impertinent.

Mira. Wherefore did they not
That hour destroy us ?

Pro. Well demanded, wench ;
My tale provokes that question. Dear, they durst not ;

(So dear the love my people bore me) nor set
A mark so bloody on the business ; but
With colours fairer painted their foul ends.

⁶ To think but nobly.] But in this place signifies otherwise than. STEEVENS.

⁷ —cried out.] Perhaps we should read —cried on't. STEEVENS.

⁸ —a hint.] Hint is suggestion. So in the beginning speech of the second act. —our hint of woe.

Is common ——— STEEVENS.

In few, they hurried us aboard a bark ; •
Bore us some leagues to sea ; where they prepar'd
A rotten carcass of a boat, not rigg'd,
Nor tackle, sail, nor mast ; the very rats
Instinctively had quit it : there they hoist us
To cry to the sea that roar'd to us ; to fight
To the winds, whose pity, fighting back again,
Did us but loving wrong.

Mira. Alack ! what trouble
Was I then to you !

Pro. O ! a cherubim
Thou wast, that did preserve me ! Thou didst smile,
Infused with a fortitude from heaven,
When I have ' deck'd the sea with drops full salt ;
Under my burden groan'd ; which rais'd in me
An undergoing stomach, ' to bear up Against what should ensue.

Mira. How came we ashore ?

Pro. By Providence divine.

Some food we had, and some fresh water, that
A noble Neapolitan, Gonzalo,
Out of his charity, ' who being then appointed

' ——— deck'd the sea ———] To deck the sea, if explained, to honour, adorn, or dignify, is indeed ridiculous, but the original import of the verb deck is, to cover ; so in some parts they yet say deck the table. This sense may be borne, but perhaps the poet wrote stuck'd, which I think is still used in rustic language of drops falling upon water. Dr Warburton reads mock'd, the Oxford edition brack'd. * JOHNSON.

Verstegan, p. 61. speaking of Beer, says — “ So the overdecking “ or covering of beer came to be called berham, and afterwards “ barne ” This very well supports Dr. Johnson's explanation. The following passage in Antony and Cleopatra may countenance the verb deck in its common acceptation.

“ ——— do not please sharp fate
“ To grace it with your sorrows.”

What is this but decking it with tears ? STEEVENS.

¹ An undergoing stomach] Stomach is pride, stubborn resolution. So Horace, “ ——— gravem Pelidæ stomachum.” STEEVENS.

² ——— who being then appointed, &c] Such is the old reading. We might better read,

——— he being, &c. STEEVENS.

Master of this design, did give us; with Rich garments, linens, stuffs, and necessaries,
 Which since have steaded much : so, of his gentleness,

Knowing I lov'd my books, he furnish'd me,
 From my own library, with volumes that
 I prize above my dukedom.

Mira. Would I might
 But ever see that man!

Pro. Now, I arise :—
 Sit still, and hear the last of our sea-sorrow.
 Here in this island we arriv'd ; and here
 Have I, thy school master, made thee more profit
 Than other princes can, that have more time
 For vainer hours, and tutors not so careful.

Mira. Heavens thank you for't ! And now, I pray you, sir,
 (For still 'tis beating in my mind) your reason
 For raising this sea-storm ?

Pro. Know thus far forth.—
 By accident most strange, bountiful fortune,
 Now my dear lady³, hath mine enemies
 Brought to this shore : and by my prescience
 I find my zenith doth depend upon
 A most auspicious star ; whose influence
 If now I court not, but omit, my fortunes
 Will ever after droop.—Here cease more questions ;
 Thou art inclin'd to sleep ; ⁴ 'tis a good dulness,
 And give it way :—I know, thou canst not choose.—

[Miranda sleeps.]

Come away, servant, come : I am ready now ;
 Approach, my Ariel, come.

³ Now my dear lady, is, now my auspicious mistress. STEEVENS.

⁴ —'tis a good dulness.] Dr. Warburton rightly observes, that this sleepiness, which Prospero by his art had brought upon Miranda, and of which he knew not how soon the effect would begin, makes him question her so often whether she is attentive to his story. JOHNSON.

Enter Ariel.

Ari. All hail, great master! grave fir, hail! I come

To answer thy best pleasure; be't to fly,
To swim, to dive into the fire, to ride
On the curl'd clouds; ⁵ to thy strong bidding, task
Ariel, and all his quality.

Pro. Hast thou, spirit,

⁶ Perform'd to point the tempest that I bad thee?

Ari. To every article.

I boarded the king's ship; ⁷ now on the beak,
⁸ Now in the waste, the deck, in every cabin,
I flam'd amazement: Sometimes, I'd divide,
And burn in many places; on the top-mast,
The yards, and bolt-sprit, would I flame distinctly,
Then meet, and join: Jove's lightnings, the precursors
O' the dreadful thunder-clap, more momentary
And fight-out-running were not; The fire, and cracks
Of sulphurous roaring, the most mighty Neptune
Seem'd to besiege, and make his bold waves tremble,
Yea, his dread trident shake.

Pro. My brave spirit!

Who was so firm, so constant, that this coil
Would not infect his reason?

Ari. Not a foul

⁹ But felt a fever of the mad, and play'd

Some

⁵ On the curl'd clouds.] So in Timon—Crisp heaven. STEEVENS.

⁶ Perform'd to point—] i. e. to the minutest article.

• So in the Chances, by Beaum. and Fletcher.

“— are you all fit?

“To point, fir.” STEEVENS.

⁷ ————now on the beak,] The beak was a strong pointed body at the head of the ancient galleys; it is uted here for the forecastle, or the bolt-sprit. JOHNSON.

⁸ Now in the waste,——] The part between the quarter-deck and the forecastle. JOHNSON.

⁹ But felt a fever of the mad,——] In all the later editions this is changed to a fever of the mind, without reason or authority, nor is any notice given of an alteration. JOHNSON.

Some tricks of desperation : All, but mariners,
 Plung'd in the foaming brine, and quit the vessel,
 Then all a-fire with me : the king's son, Ferdinand,
 With hair up-staring (then like reeds, not hair)
 Was the first man that leap'd ; cried, *Hell is empty,
 And all the devils are here.*

Pro. Why, that's my spirit !
 But was not this nigh shore ?

Ari. Close by, my master.

Pro. But are they, Ariel, safe ?

Ari. Not a hair perish'd ;
 On their ' sustaining garments not a blemish,

If it be at all necessary to explain the meaning, it is this :
Not a soul but felt such a fever as madmen feel, when the frantic fit is upon them. STEEVENS.

— sustaining —] i. e. Their garments that bore them up and supported them. So K. Lear, act IV. sc. iv.

“ In our sustaining corn.”

Mr. Edwards was of opinion that we should read sea-stained garments ; for (says he) it was not the floating of their cloaths, but the magic of Prospero which preserved, as it had wrecked them. Nor was the miracle, that their garments had not been at first discoloured by the sea-water, which even that sustaining would not have prevented, unless it had been on the air, not on the water ; but, as Gonzalo says, “ that their garments “ being (as they were) drenched in the sea, held notwithstanding
 “ their freshness and gloss, being rather new-dyed than stained “ with salt-water.”

For this, and all such notes as are taken from the MSS. of the late Mr. Edwards, I am indebted to the friendship of Benjamin Way, Esq; who very obligingly procured them from the executors of that gentleman, with leave for their publication. Such of them as are omitted in this edition had been sometimes forestalled by the remarks of others, and sometimes by my own. The reader, however, might have been justly offended, had any other reasons prevented me from communicating the unpublished sentiments of that sprightly critick and most amiable man, as entire as I received them. STEEVENS.

This note of Mr. Edwards, with which I suppose no reader is satisfied, shews with how much greater ease critical emendations are destroyed than made, and how willingly every man would be changing the text, if his imagination would furnish alterations.
 JOHNSON.

But

But fresher than before: and, as thou bad'st me,
 In troops I have dispers'd them 'bout the isle:
 The king's son have I landed by himself;
 Whom I left cooling of the air with sighs,
 In an odd angle of the isle, and sitting,
 His arms in this sad knot.

Pro. Of the king's ship,
 The mariners, say how thou hast dispos'd,
 And all the rest o' the fleet?

Ar. Safely in harbour
 Is the king's ship; in the deep nook, where once
 Thou call'dst me up at midnight to fetch dew
 From the still-vex'd Bermoothes, there she's hid:
 The

² From the still-vex'd Bermoothes.—] Theobald says Bermoothes is printed by mistake for Bermudas. No. That was the name by which the islands then went, as we may see by the voyages of that time; and by our author's contemporary poets. Fletcher, in his Women Pleas'd, says, The devil should think of purchasing that egg-shell to victual out a witch for the Bermoothes. Smith, in his account of these islands, p. 172. says, that the Bermudas were so fearful to the world, that many called them 'The Isle of Devils.—P. 174.—to all seamen no less terrible than an enchanted den of furies. And no wonder, for the clime was extremely subject to storms and hurricanes; and the islands were surrounded with scattered rocks lying shallowly hid under the surface of the water. WARBURTON.

Again in Decker's If this be not a good Play, the Devil is in it, 1612.

“Sir, if you have made me tell a lye, they'll send me on a voyage to the island of Hogs and Devils, the Bermudas.”

STEEVENS.

The opinion that Bermudas was haunted with evil spirits continued to late as the civil wars. In a little piece of sir John Berkinhead's, intitled, Two Centuries of Paul's Church-yard, una cum indice expurgatorio, &c. 12^o, in page 62, under the title of Cases of Conscience, is this.

34. “Whether Bermudas and the parliament-house lie under one planet, seeing both are haunted with devils.” PERCY.

Bermudas was on this account the cant name for some privileged place, in which the cheats and riotous bullies of Shakespeare's time assembled. So in The Devil is an Ass, by Ben. Jonson, “— keeps he still your quarter

“In the Bermudas?”

The mariners all under hatches (flow'd ;
 Whom, with a charm join'd to their suffer'd labour,
 I have left asleep : and for the rest o' the fleet,
 Which I dispers'd, they all have met again ;
 And are upon ' the Mediterranean flote,
 Bound sadly home for Naples ;
 Supposing that they saw the king's ship wreck'd,
 And his great person perish.

Pro. Ariel, thy charge
 Exactly is perform'd ; but there's more work :
 * What is the time o' the day ?

Ari. Past the mid season.

Pro. At least two glasses : The time 'twixt six and
 now,
 Must by us both be spent most precious.

Ari. Is there more toil ? Since thou dost give me pains,
 Let me remember thee what thou hast promis'd,
 Which is not yet perform'd me.

Pro. How now ? moody ?
 What is't thou can'st demand ?

Ari. My liberty.

Pro. Before the time be out ? no more.

Ari. I pray thee :
 Remember, I have done thee worthy service ;
 Told thee no lies, made thee no mistakings, serv'd

Again in one of his Epistles,

" Have their Bermudas, and their straights i'th' Strand."
 Again in The Devil is an Ass,

" ——— I gave my word

" For one that's run away to the Bermudas." STEEVENS.

* ——— the Mediterranean flote.] Flote is wave. Flot. Fr.

STEEVENS.

* What is the time o' the day?] This passage needs not be disturbed, it being common to ask a question, which the next moment enables us to answer ; he that thinks it faulty may easily adjust it thus :

Pro. What is the time o' the day? Past the mid season?

Ari. At least two glasses.

Pro. The time 'twixt six and now ——— JOHNSON.

Without

Without or grudge, or grumblings : thou didst promise

To bate me a full year.

Pro. 'Dost thou forget
From what a torment I did free thee?

Ari. No.

Pro. Thou dost ; and think'st it much, to tread the ooze

'Dost thou forget] That the character and conduct of Prospero may be understood, something must be known of the system of enchantment, which supplied all the marvellous found in the romances of the middle ages. This system seems to be founded on the opinion that the fallen spirits, having different degrees of guilt, had different habitations allotted them at their expulsion, some being confined in hell, some (as Hooker, who delivers the opinion of our poet's age, expresses it) dispersed in air, some on earth, some in water, others in caves, dens, or minerals under the earth. Of these, some were more malignant and mischievous than others. The earthy spirits seem to have been thought the most depraved, and the aerial the least vitiated. Thus Prospero observes of Ariel :

— Thou wast a spirit too delicate

To act her earthy and abhorr'd commands.

Over these spirits a power might be obtained by certain rites performed or charms learned. This power was called The Black Art, or Knowledge of Enchantment. The enchanter being (as king James observes in his Demonology) one who commands the devil, whereas the witch serves him. Those who thought best of this art, the existence of which was, I am afraid, believed very seriously, held, that certain sounds and characters had a physical power over spirits, and compelled their agency ; others, who condemned the practice, which in reality was surely never practised, were of opinion, with more reason, that the power of charms arose only from compact, and was no more than the spirits voluntarily allowed them for the seduction of man. The art was held by all, though not equally criminal, yet unlawful, and therefore Calaubon, speaking of one who had commerce with spirits, blames him, though he imagines him one of the best kind who dealt with them by way of command. Thus Prospero repents of his art in the lost scene. The spirits were always considered as in some measure enslaved to the enchanter, at least for a time, and as serving with unwillingness, therefore Ariel so often begs for liberty ; and Caliban observes, that the spirits serve Prospero with no good will, but bate him rootedly.—Of these trifles enough.

JOHNSON.

Of the salt deep;

⁶ To run upon the sharp wind of the north;
To do me business in the veins o' the earth,
When it is bak'd with frost.

Ari. I do not, fir.

Pro. Thou ly'st, malignant thing! Hast thou forgot
The foul witch Sycorax, who, with age, and envy,
Was grown into a hoop? hast thou forgot her?

Ari. No, fir.

Pro. Thou hast: Where was she born? speak; tell me.

Ari. Sir, in Argier⁷.

Pro. Oh, was she so? I must,
Once in a month, recount what thou hast been,
Which thou forgett'st. This damn'd witch, Sycorax,
For mischiefs manifold, and forceries terrible
To enter human hearing, from Argier,
Thou know'st, was banish'd; for one thing she did,
They would not take her life: Is not this true?

Ari. Ay, fir.

Pro. This blue ey'd hag was hither brought with child,
And here was left by the sailors: Thou, my slave,
As thou report'st thyself, wast then her servant:
And, for thou wast a spirit too delicate
To act her earthy and abhorr'd commands,
Refusing her grand hests, she did confine thee,
By help of her more potent ministers,
And in her most unmitigable rage,
Into a cloven pine; within which rift
Imprison'd, thou didst painfully remain

⁶ To run upon the sharp wind of the north;] Sir W. Davenant and Dryden, in their alteration of this play, have made a very wanton change in the line, and read,

To run against, &c. STEEVENS.

⁷ ——— in Argier.] Argier is the ancient English name for Algiers. See a pamphlet entitled, "A true Relation of the Tra-vailles, &c. of William Davies, barber-surgeon, &c." 1614. In this is a chapter "on the description, &c. of Argier." STEEVENS.

A dozen years ; within which space she died,
 And left thee there ; where thou didst vent thy groans,
 As fast as mill-wheels strike : Then was this island,
 (Save for the son that she did litter here,
 A freckled whelp, hag-born) not honour'd with
 A human shape.

Ari. Yes ; Caliban her son.

Pro. Dull thing, I say so ; he, that Caliban,
 Whom now I keep in service. Thou best know'st
 What torment I did find thee in : thy groans
 Did make wolves howl, and penetrate the breasts
 Of ever-angry bears ; it was a torment
 To lay upon the damn'd, which Sycorax
 Could not again undo ; it was mine art,
 When I arriv'd, and heard thee, that made gape
 The pine, and let thee out.

Ari. I thank thee, master.

Pro. If thou more murmur'st, I will rend an oak,
 And peg thee in his knotty entrails, till
 Thou hast howl'd away twelve winters.

Ari. Pardon, master :

I will be correspondent to command,
 And do my spiriting gently.

Pro. Do so ; and after two days
 I will discharge thee.

Ari. That's my noble master !

What shall I do ? say what ? what shall I do ?

Pro. Go make thyself like to a nymph o' the sea* :
 Be subject to no sight but thine and mine ; invisible
 To every eye-ball else. Go, take this shape,
 And hither come in it : go, hence, with diligence.

[Exit Ariel.]

Awake, dear heart, awake ! thou hast slept well ;
 Awake !.

* — a nymph o' the sea.] There does not appear to be sufficient cause why Ariel should assume this new shape, as he was to be invisible to all eyes but those of Prospero. STEVENS.

Mira. ' The strangeness of your story put Heaviness in me.

Pro. Shake it off : Come on ;
We'll visit Caliban, my slave, who never Yields us kind answer.

Mira. 'Tis a villain, sir,
I do not love to look on.

Pro. But, as 'tis,
We cannot miss him : he does make our fire,
Fetch in our wood ; and serves in offices
That profit us. What ho ! slave ! Caliban !
Thou earth, thou ! speak.

Cal. [Within.] There's wood enough within.

Pro. Come forth, I say ; there's other business for thee :
Come, thou tortoise ! when ?

Enter Ariel like a water-nymph.

Fine apparition ! My quaint Ariel,
Hark in thine ear.

Ari. My lord, it shall be done. [Exit.]

Pro. Thou poisonous slave, got by the devil himself
Upon thy wicked dam, come forth !

' The strangeness —] Why should a wonderful story produce sleep ? I believe experience will prove, that any violent agitation of the mind easily subsides in slumber, especially when, as in Prospero's relation, the last images are pleasing. JOHNSON.

The poet seems to have been apprehensive that the audience, as well as Miranda, would sleep over this long but necessary tale, and therefore strives to break it. First, by making Prospero divest himself of his magic robe and wand ; then by waking her attention no less than six times by verbal interruption ; then by varying the action when he rises and bids her continue sitting ; and lastly, by carrying on the business of the fable while Miranda sleeps, by which she is continued on the stage till the poet has occasion for her again. WARNER,

Enter

Enter Caliban.

' Cal. As wicked dew, as e'er my mother brush'd
With raven's feather from unwholsome fen,

' Cal. As wicked dew, as e'er my mother brush'd
With raven's feather from unwholsome fen,

' Drop on you both !] Shakespeare hath very artificially given the air of the antique to the language of Caliban, in order to heighten the grotesque of his character. As here he uses wicked for unwholsome. So sir John Maundevill, in his travels, p. 334. edit. Lond. 1725. — at alle tymes brennethe a vesselle of cristalle fulle of barne for to zeven gode smelle and odour to the emperour, and to voyden away alle WYKKEDE eyres and corrupciouns. It was a tradition, it seems, that lord Falkland, lord C. J. Vaughan, and Mr. Selden concurred in observing, that Shakespeare had not only found out a new character in his Caliban, but had also devised and adapted a new manner of language for that character. What they meant by it, without doubt, was, that Shakespeare gave his language a certain grotesque air of the savage and antique ; which it certainly has. But Dr. Bentley took this, of a new language, literally ; for speaking of a phrase in Milton, which he supposed altogether absurd and unmeaning, he says, Satan had not the privilege as Caliban in Shakespeare, to use new phrase and diction unknown to all others — and again — to practise distances is still a Caliban stile. Note on Milton's Paradise Lost, l. iv. v. 945. But I know of no such Caliban stile in Shakespeare, that hath new phrase and diction unknown to all others.

WARBURTON.

Whence these critics derived the notion of a new language appropriated to Caliban, I cannot find : they certainly mistook brutality of sentiment for uncouthness of words. Caliban had learned to speak of Prospero and his daughter, he had no names for the sun and moon before their arrival, and could not have invented a language of his own without more understanding than Shakespeare has thought it proper to bestow upon him. His diction is indeed somewhat clouded by the gloominess of his temper, and the malignity of his purposes ; but let any other being entertain the same thoughts, and he will find them easily issue in the same expressions. JOHNSON.

As wicked dew,—] Wicked ; having baneful qualities. So Spenser says, wicked weed ; so, in opposition, we say herbs or medicines have virtues. Bacon mentions virtuous bezoar, and Dryden virtuous herbs. JOHNSON.

So in the Booke of Haukyng, &c. bl. l. no date. " If a wycked " fellon be swollen in such maner that a man may hele it, the " hauke shall not dye." STEEVENS.

• Drop

Drop on you, both ! a south-west blow on ye,
And blister you all o'er !

Pro. For this, be sure, to-night thou shalt have cramps,

Side-stitches that shall pen thy breath up ; urchins ²
Shall, ³ for that vast of night that they may work,
All exercise on thee : thou shalt be pinch'd

² — urchins,] i. e. hedgehogs.

Urchins are enumerated by Reginald Scott among other terrific beings.

“ — to fold thyself up like an urchin.”

Chapman's May Day, 1611.

Again in Selimus Emperor of the Turks, 1638.

“ What are the urchins crept out of their dens

“ Under the conduct of this porcupine !”

Urchins are perhaps here put for fairies. Milton in his Masque speaks of “ urchin blasts,” and we still call any little dwarfish child, an urchin. The word occurs again in the next act. The urchinus, or sea hedge-hog, is still called the urchin. STEEVENS.

³ — for that vast of night that they may work,] The vast of night means the night which is naturally empty and deserted, without action ; or when all things lying in sleep and silence, makes the world appear one great uninhabited waste. So in Hamlet ;

“ In the dead waste and middle of the night.”

It has a meaning like that of nocturnal.

Perhaps, however, it may be used in a signification somewhat different, in Pericles Prince of Tyre, 1607.

“ Thou God of this great waste, rebuke the surges.”

Vastum is likewise the ancient law term for waste uncultivated land ; and, with this meaning, vast is used by Chapman in his Shadow of Night, 1594.

“ — When unlightsome, vast and indigest

“ The formelefs matter of this world did lye.”

It should be remembered, that, in the pneumatology of former ages, these particulars were settled with the most minute exactness, and the different kinds of visionary beings had different allotments of time suitable to the variety or consequence of their employments. During these spaces, they were at liberty to act, but were always obliged to leave off at a certain hour, that they might not interfere in that portion of night which belong'd to others. Among these we may suppose urchins to have had a part subjected to their dominion. To this limitation of time Shakespeare alludes again in K. Lear. He begins at curfew, and walks till the second cock. STEEVENS.

As

As thick as honey-combs, each pinch more stinging
Than bees that made 'em.

Cal. I must eat my dinner.

This island's mine, by Sycorax my mother,
Which thou tak'st from me. When thou camest first,
Thou stroak'dst me, and mad'st much of me; would'st give me

Water with berries in't; and teach me how
To name the bigger light, and how the less,
That burn by day and night: and then I lov'd thee,
And shew'd thee all the qualities o' the isle,
The fresh springs, brine-pits, barren place, and fertile;
Curs'd be I, that I did so!—All the charms
Of Sycorax, toads, beetles, bats, light on you!
For I am all the subjects that you have,
Who first was mine own king: and here you fly me
In this hard rock, whiles you do keep from me
The rest of the island.

Pro. Thou most lying slave,
Whom stripes may move, not kindness: I have us'd
thee,

Filth as thou art, with human care; and lodg'd thee
In mine own cell, till thou didst seek to violate
The honour of my child.

Cal. Oh ho, oh ho!—wou'd it had been done!
Thou didst prevent me; I had peopled else
This isle with Calibans.

Pro. ⁴Abhorred slave;

⁴ Abhorred slave;] This speech, which the old copy gives to Miranda, is very judiciously bestowed by Mr. Theobald on Prospero. JOHNSON.

The modern editions take this speech from Miranda, and give it to Prospero; though there is nothing in it but what she may speak with the greatest propriety; especially as it accounts for her being enough in the way and power of Caliban, to enable him to make the attempt complained of. The poet himself shews he intended Miranda should be his tutorefs, when he makes Caliban say, "I've seen thee in her, my mistress shewed me thee "and thy dog, and thy bush;" to Stephano, who had just assured the monster he was the man in the moon. HOLT.

Which

Which any print of goodness will not take,
 Being capable of all ill ! I pittied thee,
 Took pains to make thee speak, taught thee each hour
 One thing or other : ' when thou didst not, savage,
 Know thy own meaning, but wouldst gabble like
 A thing more brutish, I endow'd thy purposes

5 — *When thou DIDST not, savage,
 Know thy own meaning, but wouldst gabble like
 A thing most brutish, I endow'd thy purposes*

With words to make them known.] The benefit which Prospero here upbraids Caliban with having bestowed, was teaching him language. He shews the greatness of this benefit by marking the inconvenience Caliban lay under for want of it. What was the inconvenience ? This, that he did not know his own meaning. But sure a brute, to which he is compared, doth know its own meaning, that is, knows what it would be at. This, indeed, it cannot do, it cannot show its meaning to others. And this certainly is what Prospero would say.

— When thou COULDEST not, savage,

SHOW thy own meaning, —

The following words make it evident,

— but wouldst gabble like

A thing most brutish, —

And when once [show] was corrupted to [know] the transcribers would of course change [wouldst] into [didst] to make it agree with the other false reading. There is indeed a sense, in which Know thy own meaning, may be well applied to a brute. For it may signify the not having any reflex knowledge of the operations of its own mind, which, it would seem, a brute hath not. Though this, I say, may be applied to a brute, and consequently to Caliban, and though to remedy this brutality be a nobler benefit than even the teaching language ; yet such a sense would be impertinent and absurd in this place, where only the benefit of language is talked of by an exact and learned speaker. Besides, Prospero expressly says, that Caliban had purposes ; which, in other words, is, that he did know his own meaning.

WARBURTON.

— When thou didst not, savage,

Know thy own meaning, —] By this expression, however defective, the poet seems to have meant — When thou didst utter sounds, to which thou hadst no determinate meaning : but the following expression of Mr. Addison, in his 389th Spectator, concerning the Hottentots, may prove the best comment on this passage, “ — having no language among them but a confused gabble, which is neither well understood by themselves, or others.”

STEEVENS.

With

With words that made them known : ⁶ But thy vild race

Though thou didst learn, had that in't which good natures

Could not abide to be with ; therefore wast thou
Deservedly confin'd into this rock,
Who hadst deserv'd more than a prison.

Cal. You taught me language ; and my profit on't
Is, I know how to curse : ⁷ The red plague rid you,
For learning me your language !

Pro. Hag-seed, hence !

Fetch us in fewel ; and be quick, thou we'rt best,
To answer other businefs. Shrug'st thou, malice ?
If thou neglect'st, or dost unwillingly
What I command, I'll rack thee with old cramps ;
Fill all thy bones with aches ; make thee roar,
That beasts shall tremble at thy din.

Cal. No, 'pray thee !—

I must obey : his art is of such power, [Aside.
It would controul my dam's god Setebos⁸,
And make a vassal of him.

Pro. So, slave ; hence !

[Exit Caliban.

Enter

* — [But thy wild race] Race, in this place, seems to signify original disposition, inborn qualities. In this sense we still say—
The race of wine ; thus in Massinger's New Way to pay old Debts.

“ There came, not six days since, from Hull, a pipe

“ Of rich Canary.—

“ Is it of the right race ? ”

and sir W. Temple has somewhere applied it to works of literature. STEEVENS.

• ⁷ — [the red plague]— I suppose from the redness of the body, universally inflamed. JOHNSON.

The erysipelas was anciently called the red plague. STEEVENS.

• ⁸ — “ My dam's god, Setebos.”

A gentleman of great merit, Mr. Warner, has observed on the authority of John Barbot, that “ the Patagons are reported to “ dread a great horned devil, called Setebos.”—It may be asked however, how Shakespeare knew any thing of this, as Barbot was a voyager of the present century ?—Perhaps he had read Eden's History of Travayle, 1577, who tells us, p. 434. that “ the Enter Ferdinand at the remotest part of the stage, and Ariel invisible, playing and singing.

Ariel's Song.

Come unto these yellow sands,

And then take hands :

° Court'sied when you have, and kiss'd,

(The wild waves whist)

Foot it feathery here and there ;

And, sweet sprites, the burden bear.

Hark, hark !

Bur. Bowgh, wowgh. [disperfedly.

The watch-dogs bark :

Bur. Bowgh, wowgh. [disperfedly.

Hark, hark ! I hear

The strain of strutting chanticleer

Cry, Cock-a-doodle-doo.

Fer. Where should this musick be ? i' the air, or the earth ?

“ the giantes, when they found themselves fettered, roared like bulls, and cryed upon Setebos to help them.”—The metathefis in Caliban from Canibal is evident. FARMER.

We learn from Magellan's voyage, that Setebos was the supreme god of the Patagons, and Cheleule was an inferior one. TOLLET.

° Court'sied when you have, and kiss'd,] As was anciently done at the beginning of some dances.

The wild waves whist ;

i. e. the wild waves being silent (or whist) as in Spenser's Fairy Queen, b. vii. c. 7. l. 59.

So was the Titaness put down, and whist.

And Milton seems to have had our author in his eye. See stanza 5. of his Hymn on the Nativity.

The winds with wonder whist,

Smoothly the waters kiss'd.

So again, both lord Surrey and Phaer, in their translations of the second book of Virgil :

———Canticæ omnes.

“ They whistled all.”

and Lyly in his Maid's Metamorphosis, 1600.

“ But every thing is quiet, whist, and still.” STEEVENS.

It

It sounds no more:—and sure, it waits upon
 Some god of the island. Sitting on a bark,
 Weeping again the king my father's wreck,
 This music crept by me upon the waters;
 Allaying both their fury, and my passion,
 With its sweet air: thence I have follow'd it;
 Or it hath drawn me rather:—But 'tis gone.
 No, it begins again.

Ariel's Song.

*Full fathom five thy father lies,
 Of his bones are coral made;
 Those are pearls, that were his eyes:
 Nothing of him that doth fade,*

But

* This music crept by me upon the waters;]
 So in Milton's Masque.

“——a soft and solemn breathing sound

“Rose like a steam of rich distill'd perfumes,

“And stole upon the air.” STEEVENS.

* Full fathom five thy father lies, &c.] Gildon, who has pretended to criticise our author, would give this up as an insufferable and senseless piece of trifling. And I believe this is the general opinion concerning it. But a very unjust one. Let us consider the business Ariel is here upon, and his manner of executing it. The commission Prospero had intrusted to him, in a whisper, was plainly this; to conduct Ferdinand to the sight of Miranda, and to dispose him to the quick sentiments of love, while he, on the other hand, prepared his daughter for the same impressions. Ariel sets about his business by acquainting Ferdinand, in an extraordinary manner, with the afflictive news of his father's death. A very odd apparatus, one would think, for a love-fit. And yet, as odd as it appears, the poet has shewn in it the finest conduct for carrying on his plot. Prospero had said

I find my zenith doth depend upon

A most auspicious star; whose influence

If now I court not, but omit, my fortunes

Will ever after droop.——

In consequence of this his prescience, he takes advantage of every favourable circumstance that the occasion offers. The principal affair is the marriage of his daughter with young Ferdinand. But to secure this point, it was necessary they should be contracted before the affair came to Alonso the father's knowledge. For Prospero was ignorant how this storm and shipwreck, caused by

*But doth suffer a sea-change³,
 Into something rich and strange.
 Sea-nymphs hourly ring his knell.
 Hark, now I hear them,—ding-dong, bell.
 [Burden, ding dong.]*

Fer. The ditty does remember my drown'd father:—
 This is no mortal business, nor no sound
⁴ That the earth owes:—I hear it now above me.

him, would work upon Alonso's temper. It might either soften him, or increase his aversion for Prospero as the author. On the other hand, to engage Ferdinand, without the consent of his father, was difficult. For, not to speak of his quality, where such engagements are not made without the consent of the sovereign, Ferdinand is represented (to shew it a match worth the seeking) of a most pious temper and disposition, which would prevent his contracting himself without his father's knowledge. The poet therefore, with the utmost address, has made Ariel persuade him of his father's death to remove this remora.

WARBURTON.

I know not whether Dr. Warburton has very successfully defended these songs from Gildon's accusation. Ariel's lays, however seasonable and efficacious, must be allowed to be of no supernatural dignity or elegance, they express nothing great, nor reveal any thing above mortal discovery.

The reason for which Ariel is introduced thus trifling is, that he and his companions are evidently of the fairy kind, an order of beings to which tradition has always ascribed a sort of diminutive agency, powerful but ludicrous, a humorous and frolick controlment of nature, well expressed by the songs of Ariel.

JOHNSON.

³ But doth suffer a sea-change.]

“ And underwent a quick immortal change.”

Milton's Masque.

STEEVENS.

⁴ That the earth owes:—] To owe, in this place, as well as many others, signifies to own. So in Orbello: “

“ ——— that sweet sleep,

“ Which thou ow'st yesterday.”

Again in the Tempest.

“ ——— thou dost here usurp

“ The name thou ow'st not.”

To use the word in this sense is not peculiar to Shakespeare. I meet with it in B. and Fletcher's Beggars Bush:

“ If now the beard be such, what is the prince,

“ That owes the beard?” STEEVENS.

Pro.

Pro. The fringed curtains⁵ of thine eye advance,
And say, what thou seest yond⁶.

Mira. What is't? a spirit?
Lord, how it looks about! Believe me, fir,
It carries a brave form:—But 'tis a spirit.

Pro. No, wench; it eats, and sleeps, and hath such senses

As we have, such: This gallant, which thou seest,
Was in the wreck; and, but he's something stain'd
With grief, that's beauty's canker, thou might'st call him

A goodly person: he hath lost his fellows,
And strays about to find them.

Mira. I might call him
A thing divine; for nothing natural
I ever saw so noble.

Pro. It goes on, I see; [Aside.
As my soul prompts it:—Spirit, fine spirit, I'll free
thee
Within two days for this.

Fer. ⁶Most sure, the goddess
On whom these airs attend!—Vouchsafe, my prayer
May

⁵ The fringed curtains, &c.]
The same expression occurs in Pericles Prince of Tyre, 1609. .
“ ———her eyelids

“ Begin to part their fringes of bright gold.” STEEVENS.

⁶ Most sure, &c.] It seems, that Shakespeare, in The Tempest, hath been suspected of translating some expressions of Virgil; witness the O Dea certe. I presume we are here directed to the passage, where Ferdinand says of Miranda, after hearing the songs of Ariel:—

*Most sure, the goddess
On whom these airs attend! ———*

And so very small Latin is sufficient for this formidable translation, that if it be thought any honour to our poet, I am loth to deprive him of it; but his honour is not built on such a sandy foundation.
Let us turn to^a a real translator, and examine whether the idea might not be fully comprehended by an English reader, supposing it necessarily borrowed from Virgil. Hexameters in our own language are almost forgotten; we will quote therefore this time from Stanyhurst:

May know, if you remain upon this island ;
 And that you will some good instruction give,
 How I may bear me here : My prime request,
 Which I do last pronounce, is, o you wonder !
 If you be maid, or no ?

Mira. No wonder, fir ;

But, ' certainly a maid.

Fer.

" O to thee, fayre virgin, what terme may rightly be fitt'd ?

" Thy tongue, thy visage no mortal frayltie resembleth.

" — No doubt, a goddesse !" Edit. 1583. FARMER.

⁷ ——— certainly, a maid.] Nothing could be more prettily imagined to illustrate the singularity of her character, than this pleasant mistake. She had been bred up in the rough and plain-dealing documents of moral philosophy, which teaches us the knowledge of ourselves ; and was an utter stranger to the flattery invented by vicious and designing men to corrupt the other sex. So that it could not enter into her imagination, that complaisance, and a desire of appearing amiable, qualities of humanity which she had been instructed, in her moral lessons, to cultivate, could ever degenerate into such excess, as that any one should be willing to have his fellow-creature believe that he thought her a goddess, or an immortal. WARBURTON.

Dr. Warburton has here found a beauty, which I think the author never intended. Ferdinand asks her not whether she was a created being, a question which, if he meant it, he has ill expressed, but whether she was unmarried ; for after the dialogue which Prospero's interruption produces, he goes on pursuing his former question.

O, if a virgin,

I'll make you queen of Naples. JOHNSON.

A passage in Lilly's Gallathea seems to countenance the present text, " The question among men is common, are you a maide ?" — yet I cannot but think, that Dr. Warburton reads very rightly, " If you be made, or no." When we meet with an harsh expression in Shakspeare, we are usually to look for a play upon words. Fletcher closely imitates the Tempest in his Sea Voyage : and he introduces Albert in the same manner to the ladies of his Desert Island.

" Be not offended, goddesses, that I fall

" Thus prostrate," &c.

Shakspeare himself had certainly read, and had probably now in his mind, a passage in the third book of the Fairy Queen, between Timias and Belphebe,

" Angel

Fer. My language ! heavens !—
I am the best of them that speak this speech,
Were I but where 'tis spoken.

Pro. How ! the best ?
What wert thou, if the king of Naples heard thee ?

Fer. A single thing, as I am now, that wonders
To hear thee speak of Naples : He does hear me ;
And, that he does, I weep : myself am Naples ;
Who with mine eyes, ne'er since at ebb, beheld
The king my father wreck'd.

Mina. Alack, for mercy !

Fer. Yes, faith, and all his lords ; the duke of Milan,
* And his brave son, being twain.

Pro. The duke of Milan,
And his more braver daughter, could ' controul thee,
If now 'twere fit to do't :—At the first fight [Aside to Ariel.

They have chang'd eyes :—Delicate Ariel,
I'll set thee free for this.—A word, good fir ;
I fear, you have done yourself some wrong' : a word—

Mina. Why speaks my father so ungently ? This Is the third man that I e'er saw ; the first,
That e'er I figh'd for : pity move my father
To be inclin'd my way !

“ Angel or goddess ! do I call thee right ?”

“ There—at the blushing, said, ah ! gentle squire,

“ Nor goddess ; I, nor angel, but the maid

“ And daughter of a woody nymph,” &c. FARMER.

* And his brave son, being twain.] This is a slight forgetfulness. Nobody was left in the wreck, yet we find no such character as the son of the duke of Milan. THEOBALD.

° ———[controul thee.] Confute thee, unanswerably contradict thee. JOHNSON.

° I fear you have done yourself some wrong :—]

J. C. I fear that, in asserting yourself to be king of Naples, you have uttered a falsehood, which is below your character, and consequently injurious to your honour. So in the Merry Wives of Windsor—“ This is not well, master Ford, this wrongs you ”

STEEVENS.

Fer. O, if a virgin,
And your affection not gone forth, I'll make you
The queen of Naples.

Pro. Soft, fir; one word more.—
They are both in either's powers: but this swift business

I must uneasy make, lest too light winning [Aside,
Make the prize light.—One word more; I charge
thee,

That thou attend me: thou dost here usurp
The name thou ow'st not; and hast put thyself
Upon this island, as a spy, to win it
From me, the lord on't.

Fer. No, as I am a man.

Mira. There's nothing ill can dwell in such a temple:

If the ill spirit have so fair an house,
Good things will strive to dwell with't.

Pro. [To Ferd.] Follow me.—
Speak not you for him; he's a traitor.—Come,
I'll manacle thy neck and feet together:
Sea-water shalt thou drink, thy food shall be
The fresh-brook muscles, wither'd roots, and husks
Wherein the acorn cradled: Follow.

Fer. No;
I will resist such entertainment, till
Mine enemy has more power. [He draws,

Mira. O dear father,
Make not too rash a trial of him, for
He's gentle, and not fearful.

Pro. What, I say,
My foot my tutor?—Put thy sword up, traitor;

² He's gentle, and not fearful.] Fearful signifies both terrible and timorous. In this place it may mean timorous. She tells her father, that as he is gentle, rough usage is unnecessary, and as he is brave, it may be dangerous.

Fearful, however, may signify formidable, as in K. Hen. IV.

“A mighty and a fearful head they are;”
and then the meaning of the passage is obvious. STEVENS.
Who

Who mak'st a shew, but dar'st not strike, thy conscience

Is so possess'd with guilt : ' come from thy ward ;
For I can here disarm thee with this stick,
And make thy weapon drop.

Mira. Beseech you, father !

Pro. Hence ; hang not on my garments.

Mira. Sir, have pity ;

I'll be his surety.

Pro. Silence ; one word more Shall make me chide thee, if not hate thee. What,
An advocate for an impostor ? hush !
Thou think'st, there are no more such shapes as he,
Having seen but him and Caliban ; Foolish wench !
To the most of men this is a Caliban,
And they to him are angels.

Mira. My affections
Are then most humble ; I have no ambition
To see a goodlier man.

Pro. Come on ; obey : [To Ferdinand.]

* Thy nerves are in their infancy again,
And have no vigour in them.

Fer. So they are :
My spirits, as in a dream, are all bound up.
My father's loss, the weakness which I feel,
The wreck of all my friends, or this man's threats,
To whom I am subdu'd, are but light to me,
Might I but through my prison once a day
Behold this maid : all corners else o' the earth
Let liberty make use of ; space enough
* Have I, in such a prison.

Pro. It works :——Come on.

* —[come from thy ward ;] Desist from any hope of awing me by that posture of defence. JOHNSON.

* Thy nerves are in their infancy again,] So Milton, in his Messique at Ludlow-Castle.

" Thy nerves are all bound up in alabaster." STEEVENS.

[To Ariel.] Thou hast done well, fine Ariel!—
Follow me.

Hark, what thou else shalt do me.

Mira. Be of comfort;
My father's of a better nature, fir,
Than he appears by speech; this is unwonted,
Which now came from him.

Pro. Thou shalt be 'as free
As mountain winds: but then exactly do
All points of my command.

Ari. To the syllable.

Pro. Come, follow: Speak not for him. [Exeunt.]

A C T II. S C E N E I.

Another part of the island.

Enter Alonso, Sebastian, Anthonio, Gonzalo, Adrian, Francisco, and others.

Gonz. Beseech you, fir, be merry: you have cause
(So have we all) of joy; for our escape
Is much beyond our loss: ⁵ Our hint of woe
Is common; every day, some sailor's wife,
The master of some merchant, and the merchant,
Have just our theme of woe: but for the miracle,
I mean our preservation, few in millions
Can speak like us: then wisely, good fir, weigh
Our sorrow with our comfort.

Alon. ⁶ Pr'ythee, peace.

Seb.

⁵ —our hint of woe] Hint is that which recalls to the memory. The cause that fills our minds with grief is common. Dr. Warburton reads hint of woe. JOHNSON.

⁶ Alon. Pr'ythee, peace.] All that follows from hence to this speech of the king's,

*You cram these words into my ears against
The stomach of my sense,*

seems

Seb. He receives comfort like cold porridge.

Ant. ' The visitor will not give him o'er so.

Seb. Look, he's winding up the watch of his wit ;
by and by it will strike.

Gon. Sir,——

Seb. One :—— Tell.

Gon. When every grief is entertain'd, that's offer'd,
Comes to the entertainer——

Seb. A dollar^s.

Gon. Dolour comes to him, indeed ; you have spoken truer than you purpos'd.

Seb. You have taken it wiselier than I meant you should.

Gon. Therefore, my lord,——

Ant. Fic, what a spend-thrift is he of his tongue !

seems to Mr. Pope to have been an interpolation by the players. For my part, though I allow the matter of the dialogue to be very poor, I cannot be of opinion that it is interpolated. For should we take out this intermediate part, what would become of these words of the king,

——— Would I had never Married my daughter there !

What daughter ? and where married ? For it is in this intermediate part of the scene only that we are told the king had a daughter named Claribel, whom he had married into Tunis. 'Tis true, in a subsequent scene betwixt Anthonio and Sebastian, we again hear her and Tunis mentioned ; but in such a manner, that it would be obscure and unintelligible without this previous information. THEOBALD.

' The visitor——] Why Dr. Warburton should change visitor to wiser for adviser, I cannot discover. Gonzalo gives not only advice, but comfort, and is therefore properly called The Visitor, like others who visit the sick or distressed to give them consolation. In some of the Protestant churches there is a kind of officers termed consolators for the sick. JOHNSON.

" A Dollar.

Gon. Dolour comes to him indeed ;]

The same quibble occurs in the tragedy of Hoffman, 1637.

" And his reward be thirteen hundred dollars,

" For he hath driven dolour from our heart."

STEEVENS.

Alon.

Alon. I pr'ythee, spare.

Gon. Well, I have done: But yet——

Seb. He will be talking.

Ant. Which of them, he, or Adrian, for a good wager, first begins to crow?

Seb. The old cock.

Ant. The cockrel.

Seb. Done: The wager?

Ant. A laughter.

Seb. A match.

Adr. Though this island seem to be desert,——

Seb. Ha, ha, ha!

Ant. So, you've pay'd.

Adr. Uninhabitable, and almost inaccessible,——

Seb. Yet,

Adr. Yet——

Ant. He could not mis's't.

Adr. It must needs be of subtle, tender, ⁹ and delicate temperance.

Ant. ¹ Temperance was a delicate wench.

Seb. Ay, and a subtle; as he most learnedly deliver'd.

Adr. The air breathes upon us here most sweetly.

Seb. As if it had lungs, and rotten ones.

Ant. Or, as 'twere perfum'd by a fen.

Gon. Here is every thing advantageous to life.

Ant. True; save means to live.

Seb. Of that there's none, or little.

⁹ ——and delicate temperance.] Temperance here means temperature. STEEVENS.

¹ Temperance was a delicate wench.] In the puritanical times it was usual to christen children from the titles of religious and moral virtues.

So Taylor, the water-poet, in his description of a strumpet, “ Though bad they be, they will not bate an ace,

“ To be call'd Prudence. Temperance. Faith, or Grace.”

STEEVENS.

Gon. * How lush and lusty the grass looks? how green?

Ant. The ground, indeed, is tawny.

Seb. With an eye of green in't¹.

*Ant. He misses not much.

Seb. No; he doth but mistake the truth totally.

Gon. But the rarity of it is (which is, indeed, almost beyond credit)—

Seb. As many vouch'd rarities are.

Gon. That our garments, being, as they were, drench'd in the sea, hold notwithstanding their freshness, and glosses; being rather new dy'd, than stain'd with salt water.

Ant. If but one of his pockets could speak, would it not say, he lies?

Seb. Ay, or very falsely pocket up his report.

Gon. Methinks, our garments are now as fresh as when we put them on first in Africk, at the marriage of the king's fair daughter Claribel to the king of Tunis.

Seb. 'Twas a sweet marriage, and we prosper well in our return.

Adr. Tunis was never grac'd before with such a paragon to their queen.

Gon. Not since widow Dido's time.

Ant. Widow? a pox o' that! How came that widow in? * Widow Dido!

Seb.

² How lush, &c.] Lush, i. e. of a dark full colour, the opposite to pale and faint. Sir T. HANMER.

³ With an eye of green in't.] An eye is a small shade of colour. "Red, with an eye of blue, makes a purple." Boyle.

STEEVENS.

* — Widow Dido!] The name of a widow brings to their minds their own shipwreck, which they consider as having made many widows in Naples. JOHNSON.

This passage may contain some allusion to the play of Dido Queen of Carthage, by Nash and Marlow, which was acted before queen Elizabeth in 1594. Preston, the author of Cambyfes, was a performer in it; and to this circumstance our author seems to have

Seb. What if he had said, widower Æneas too ? good lord, how you take it !

Adr. Widow Dido, said you ? you make me study of that : She was of Carthage, not of Tunis.

Gon. This Tunis, fir, was Carthage.

Adr. Carthage ?

Gon. I assure you, Carthage.

Ant. His word is more than the miraculous harp⁵.

Seb. He hath rais'd the wall, and houses too.

Ant. What impossible matter will he make easy next ?

Seb. I think, he will carry this island home in his pocket, and give it his son for an apple.

Ant. And, sowing the kernels of it in the sea, bring forth more islands,

Gon. Ay ?

Ant. Why, in good time.

Gon. Sir, we were talking, that our garments seem now as fresh, as when we were at Tunis at the marriage of your daughter, who is now queen

Ant. And the rarest that e'er came there.

Seb. Bate, I beseech you, widow Dido.

Ant. O, widow Dido ; ay, widow Dido.

Gon. Is not, fir, my doublet, as fresh as the first day I wore it ? I mean, in a sort.

Ant. That sort was well fish'd for.

Gon. When I wore it at your daughter's marriage ?

Alon. You cram these words into mine ears, against The stomach of my sense⁶ : 'Would I had never Marry'd my daughter there ! for, coming thence, My son is lost ; and, in my rate, she too, have alluded in the M. N. Dream, act IV. scene ii. See a note on it. The tragedy of Dido is so very scarce, that I have never been able to meet with it. STEEVENS.

[— the miraculous harp.] Alluding to the wonders of Am-phion's music. STEEVENS.

⁶ The stomach of my sense.] By sense, I believe is meant both reason and natural affection. So in Measure for Measure.

“ Against all sense do you importune her.” STEEVENS.

Who

Who is so far from Italy remov'd,
I ne'er again shall see her. O thou mine heir
Of Naples and of Milan, what strange fish
Hath made his meal on thee!

Fran. Sir, he may live;
I saw him beat the surges under him,
And ride upon their backs; he trod the water,
Whose enmity he flung aside, and breasted
The surge most swollen that met him: his bold head
'Bove the contentious waves he kept, and oar'd
Himself with his good arms in lusty stroke
To the shore, that o'er his wave-worn basis bow'd,
As stooping to relieve him: I not doubt,
He came alive to land.

Alon. No, no, he's gone.

Seb. Sir, you may thank yourself for this great loss;
That would not bless our Europe with your daughter,
But rather lose her to an African;
Where she, at least, is banish'd from your eye,
Who hath cause to wet the grief on't.

Alon. Pr'ythee, peace.

Seb. You were kneel'd to, and importun'd otherwise
By all of us; and the fair soul herself
Weigh'd, between lothness and obedience, at Which end the beam should bow. We have lost your son,

I fear, for ever: Milan and Naples have
More widows in them of this business' making,
Than we bring men to comfort them: the fault's
Your own.

• Alon. So is the dearest o' the loss.

Gon. My lord Sebastian,
The truth you speak doth lack some gentleness,

¹ Than we bring men to comfort them:] It does not clearly appear whether the king and these lords thought the ship lost.
This passage seems to imply, that they were themselves confident of returning, but imagined part of the fleet destroyed. Why, indeed, should Sebastian plot against his brother in the following scene, unless he knew how to find the kingdom which he was to inherit? JOHNSON.

• And

And time to speak it in : you rub the sore,
When you should bring the plaster.

Seb. Very well.

Ant. And most chirurgeonly.

Gon. It is foul weather in us all, good fir,
When you are cloudy.

Seb. Foul weather ?

Ant. Very foul.

Gon. Had I the plantation of this isle, my lord,—

Ant. He'd sow't with nettle-feed.

Seb. Or docks, or mallows.

Gon. And were the king of it, What would I do ?

Seb. 'Scape being drunk, for want of wine.

Gon. I' the commonwealth, I would by contraries
Execute all things : for no kind of traffick
Would I admit ; no name of magistrate ;
Letters should not be known ; riches, poverty,
And use of service, none ; contract, succession,
Bourn*, bound of land, tilth, vineyard, none :
No use of metal, corn, or wine, or oil :
No occupation ; all men idle, all,
And women too, but innocent and pure :
No sovereignty.

Seb. And yet he would be king on't.

Ant. ' The latter end of his commonwealth forgets
the beginning.

Gon. All things in common nature should produce
Without sweat or endeavour : treason, felony,
Sword, pike, knife, gun, or need of any engine†,
Would I not have ; but nature should bring forth,

* Bourn, bound of land, &c.] A bourn, in this place, signifies a limit, a meer, a land-mark. STEEVENS.

† The latter end of his commonwealth forgets the beginning.] All this dialogue is a fine satire on the Utopian treatises of government, and the impracticable inconsistent schemes therein recommended. WARBURTON.

—any engine.] An engine is the rack. So in K. Lear.

—like an engine, wrench'd my frame of nature

“ From the fix'd place.”

It may, however, be used here in its common signification of instrument of war, or military machine. STEEVENS.

Of its own kind, all ^a foizon, all abundance
To feed my innocent people.

Seb. No marrying 'mong his subjects?

Ant. None, man : all idle ; whores, and knaves.

Gon. I would with such perfection govern, fir,
To excel the golden age.

Seb. 'Save his majesty !

Ant. Long live Gonzalo !

Gon. And, do you mark me, fir?

Alon. Pr'ythee, no more ; thou dost talk nothing to me.

Gon. I do well believe your highness ; and did it to minister occasion to these gentlemen, who are of such sensible and nimble lungs, that they always use to laugh at nothing.

Ant. 'Twas you we laugh'd at.

Gon. Who, in this kind of merry fooling, am nothing to you : so you may continue, and laugh at nothing still.

Ant. What a blow was there given ?

Seb. An it had not fallen flat-long.

Gon. You are gentlemen of brave metal ; you would lift the moon out of her sphere, if she would continue in it, five weeks without changing.

Enter Ariel, playing solemn musick.

Seb. We would so, and then go a bat-fowling.

Ant. Nay, my good lord, be not angry.

Gon. No, I warrant you ; I will not adventure my

* ^a —all foizon,—] Foizon or foizon signifies plenty, ubertas, not moisture, or juice of grafs or other herbs, as Mr. Pope says.

EDWARDS.

Foyson is pure French, and signifies plenty.
So in Warner's Albion's England, 1602, b. xiii. ch. 78.

"Union, in breefe, is foysonous, and discorde works decay."

Mr. Pope however is not entirely mistaken, as foizon, or fizon, sometimes bears the meaning which he has affixed to it. See Ray's Collection of South and East Country words. STEVENS.

discretion

discretion so weakly. Will you laugh me asleep; for I am very heavy?

Ant. Go, sleep, and hear us.

[Gonz. Adr. Fra. &c. sleep.]

Alon. What, all so soon asleep! I wish mine eyes Would, with themselves, shut up my thoughts: I find, They are inclin'd to do so.

Seb. Please you, sir,
Do not omit the heavy offer of it:
It seldom visits sorrow; when it doth,
It is a comforter.

Ant. We two, my lord,
Will guard your person, while you take your rest,
And watch your safety.

Alon. Thank you: Wond'rous heavy——

[All sleep but Seb. and Ant.]

Seb. What a strange drowiness possesses them?

Ant. It is the quality o' the climate.

Seb. Why

Doth it not then our eye-lids sink? I find not Myself dispos'd to sleep.

Ant. Nor I; my spirits are nimble.
They fell together all, as by consent;
They dropp'd, as by a thunder-stroke. What might,
Worthy Sebastian?—O, what might?—No more:—
And yet, methinks, I see it in thy face,
What thou should'st be: the occasion speaks thee; and
My strong imagination sees a crown
Dropping upon thy head.

Seb. What, art thou waking?

Ant. Do you not hear me speak?

Seb. I do; and, surely,
It is a sleepy language; and thou speak'st
Out of thy sleep: What is it thou didst say?
This is a strange repose, to be asleep
With eyes wide open; standing, speaking, moving;
And yet so fast asleep.

Ant. Noble Sebastian,

• Thou

Thou let'st thy fortune sleep, die rather ; wink'st
Whiles thou art waking.

Seb. Thou dost snore distinctly ;
'There's meaning in thy snores.

Ant. I am more serious than my custom : you Must be so too, if heed me ; which to do,
Trebles thee o'er.

Seb. Well ; I am standing water.

Ant. I'll teach you how to flow.

Seb. Do so : to ebb,
Hereditary sloth instructs me.

Ant. O,
If you but knew, how you the purpose cherish,
Whilst thus you mock it ! how, in stripping it,
You more invest it ! Ebbing men, indeed,
Most often, do so near the bottom run,
By their own fear, or sloth.

Seb. Pr'ythee, say on :
The setting of thine eye, and cheek, proclaim
A matter from thee ; and a birth, indeed,
Which throes thee much to yield.

Ant. Thus, sir :
Although ² this lord of weak remembrance, this,
(Who shall be of as little memory,
When he is earth'd) hath here almost persuaded,
(¹ For he's a spirit of persuasion, only

Professes

² —this lord of weak remembrance,—] This lord, who, being now in his dotage, has outlived his faculty of remembering ; and who, once laid in the ground, shall be as little remembered himself, as he can now remember other things. JOHNSON.

³ For he's a spirit of persuasion,] Of this entangled sentence I can draw no sense from the present reading, and therefore imagine that the author gave it thus :

For he, a spirit of persuasion, only Professes to persuade.

Of which the meaning may be either, that he alone, who is a spirit of persuasion, professes to persuade the king ; or that, He only professes to persuade, that is, without being so persuaded himself, he makes a show of persuading the king. JOHNSON.

Professes to persuade) the king, his son's alive;
'Tis as impossible that he's undrown'd,
As he, that sleeps here, swims.

Seb. I have no hope
That he's undrown'd.

Ant. O, out of that no hope,
What great hope have you! no hope, that way, is Another way so high an hope, that even Ambition cannot pierce ⁴ a wink beyond,
But doubts discovery there. Will you grant, with me,
That Ferdinand is drown'd?

Seb. He's gone.

Ant. Then, tell me,
Who's the next heir of Naples?

Seb. Claribel.

Ant. She that is queen of Tunis; she that dwells
Ten leagues beyond man's life; ⁵ she that from Naples
Can have no note, unless the sun were post,
(The man i' the moon's too slow) till new-born chins
Be rough and razorable; she, from whom

The meaning may be—He is a mere rhetorician, one who professes the art of persuasion, and nothing else; i. e. he professes to persuade another to believe that of which he himself is not convinced: he is content to be plausible, and has no further aim. The construction, from which I draw this sense, is undoubtedly harsh; but in a writer like Shakespeare, all that is perplexed and irregular is not to be regarded as a corruption of the text.

STEEVENS.

⁴ —a wink beyond,] That this is the utmost extent of the prospect of ambition, the point where the eye can pass no farther, and where objects lose their distinctness, so that what is there discovered, is faint, obscure, and doubtful. JOHNSON.

⁵ —she that from Naples

Can have no note, &c.] Shakespeare's great ignorance of geography is not more conspicuous in any instance than in this, where he supposes Tunis and Naples to have been at such an immeasurable distance from each other. He may however be countenanced by Apollonius Rhodius, who says, that both the Rhone and Po meet in one, and discharge themselves into the gulph of Venice; and by Æschylus, who has placed the river Eridanus in Spain. STEEVENS.

We were all sea-swallow'd, ' though some cast again ;
 And, by that destiny &, to perform an act,
 Whereof what's past is prologue ; what to come,
 In yours, and my discharge.

Seb. What stuff is this ?—How say you ?
 'Tis true, my brother's daughter's queen of Tunis ;
 So is the heir of Naples ; 'twixt which regions
 There is some space.

Ant. A space, whose every cubit
 Seems to cry out, How shall that Claribel
Measure us back to Naples ?—^s Keep in Tunis,
 And let Sebastian wake !—Say, this were death
 That now hath seiz'd them ; why, they were no worse
 Than now they are : There be, that can rule Naples,
 As well as he that sleeps ; lords, that can prate

* These lines stand in the old edition thus :

——— though some cast again ;
And, by that destiny, to perform an act,
Whereof what's past is prologue ; what to come,
In your and my discharge.

The reading in the latter editions is without authority. The old text may very well stand, except that in the last line in should be is, and perhaps we might better say—and that by destiny. It being a common plea of wickedness to call temptation destiny.

JOHNSON.

It should be remembered, that cast is here used in the same sense as in Macbeth, act II. sc. iii. “ —— though he took my “ legs from me, I made a shift to cast him.”

The modern editors published,

Is yours and my discharge.

I think we may safely retain the old reading in the last hemistich.

——— what is yet to come,

In yours and my discharge.

F. c. Depends on what you and I are to perform. STEEVENS.

ⁱ —— destiny.] I should prefer destin'd. MUSGRAVE.

^s —— Keep in Tunis.] There is in this passage a propriety lost ; which a slight alteration will restore :

——— Sleep in Tunis,

And let Sebastian wake ! JOHNSON.

The old reading is sufficiently explicable. Claribel, (says he) keep where thou art, and allow Sebastian time to awaken those senses, by the help of which he may perceive the advantage which now presents itself. STEEVENS.

As amply, and unnecessarily,
 As this Gonzalo ; I myself could make
 A chough^o of as deep chat. O, that you bore
 The mind that I do ! what a sleep were this
 For your advancement ? Do you understand me ?

Seb. Methinks, I do.

Ant. And how does your content
 Tender your own good fortune ?

Seb. I remember,
 You did supplant your brother Prospero.

Ant. True :

And, look, how well my garments fit upon me ;
 Much feater than before : My brother's servants
 Were then my fellows, now they are my men.

Seb. But, for your conscience——

Ant. Ay, fir ; where lies that ? if it were a kybe, 'Twould put me to my slipper ; But I feel not
 This deity in my bosom : twenty consciences,
 That stand 'twixt me and Milan, candy'd be they,
 ' And melt, e'er they molest. Here lies your brother,
 No better than the earth he lies upon,
 If he were that which now he's like, that's dead² ;

^o A chough is a bird of the jack-daw kind. STEEVENS.

¹ And melt e'er they molest.] I had rather read,

Would melt e'er they molest.

i. e. Twenty consciences, such as stand between me and my hopes, though they were congealed, would melt before they could molest me, or prevent the execution of my purposes. JOHNSON.

The old copy reads—And melt, which is as intelligible as or, which was substituted in its place.—Let twenty consciences be first congealed, and then dissolved, ere, &c. MALONE.

In the later editions, these lines are thus arranged :

Ay, fir, where lyes that ?

If 'twere a kybe, 'twould put me to my slipper :

But I feel not this deity in my bosom.

Ten consciences, that stand 'twixt me and Milan,

Candy'd be they, and melt, e'er they molest !

Here lies your brother——

This modern reading was quite arbitrary, as appears by the necessity of changing twenty to ten. STEEVENS.

² —that's dead ;] i. e. that is, id est. STEEVENS.

Whom I with this obedient steel, three inches of it,
Can lay to bed for ever: whiles you, doing thus,
To the perpetual wink, for ay³ might put
* This ancient morsel, this fir Prudence, who Should not upbraid our course. For all the rest,
They'll ' take suggestion, as a cat laps milk;
They'll tell the clock to any business that
We say befits the hour.

Seb. Thy case, dear friend,
Shall be my precedent; as thou got'st Milan,
I'll come by Naples. Draw thy sword: one stroke
Shall free thee from the tribute which thou pay'st;
And I the king shall love thee.

Ant. Draw together:
And when I rear my hand, do you the like
To fall it on Gonzalo.

Seb. O, but one word. [They converse apart.

Enter Ariel, with musick and song.

Ari. My master through his art foresees the danger,
That you, his friend, are in; and sends me forth
(For else his project dies)⁶ to keep them living.

[Sings in Gonzalo's ear.

While

³ —for aye].—i. e. for ever. So in K. Lear,

“ — I am come

“ To bid my king and master aye good night.” STEEVENS.

* This ancient morsel,—] For morsel Dr. Warburton reads ancient moral, very elegantly and judiciously, yet I know not whether the author might not write morsel, as we say a piece of a man. JOHNSON.

So in Hamlet, What, is Horatio there?

A piece of him.

Again in Measure for Measure,

“ How doth my dear morsel; thy mistress?”

In Coriolanus, — “ Hence you fragments.” STEEVENS.

So in Ant. and Cleopatra,

“ — As a morsell cold

“ Upon dead Cæsar's trencher.” MALONE.

⁵ —take suggestion,—] i. e. Receive any hint of villainy.

JOHNSON.

⁶ —to keep them living.] i. e. Alonso and Anthonio; for it was on their lives that his project depended. Yet the Oxford

*While you here do snoring lie,
 Open-ey'd conspiracy
 His time doth take !
 If of life you keep a care,
 Shake off slumber, and beware :
 Awake ! awake !*

Ant. Then let us both be sudden.

Gon. Now, good angels, preserve the king !

[They wake.]

Alon. Why, how now, ho ! awake ? Why are you
 ' drawn ?

Wherefore this ghastly looking ?

Gon. What's the matter ?

Seb. Whiles we stood here securing your repose,
 Even now, we heard a hollow burst of bellowing
 Like bulls, or rather lions ; did it not wake you ?
 It strook mine ear most terribly.

Alon. I heard nothing.

Ant. O, 'twas a din to fright a monster's ear ;
 To make an earthquake ! sure, it was the roar
 Of a whole herd of lions.

Alon. Heard you this, Gonzalo ?

Gon. Upon my honour, sir, I heard a humming,

Editor alters them to you, because in the verse before, it is said
 — you his friend ; as if, because Ariel was sent forth to save his friend, he could not have another purpose in sending him, viz.
 to save his project too. WARBURTON.

I think Dr. Warburton and the Oxford Editor both mistaken.
 The sense of the passage, as it now stands, is this : He sees your danger, and will therefore save them. Dr. Warburton has mistaken Anthonio for Gonzalo. Ariel would certainly not tell Gonzalo, that his master saved him only for his project. He speaks to himself as he approaches,

*My master through his art foresees the danger
 That these his friends are in.*

These written with a y, according to the old practice, did not much differ from you. JOHNSON.

' — drawn ?'] Having your swords drawn. So in Romeo and Juliet :

“ What art thou drawn among these heartless hinds ?”

JOHNSON.

And.

And that a strange one too, which did awake me :
I shak'd you, fir, and cry'd ; as mine eyes open'd,
I saw their weapons drawn :—there was a noise,
That's verity : 'Tis best we stand upon our guard ;
Or that we quit this place : let's draw our weapons.

Alon. Lead off this ground ; and let's make further search

For my poor son.

Gon. Heavens keep him from these beasts !
For he is, sure, i' the island.

Alon. Lead away.

Ari. Prospero my lord shall know what I have done.

So, king, go safely on to seek thy son. [Aside.
[Exeunt.

S C E N E II.

Another part of the island.

Enter Caliban with a burden of wood : A noise of thunder heard.

Cal. All the infections that the sun sucks up
From bogs, fens, flats, on Prosper fall, and make him
By inch-meal a disease ! His spirits hear me,
And yet I needs must curse. But they'll nor pinch,
Fright me with urchin shows, pitch 'me i' the mire,
Nor lead me, like a fire-brand, in the dark
Out of my way, unless he bid 'em ; but
For every trifle they are set upon me :
Sometime like apes, ' that moe and chatter at me,

* That's verily.] The old copy reads, that's verily. STEEVENS.

' —that moe, &c.] i. e. Make mouths. So in the old version of the Psalms :

“ —making *moe*s at me.”

So in the old mystery of Candlemas-Day, 1512 :

“ And make them to lye and move like an ape.”

STEEVENS.

So in Nashe's Apologie of Pierce Penniless, 1593 :

“ Found nobody at home but an ape, that fate in the porch
“ and made mops and *move*s at him.” MALONE.

And after, bite me; then like hedge-hogs, which Lie tumbling in my bare-foot way, and mount
Their pricks at my foot-fall; sometime am I
All 'wound with adders, who, with cloven tongues,
Do hiss me into madness:—Lo! now! lo!

Enter Trinculo.

Here comes a spirit of his; and to torment me,
For bringing wood in slowly: I'll fall flat;
Perchance, he will not mind me.

Trin. Here's neither bush nor shrub; to bear off any weather at all, and another storm brewing; I hear it sing i' the wind: yond' same black cloud, yond' huge one, ² looks like a foul bombard that would shed his liquor. If it should thunder, as it did before, I know not where to hide my head: yond' same cloud cannot chuse but fall by pailfuls.—What have we here? a man or a fish? Dead or alive? A fish:

¹ —[wound] Enwrapped by adders wound or twisted about me. JOHNSON.

² —looks like a foul bombard—] This term again occurs in
The First Part of Henry IV.—"that swoln parcel of dropfies,
"that huge bombard of sack"—and again in Henry VIII.
"And here you lie baiting of bombards, when ye should do fer-
"vice." By these several passages, 'tis plain, the word meant a large vessel for holding drink, as well as the piece of ordnance so called. THEOBALD.

Ben Jonson, in his Masque of Augurs, confirms the conjecture of Theobald.—"The poor cattle yonder are passing away the "time with a cheat loaf, and a bombard of broken beer."

So in Middleton's Inner Temple Masque, 1619:—"they would "have beat out his brains with bombards."

So again in The Martyr'd Soldier, by Shirley, 1638.

"His boots as wide as the black-jacks,

"Or bombards tofs'd by the king's guards,"

And it appears from a passage in Ben Jonson's *Masque of Love
Restor'd*, that a bombard-man was one who carried about provisions.

"I am to deliver into the buttery so many firkins of aurum
"potabile, as it delivers out bombards of hougé," &c.

Again in Decker's Match me in London, 1631.

"You are ascended up to what you are, from the black-jack
"to the bombard distillation." STEEVENS.

he

he smells like a fish; a very ancient and fish-like smell; a kind of, not of the newest, Poor-John. A strange fish! Were I in England now, (as once I was) and had but this fish painted³, not a holiday-fool there but would give a piece of silver: there would this monster⁴ make a man; any strange beast there makes a man: when they will not give a doit to relieve a lame beggar, they will lay out ten to see⁵ a dead Indian. Legg'd like a man! and his fins like arms! Warm, o' my troth! I do now let loose my opinion⁶, hold it no longer; this is no fish, but an islander, that has lately suffer'd by a thunder-bolt. Alas! the storm is come again: my best way is to creep under⁷ his gaberdine; there is no other shelter hereabout:

³ — this fish painted.] To exhibit fishes, either real or imaginary, was very common about the time of our author. So in Mair's comedy of the City Match:

“Enter Bright, &c. hanging out the picture of a strange fish.”

—“This is the fifth fish now

“That he hath shewn thus.”

It appears, from the books at Stationers' Hall, that in 1604 was published, “A strange reporte of a monstrous fish, that appeared in the form of a woman from her waist upward, seene in the sea.” STEEVENS.

⁴ — make a man;] That is, make a man's fortune. So in Midsummer Night's Dream—“we are all made men.” JOHNSON. So in Ram-alley, or Merry Tricks, 1611:

“——She's a wench

“Was born to make us all.” STEEVENS.

⁵ — a dead Indian.—] And afterwards—Men of Inde. Probably some allusion to a particular occurrence, now obscured by time. In Henry VIII. the porter asks the mob, if they think — some strange Indian, &c. is come to court.

In the year 1577 was entered on the books of the Stationers' Company, “A description of the purtrayture and shape of those strange kinde of people whiche the wurthie Mr. Martin Fourbosier brought into England in A°. 1576.” STEEVENS.

⁶ — let loose my opinion, &c.] So in Love's Labour's Lost:

“——Now you will be my purgation, and let me loose.”

STEEVENS.

⁷ — his gaberdine;—] A gaberdine is properly the coarse frock or outward garment of a peasant. Ital. garverdina.

So

will recover him, I will help his ague: Come—³ Amen!
I will pour some in thy other mouth.

Trin. Stephano,—

Ste. Doth thy other mouth call me? Mercy! mercy! This is a devil, and no monster: I will leave him; ⁴ I have no long spoon.

Trin. Stephano!—if thou beest Stephano, touch me, and speak to me; for I am Trinculo;—be not afraid,—thy good friend Trinculo.

Ste. If thou beest Trinculo, come forth; I'll pull thee by the lesser legs: if any be Trinculo's legs, these are they. Thou art very Trinculo, indeed: How cam'st thou ⁵ to be the siege of this moon-calf? can he vent Trinculos?

Trin. I took him to be kill'd with a thunder-stroke:—But art thou not drown'd, Stephano? I hope now, thou art not drown'd. Is the storm over-blown? I hid me under the dead moon-calf's gaberdine, for fear of the storm: And art thou living, Stephano? O Stephano, two Neapolitans 'scap'd!

Ste. Pr'ythee, do not turn me about; my stomach is not constant.

Cal. These be fine things, an if they be not sprights.

³ —Amen!—] Means stop your draught; come to a conclusion. I will pour some, &c. STEEVENS.

⁴ I have no long spoon.] Alluding to the proverb, A long spoon to eat with the devil. STEEVENS.

See Com. of Errors, act IV. sc. iii. and Chaucer's Squire's Tale, ver. 10916 of the late edit.

“Therefore behoveth him a ful long sponc,

“That shall ete with a fend.”—— TYRWHITT.

⁵ —to be the siege of this moon-calf?] Siege signifies fool in every sense of the word, and is here used in the dirtiest.

So in Holinshed, p. 705: “In this yeare also, a house on London bridge, called the common siege, or privie, fell downe into the Thames.”

A moon-calf is an inanimate shapeless mass, supposed by Pliny to be engendered of woman only. See his Nat. Hist. b. x. ch. 64.

STEEVENS,

That's a brave god, and bears celestial liquor :
I will kneel to him.

Ste. How did'st thou 'scape ? How cam'st thou hither ? swear, by this bottle, how thou cam'st hither.
I escap'd upon a butt of sack, which the sailors heav'd over-board, by this bottle ! which I made of the bark of a tree, with mine own hands, since I was cast a-shore.

Cal. I'll swear, upon that bottle, to be thy true subject ; for the liquor is not earthly.

Ste. Here ; swear then, how escap'dst thou ?

Trin. Sworn a-shore, man, like a duck ; I can swim like a duck, I'll be sworn.

Ste. Here, kiss the book : Though thou can'st swim like a duck, thou art made like a goose.

Trin. O Stephano, hast any more of this ?

Ste. The whole butt, man ; my cellar is in a rock by the sea-side, where my wine is hid. How now, moon-calf ? how does thine ague ?

Cal. Hast thou not dropp'd from heaven ?

Ste. Out o' the moon, I do assure thee : I was the man in the moon, when time was.

Cal. I have seen thee in her, and I do adore thee :
my mistress shew'd me thee, and thy dog, and thy bush.

Ste. Come, swear to that ; kiss the book : I will furnish it anon with new contents : swear.

Trin. By this good light this is a very shallow monster :—⁷ I afraid of him ?—a very weak monster :—
The man i' the moon ?—a most poor credulous monster :—Well drawn, monster, in good sooth.

⁶ Hast thou not dropped from heaven ?] The new-discovered Indians of the island of St. Salvador, asked, by signs, whether Columbus and his companions were not come down from heaven.

TOLLET.

⁷ I afraid of him ?—a very weak monster, &c.] It is to be observed, that Trinculo the speaker is not charged with being afraid ; but it was his consciousness that he was so that drew this brag from him. This is nature. WARBURTON.

Cal.

Cal. I'll shew thee every fertile inch o' the isle ;
And I will * kifs thy foot : I, pr'ythee, be my god.

Trin. By this light, a most perfidious and drunken monster ; when his god's asleep, he'll rob his bottle.

Cal. I'll kifs thy foot : I'll swear myself thy subject.

Ste. Come on then ; down, and swear.

Trin. I shall laugh myself to death at this puppy-headed monster : A most scurvy monster ! I could find in my heart to beat him,—

Ste. Come, kifs.

Trin. —But that the poor monster's in drink :
An abominable monster !

Cal. I'll shew thee the best springs ; I'll pluck thee berries ;

I'll fish for thee, and get thee wood enough.

A plague upon the tyrant that I serve !

I'll bear him no more sticks, but follow thee,
Thou wond'rous man.

Trin. A most ridiculous monster ; to make a wonder of a poor drunkard.

Cal. I pr'ythee, let me bring thee where crabs grow ;
And I with my long nails will dig thee pig-nuts ;
Shew thee a jay's nest, and instruct thee how
To snare the nimble marmozet ; I'll bring thee
To clust'ring filberds, and sometimes I'll get thee Young 'scamels from the rock : Wilt thou go with me ?

Ste.

* —kifs thy foot:—] A sneer upon the papists for kissing the Pope's pantofle. GRAY.

° —scamels:—] This word has puzzled the commentators : Dr. Warburton reads shamois ; Mr. Theobald would read any thing rather than scamels. Mr. Holt, who wrote notes upon this play, observes, that limpets are in some places called scams, therefore I have suffered scamels to stand. JOHNSON.

Theobald substitutes shamois for scamels ; which last word, he says, has possessed all the editions. I am inclined to retain scamels ; for in an old will, dated 1593, I find the bequest of “ a bed of scammel colour ;” i. e. of the colour of an animal so called, whose skin was then in use for dress or furniture. This

Ste. I pr'ythee now, lead the way, without any more talking.—Trinculo, the king and all our company being drown'd, we will inherit here.—Here; bear my bottle! Fellow Trinculo, we'll fill him by and by again.

[Sings drunkenly.] Farewell master; farewell, farewell.

Trin. A howling monster; a drunken monster.

at least shews the existence of the word at the time, and in Shakespeare's sense. WARTON.

I take Mr. Warton's bed of scammel colour to be a mistake for flammel colour, i. e. of a light red colour. The light, pale flammel is mentioned in PH. Holland's translation of Pliny's Nat. Hist. and is also there styled the light red, and fresh lussy gallant, p. 263 and 261. See also flammel in Ainsworth's Dict. TOLLIT.

In Jonson's Underwoods, see the following passage:

"Red-hood the first that doth appear

"In flamel, scarlet is too dear."

And in Fletcher's Woman-bater:

"Humble herself in an old flamel petticoat."

So in Middleton's Musque of the World tof'd at tennis:

"They wear flammel cloaks instead of scarlet."

So in The Return from Parnassus, 1606.

"Some flamel weaver, or some butcher's son."

Again, in The Turk turn'd Christian, 1612.

"That fellow in the flammel hose is one of them."

Again, in Friar Bacon and Friar Bungay, 1599.

"That seem'd so stately in her flammel red."

Again, in Monsieur D'Olive, 1606.

"—like those creatures

"That live in the Bordello, now in fatten,

"To-morrow next in flammell."

Theobald had very reasonably proposed to read sea-malis, or sea-mells. An e, by these careless printers, was easily changed into a c, and from this accident, I believe, all the difficulty arises, the word having been spelt by the transcriber flamel. Willoughby mentions the bird as Theobald has informed us. Had Mr. Holt told us in what part of England scamels are called siams, more attention would have been paid to his assertion.

I should suppose, at all events, a bird to have been design'd, as young and old fish are taken with equal facility; but young birds are more easily surpris'd than old ones. Besides, Caliban had already proffered to fish for Trinculo. In Cavendish's second voyage, the sailors eat young gulls at the ill of Penguins. STLEVENS.

Cal. No more dams I'll make for fish;
 Nor fetch in firing,
 At requiring,
 Nor scrape¹ trencher, nor wash dish;
 Ban² Ban³, Ca—Caliban,
 Has a new master—Get a new Man.

Freedom, hey-day! hey-day, freedom! freedom,
 hey-day, freedom!

Ste. O brave monster! lead the way [Exeunt.

A C T III. S C E N E I.

Before Prospero's cell.

Enter Ferdinand, bearing a log.

Fer. There be some sports are painful⁴; but their labour⁵

Delight in them sets off: some kinds of baseness
 Are nobly undergone; and most poor matters
 Point to rich ends. This my mean task
 Would be as heavy to me, as odious; but
 The mistress, which I serve, quickens what's dead,
 And makes my labours pleasures: o, she is
 Ten times more gentle, than her father's crabbed;
 And he's compos'd of harshness. I must remove
 Some thousands of these logs, and pile them up,
 Upon a fore injunction: My sweet mistress
 Weeps when she sees me work; and says, such baseness
 Had ne'er like executor. I forget:

¹ ———trencher,] The old copy reads trenchering.

STEEVENS.

² ———are painful;] i. e. laborious. STEEVENS.

³ ———but their labour

Delight in them sets off:]

Molliter austerum studio fallente laborem. Hor. sat. 2. lib. ii.

STEEVENS.

But these sweet thoughts do even refresh my labours ;
 * Most busy-lefs, when I do it.

Enter Miranda, and Prospero at a distance.

Mira. Alas, now ! pray you,
 Work not so hard : I would, the lightning had Burnt up those logs, that you are enjoin'd to pile !
 Pray, set it down, and rest you : when this burns,
 'Twill weep for having weary'd you : My father
 Is hard at study ; pray now, rest yourself ;
 He's safe for these three hours.

Fer. O most dear mistress,
 The sun will set before I shall discharge
 What I must strive to do.

Mira. If you'll sit down,
 I'll bear your logs the while : Pray, give me that ;
 I'll carry't to the pile.

Fer. No, precious creature ;
 I had rather crack my sinews, break my back,
 Than you should such dishonour undergo,
 While I sit lazy by.

Mira. It would become me
 As well as it does you : and I should do it
 With much more ease ; for my good will is to it,
 And yours it is against ^s.

Pio. Poor worm ! thou art infected ;
 This visitation shews it.

Mira. You look wearily.

Fer. No, noble mistress ; 'tis fresh morning with me,
 When you are by at night. I do beseech you,

* The two first folios read :

Most busy lest, when I do it.

'Tis true this reading is corrupt ; but the corruption is so very little removed from the truth of the text, that I cannot afford to think well of my own sagacity for having discovered it.

THEOBALD.

^s And yours it is against.] Perhaps we should read, And yours is it against. STEEVENS.

(Chiefly that I might set it in my prayers)

What is your name ?

Mira. Miranda :—O my father,
I have broke your ⁶ heft to say so !

Fer. Admir'd Miranda !

Indeed, the top of admiration ; worth
What's dearest to the world ! Full many a lady
I have ey'd with best regard ; and many a time
The harmony of their tongues hath into bondage
Brought my too diligent ear : for several virtues
Have I lik'd several women ; never any
With so full soul, but some defect in her
Did quarrel with the noblest grace she ow'd,
And put it to the foil : But you, o, you,
So perfect, and so peerless, are created
⁷ Of every creature's best.

Mira. I do not know
One of my sex ; no woman's face remember,
Save, from my glass, mine own ; nor have I seen
More that I may call men, than you, good friend,
And my dear father : how features are abroad,
I am skilless of ; but, by my modesty,
(The jewel in my dower) I would not wish
Any companion in the world but you,
Nor can imagination form a shape,
Besides yourself, to like of : But I prattle
Something too wildly, and my father's precepts
I therein do forget.

Fer. I am, in my condition,
A prince, Miranda ; I do think, a king ;
(I would, not so !) and would no more endure
This wooden slavery, than I would suffer ⁸
The flesh-fly blow my mouth :—Hear my soul speak ;—

⁶ —heft—] For behest ; i. e. command. STEVENS.

⁷ Of every creature's best.] Alluding to the picture of Venus by Apelles. JOHNSON.

⁸ —than I would suffer, &c.] The old copy reads—Than to suffer. The emendation is Mr. Pope's. STEVENS.

The very instant that I saw you, did
My heart fly to your service ; there resides,
To make me slave to it ; and, for your sake,
Am I this patient log-man.

Mira. Do you love me ?

Fer. O heaven, o earth, bear witness to this sound,
And crown what I profess with kind event,
If I speak true ; if hollowly, invert
What best is boded me, to mischief ! I,
Beyond all limit of what else i' the world,
Do love, prize, honour you.

Mira. ° I am a fool,
To weep at what I am glad of.

Pro. Fair encounter
Of two most rare affections ! Heavens rain grace
On that which breeds between them !

Fer. Wherefore weep you ?

Mira. At mine unworthiness, that dare not offer
What I desire to give ; and much less take,
What I shall die to want : But this is trifling ;
And all the more it seeks to hide itself,
The bigger bulk it shews. Hence bashful cunning !
And prompt me, plain and holy innocence !
I am your wife, if you will marry me ;
If not, I'll die your maid : to be your fellow °
You may deny me ; but I'll be your servant,
Whether you will or no.

° I am a fool,

To weep at what I am glad of.] This is one of those touches of nature that distinguish Shakespeare from all other writers. It was necessary, in support of the character of Miranda, to make her appear unconscious that excess of sorrow and excess of joy find alike their relief from tears ; and as this is the first time that consummate pleasure had made any near approaches to her heart, she calls such a seeming contradictory expression of it, folly.

The same thought occurs in Romeo and Juliet :

“ Back*foolish tears, back to your native spring,

“ Your tributary drops belong to woe,

“ Which you, mistaking, offer up to joy.” STEEVENS.

—your fellow, † i. e. companion. STEEVENS.

Fer. My mistress, dearest,
And I thus humble ever.

Mira. My husband then ?

Fer. Ay, with a heart as willing
As bondage e'er of freedom : here's my hand.

Mira. And mine, with my heart in't : And how farewell,
Till half an hour hence.

Fer. A thousand, thousand ! [Exeunt.

Pro. So glad of this as they, I cannot be,
Who are surpriz'd with all ; but my rejoicing
At nothing can be more. I'll to my book ;
For yet, ere supper-time, must I perform
Much business appertaining. [Exit.

S C E N E II.

Another part of the island.

Enter Caliban, Stephano, and Trinculo, with a bottle.

Ste. Tell not me ;—when the butt is out, we will drink water ; not a drop before : therefore bear up, and board 'em * : Servant-monster, drink to me.

Trin. Servant-monster ? the folly of this island !
They say, there's but five upon this isle : we are three of them ; if the other two be brain'd like us, the state totters.

Ste. Drink, servant-monster, when I bid thee ; thy eyes are almost set in thy head.

Trin. Where should they be set else ? he were a brave monster indeed, if they were set in his tail †.

* Bear up, and board 'em :] A metaphor alluding to a chase at sea. SIR J. HAWKINS.

† He were a brave monster indeed, if they were set in his tail.] I believe this to be an allusion to a story that is met with in Stowe, and other writers of the time. It seems, in the year 1574, a whale was thrown ashore near Ramsgate. “ A monstrous fish (says “ the chronicler) but not so monstrous as some reported—for his “ eyes were in his head, and not in his back.”

Summary, 1575, p. 562.

FARMER.

Ste.

Ste. My man-monster hath drown'd his tongue in sack : for my part, the sea cannot drown me : ' I swam, ere I could recover the shore, five-and-thirty leagues, off and on, by this light.—Thou shalt be my lieutenant, monster, ⁴ or my standard.

Trin. Your lieutenant, if you list ; he's no standard.

Ste. We'll not run, monsieur monster.

Trin. Nor go neither : but you'll lie, like dogs ; and yet say nothing neither.

Ste. Moon-calf, speak once in thy life, if thou beest a good moon-calf.

Cal. How does thy honour ? Let me lick thy shoe : I'll not serve him ; he is not valiant.

Trin. Thou ly'st, most ignorant monster ; I am in case to juggle a constable : Why, ⁵ thou debosh'd fish thou,

³ I swam, &c.] This play was not published till 1623. Albuzar made its appearance in 1614, and has a passage relative to the escape of a sailor yet more incredible. Perhaps, in both instances, a sneer was meant at the Voyages of Ferdinando Mendez Pinto, or the exaggerated accounts of other lying travellers :

“ ——— five days I was under water ; and at length

“ Got up and spread myself upon a chest,

“ Rowing with arms, and steering with my feet,

“ And thus in five days more got land.” Act III. sc. v.

STEEVENS.

⁴ ——— or my standard.

Trin. Your lieutenant, if you list ; he's no standard.] Meaning, he is so much intoxicated, as not to be able to stand. The quibble between standard, an ensign, and standard, a fruit tree, that grows without support, is evident. STEEVENS.

⁵ ——— thou debosh'd fish thou,—] I meet with this word, which I suppose to be the same as debauch'd, in Randolph's Jealous Lovers, 1634 :

“ ——— See your house be stor'd

“ With the deboishest roarers in this city.”

Again, All's Well that ends Well :

“ With all the spots o' th' world tax'd and deboish'd,”

Again in Monsieur Thomas, 1639 :

“ ——— saucy fellows,

“ Deboish'd and daily drunkards.”

The substantive occurs in the Parthencia Sacra, 1633 :

“ —A hater of men, rather than the deboishments of their “ manners.”

thou, was there ever a man a coward, that hath drunk so much sack as I to day ? Wilt thou tell a monstrous lie, being but half a fish, and half a monster ?

Cal. Lo, how he mocks me ; wilt thou let him, my lord ?

Trin. Lord, quoth he !——that a monster should be such a natural !

Cal. Lo, lo, again ; bite him to death, I pr'ythee.

Ste. Trinculo, keep a good tongue in your head ; if you prove a mutineer, the next tree——The poor monster's my subject, and he shall not suffer indignity.

Cal. I thank my noble lord. Wilt thou be pleas'd to hearken once again to the suit I made to thee ?

Ste. Marry will I : kneel, and repeat it ; I will stand, and so shall Trinculo.

Enter Ariel invisible.

Cal. As I told thee before, I am subject to a tyrant ; a forcerer, that by his cunning hath cheated me of the island.

Ari. Thou ly'st.

Cal. Thou ly'st, thou jesting monkey, thou ; I would, my valiant master would destroy thee : I do not lie.

Ste. Trinculo, if you trouble him any more in his tale, by this hand, I will supplant some of your teeth.

Trin. Why, I said nothing.

Ste. Mum then, and no more——[To Caliban.] Proceed.

Cal. I say, by forcery he got this isle ; From me he got it, If thy greatness will Revenge it on him (for, I know, thou dar'st, But this thing dare not——)

Ste. That's most certain.

When the word was first adopted from the French language, it appears to have been spelt according to the pronunciation, and therefore wrongly ; but ever since it has been spelt right, it has been uttered with equal impropriety. SIEEVENS.

Cal.

Cal. Thou shalt be lord of it, and I'll serve thee.

Ste. How now shall this be compass'd? Canst thou bring me to the party?

Cal. Yea, yea, my lord; I'll yield him thee asleep, Where thou may'st knock a nail into his head.

Ari. Thou ly'st, thou canst not.

Cal. 'What a py'd ninny's this? Thou scurvy patch!—

I do beseech thy greatness, give him blows,
And take his bottle from him: when that's gone,
He shall drink nought but brine; for I'll not shew him
Where the quick freshes are.

Ste. Trinculo, run into no further danger: interrupt the monster one word further, and, by this hand, I'll turn my mercy out of doors, and make a stock-fish of thee.

Trin. Why, what did I? I did nothing; I'll go further off.

Ste. Didst thou not say, he ly'd?

Ari. Thou ly'st.

Ste. Do I so? take thou that.

[Beats him.]

As you like this, give me the lie another time.

'What a py'd ninny's this?—] This line should certainly be given to Stephano. Py'd ninny alludes to the striped coat worn by fools, of which Caliban could have no knowledge. Trinculo had before been reprimanded and threatened by Stephano for giving Caliban the lie, he is now supposed to repeat his offence; upon which Stephano cries out,

What a py'd ninny's this? Thou scurvy patch!—

Caliban, now seeing his master in the mood that he wished, instigates him to vengeance:

I do beseech thy greatness, give him blows, JOHNSON.

- It should be remember'd that Trinculo is no sailor, but a jester, and is so called in the ancient dramatis personæ; he therefore wears the party-colour'd dress of one of these characters. See fig. XII. in the plate annexed to the first part of K. Henry IV. and Mr. Toller's explanation of it.

So in the Devil's Law Case, 1623:

"Unless I wear a py'd fool's coat."

Again in the prologue to If this be not a good play, the devil is in it, 1612, by Decker:

"Pied and bold ideots durst not then sit kissing

"A muse's cheek." STEEVENS.

Trin. I did not give thee the lie :—Out o' your wits, and hearing too?—A pox of your bottle ! this can sack, and drinking do.—A murrain on your monster, and the devil take your fingers !

Cal. Ha, ha, ha !

Ste. Now, forward with your tale. Pr'ythee stand further off.

Cal. Beat him enough : after a little time, I'll beat him too.

Ste. Stand further.—Come, proceed.

Cal. Why, as I told thee, 'tis a custom with him I' the afternoon to sleep : there thou may'st brain him, Having first seiz'd his books ; or with a log Batter his skull, or paunch him with a stake, Or cut his wezand with thy knife : ' Remember, First to possess his books : for without them He's but a sot, as I am ; nor hath not One spirit to command : They all do hate him, As rootedly as I : Burn but his books ; He has brave utensils (for so he calls them) Which, when he has an house, he'll deck withal. And that most deeply to consider, is The beauty of his daughter ; he himself Calls her, a non-pareil : I never saw a woman, But only Sycorax my dam, and she ; But she as far surpasses Sycorax, As greatest does least.

Ste. Is it so brave a lass ?

Cal. Ay, lord ; she will become thy bed, I warrant, And bring thee forth brave brood.

Ste. Monster, I will kill this man : his daughter and I will be king and queen ; (save our graces !) and Trinculo and thyself shall be vice-roys :—Dost thou like the plot, Trinculo ?

7 ——— Remember,

[First to possess his books, &c.] So in Milton's Masque :

" Oh, ye mistook ; ye should have snatch'd his wand,

" And bound him fast ; without his rod revers'd,

" And backward mutterings of dissembling power,"

" We cannot free the lady." — STEEVENS.

Trin.

Trin. Excellent.

Ste. Give me thy hand; I am sorry I beat thee: but, while thou liv'st, keep a good tongue in thy head.

Cal. Within this half hour will he be asleep; Wilt thou destroy him then?

Ste. Ay, on mine honour.

Ari. This will I tell my master.

Cal. Thou mak'st me merry: I am full of pleasure; Let us be jocund: * Will you troul the catch, You taught me but while-ere?

Ste. At thy request, monster, I will do reason, any reason: Come on, Trinculo, let us sing. [Sings, Flout 'em, and skout 'em; and skout 'em, and flout 'em; Thought is free.]

Cal. That's not the tune. [Ariel plays the tune on

Ste. What is this same? [a tabor and pipe.]

Trin. This is the tune of our catch, play'd by the picture of no-body.

Ste. If thou be'st a man, shew thyself in thy likeness: if thou be'st a devil, take't as thou list.

Trin. O, forgive me my fins!

Ste. He that dies, pays all debts: I defy thee:— Mercy upon us!

Cal. Art thou affeard?

* —Will you troul the catch,] Ben Jonson uses the word in Every Man in his Humour:

"If he read this with patience, I'll troul ballads."
So Milton:

"To dress, to troul the tongue," &c.

Again in the Cobler's Prophecy, 1594:

"A fellow that will troul it off with tongue."

"Faith, you shall hear me troll it after my fashion."

To troul a catch, I suppose, is to dismiss it trippingly from the tongue.

STEEVENS.

* —affeard.] Thus the old copy. To affear, is an obsolete verb with the same meaning as to affray.

So in the Shipman's Tale of Chaucer, v. 13330:

"This wif was not aferde ne affraide."

Between aferde and affraide, in the time of Chaucer, there might have been some nice distinction which is at present lost.

STEEVENS.

Ste.

Ste. No, monster, not I.

Cal. Be not affeard ; the isle is full of noises, Sounds, and sweet airs, that give delight, and hurt
not.

Sometimes a thousand twangling instruments
Will hum about mine ears ; and sometimes voices,
That, if I then had wak'd after long sleep,
Will make me sleep again : and then, in dreaming,
The clouds, methought, would open, and shew riches
Ready to drop upon me ; that, when I wak'd,
I cry'd to dream again.

Ste. This will prove a brave kingdom to me, where I shall have my music for nothing.

Cal. When Prospero is destroy'd.

Ste. That shall be by and by : I remember the story.

Trin. The sound is going away ; let's follow it,
And after, do our work.

Ste. Lead, monster ; we'll follow.—I wou'd, I could see this taborer : he lays it on.

Trin. Wilt come ? I'll follow, Stephano, [Exeunt.]

S C E N E III.

Changes to another part of the island.

Enter Alonso, Sebastian, Anthonio, Gonzalo, Adrian, Francisco, &c.

Gon. ' By'r lakin, I can go no further, Sir ;
My old bones ache : here's a maze trod, indeed,
Through forth-rights, and meanders ! by your patience,
I needs must rest me.

Alon. Old lord, I cannot blame thee,
Who am myself attach'd with weariness,
To the dulling of my spirits : sit down, and rest.
Even here I will put off my hope, and keep it
No longer for my flatterer : he is drown'd,

' By'r lakin,—] i. e. The diminutive only of our lady,
i. e. ladykin. STEEVENS.

Whom

Whom thus we stray to find ; and the sea mocks
Our frustrate search on land : Well, let him go.

Ant. [Afide to Sebastian.] I am right glad that he's so out of hope.

Do not, for one repulse, forego the purpose
That you resolv'd to effect.

Seb. The next advantage
Will we take thoroughly.

Ant. Let it be to-night ;
For, now they are oppress'd with travel, they
Will not, nor cannot, use such vigilance,
As when they are fresh.

Seb. I say, to-night : no more.

Solemn and strange musick ; and Prospero on the top, invisible. Enter several strange shapes, bringing in a banquet ; they dance about it with gentle actions of salutation ; and, inviting the king, &c. to eat, they depart.

Alon. What harmony is this ? my good friends, hark !

Gon. Marvellous sweet musick !

Alon. Give us kind keepers, heavens ! What were these ?

Seb. ² A living drollery : Now I will believe,
That there are unicorns ; that, in Arabia
There is one tree, the phoenix' throne ³ ; one phoenix
At this hour reigning there.

² A living drollery : —] Shows, called drolleries, were in Shakespeare's time performed by puppets only. From these our modern drolls, exhibited at fairs, &c. took their name.

³ So in B. and Fletcher's Valentinian :

“ I had rather make a drollery till thirty.” STEEVENS.

³ — one tree the phoenix throne ;] For this idea, our author might have been indebted to Phil. Holland's Translation of Pliny, b. XIII. chap. 4. “ I myself verily have heard strange things
“ of this kind of tree ; and namely in regard of the bird Phoenix,
“ which is supposed to have taken that name of this date tree ; “ [called in Greek φœnix] for it was assured unto me, that the “ said bird died with that tree, and revived of itselfe as the tree “ sprung again.” STEEVENS.

Ant. I'll believe both ;
And what does else want credit, come to me,
And I'll be sworn 'tis true : Travellers ne'er did lie,
Though fools at home condemn 'em.

Gon. If in Naples
I should report this now, would they believe me ?
If I should say, I saw such islanders,
(For, certes⁴, these are people of the island)
Who though they are of monstrous shape, yet, note,
Their manners are more gentle, kind, than of
Our human generation you shall find Many, nay, almost any.

Pro. Honest lord,
Thou hast said well ; for some of you there present,
Are worse than devils. [Aside.

Alon. I cannot too much muse⁵,
Such shapes, such gesture, and such sound, expressing (Although they want the use of tongue) a kind
Of excellent dumb discourse.

Pro. ⁶ Praise in departing. [Aside.

Fran. They vanish'd strangely.

Seb. No matter, since

⁴ Por certes, &c.] Certes is an obsolete word, signifying certainly,
So in Othello:

“ ——— certes, says he,

“ I have already chose my officer.” STEEVENS.

⁵ ——— too much muse.] To muse, in ancient language, is to admire.

So in Macbeth:

“ Do not muse at me, my most worthy friends.”

STEEVENS.

⁶ Praise in departing.] i. e. Do not praise your entertainment too soon, lest you should have reason to retract your commendation.
It is a proverbial saying.

So in the Two angry Women of Abington, 1599:

“ And so she doth ; but praise your luck at parting.”

Again in Tom Tyler and his Wife, 1598:

“ Now praise at thy parting.”

Stephen Gosson, in his pamphlet entitled, Playes confuted in five Actions, &c. (no date) acknowledges himself to have been the author of a morality called, Praise at Parting. STEEVENS.

They

Alon. I will stand to, and feed,
Although my last; no matter, since I feel
The best is past:—Brother, my lord the duke,
Stand to, and do as we.

Thunder and lightning. * Enter Ariel like a harpy; claps his wings upon the table, and, with a quaint device, the banquet vanishes.

Ari. You are three men of sin, whom destiny,
(That hath to instrument this lower world;
And what is in't) the never-furfeited sea
Hath caused to belch up; and on this island
Where man doth not inhabit; you 'mongst men
Being most unfit to live. I have made you mad;
And even with such like valour men hang and drown
Their proper selves. [Alonso, Sebastian, and the rest
Ye fools! I and my fellows [draw their swords.
Are ministers of fate; the elements
Of whom your swords are temper'd, may as well
Wound the loud winds, or with bemock't-at stabs
Kill the still-closing waters, as diminish

To this instance I may add another from The Ball, a comedy, by Chapman and Shirley, 1639:

“ I did most politicly disburse my fums .

“ To have five for one at my return from Venice.”

Again in Amends for Ladies, 1639:

“ I would I had put out something upon my return;

“ I had as lieve be at the Bermoothes.”

Again in Brome's Antipodes, 1638:

“ Like the reports of those, that beggingly .

“ Have put out on returns from Edingbrough.”

STEEVENS.

* Enter Ariel like a harpy, &c.] Milton's Pap. Reg. b. II.

“ with that

“ Both table and provisions vanish quite,

“ With found of harpies wings, and talons heard.”

“ At subitæ horrifco lapsu de montibus adsunt

“ Harpyiæ, & magnis quatiunt clangoribus alas

“ Diripiuntque dapes.” Virg. Æn. iii. STEEVENS.

* That bath to instrument this lower world, &c.] i. e. that makes use of this world, and every thing in it, as its instruments to bring about its ends. STEEVENS.

• • One

' One dowle that's in my plume ; my fellow-ministers
 Are like invulnerable : if you could hurt,
 Your swords are now too massy for your strengths,
 And will not be up-lifted : But remember,
 (For that's my business to you) that you three
 From Milan did supplant good Prospero ;
 Expos'd unto the sea, which hath requit it,
 Him, and his innocent child : for which foul deed
 The powers, delaying not forgetting, have Incens'd the seas and shores, yea, all the creatures,
 Against your peace : Thee, of thy son, Alonso,
 They have bereft ; and do pronounce by me,
 Ling'ring perdition (worse than any death
 Can be at once) shall step by step attend
 You, and your ways ; whose wraths to guard you from (Which here, in this most desolate isle, else falls

³ One dowle that's in my plume ;] The old copy exhibits the passage thus :

One dowle that's in my plumbe.—

Bailey, in his Dictionary, says, that dowle is a feather, or rather the single particles of the down.

Since the first appearance of this edition, my very industrious and learned correspondent, Mr. Tollet, of Betley, in Staffordshire, has enabled me to retract a too hasty censure on Bailey, to whom we were long indebted for our only English Dictionary. In a small book, entitled Humane Industry: or, A History of most Manual Arts, printed in 1661, page 93, is the following passage :

“ The wool-bearing trees in Æthiopia, which Virgil speaks of,
 “ and the Eriophori Arbores in Theophrastus, are not such trees
 “ as have a certain wool or DOWL upon the outside of them, as
 “ the small cotton, but short trees that bear a ball upon the top, “ pregnant with wool, which the Syrians call Cott, the Grecians
 “ Gossypium, the Italians Bombagio, and we Bombase.”—

“ There is a certain shell-fish in the sea, called Pinna, that bears
 “ a mossy DOWL, or wool, whereof cloth was spun and made.”
 —Again, page 95 : “ Trichitis, or the hayrie stone, by some “ Greek authors, and Alumen plumaceum, or downy alum, by
 “ the Latinists: this hair or DOWL is spun into thread, and “ weaved into cloth.” I have since discovered the same word in The Ploughman's Tale, attributed to Chaucer, v. 3202.

“ And swore by cock is herte and blode,

“ He would tere him every doule.” STEEVENS.

Upon

Upon your heads) is nothing, but heart's sorrow,
And a ⁴ clear life ensuing.

He vanishes in thunder : then to soft musick, enter the shapes again, and dance with mops and mowes⁵, and carry out the table.

Pro. [Aside.] Bravely the figure of this harpy hast
thou

Perform'd, my Ariel; a grace it had, devouring ;
Of my instruction hast thou nothing 'bated,
In what thou hadst to say : so, ⁶ with good life,
And observation strange, my meaner ministers

⁴ —clear life—] Pure, blameless, innocent. JOHNSON.
So in Timon : “ —roots you clear heavens.” STEEVENS.

⁵ —with mops and mowes.]
So in K. Lear,

“ —and Flibbertigibbet of mopping and mowing.”

To mop and to mowe seem to have the same meaning, i. e. to make mouths or wry faces. STEEVENS.

⁶ —with good life,] This seems a corruption. I know not in what sense life can here be used, unless for alacrity, liveliness, vigour; and in this sense the expression is harsh. Perhaps we may read,—with good list, with good will, with sincere zeal for my service. I should have proposed,—with good lief, in the same sense, but that I cannot find lief to be a substantive. With good life may however mean, with exact presentation of their several characters, with observation strange of their particular and distinct parts. So we say, he acted to the life. JOHNSON.

Thus in the 6th canto of the Barons' Wars, by Drayton :

“ Done for the last with such exceeding life

“ As art therein with nature seem'd at strife.”

Good life, however, in Twelfth Night, seems to be used for innocent jollity, as we now say a bon vivant : “ Would you (says “ the Clown) have a love song, or a song of good life?” Sir Toby answers, “ A love song, a love song;” Ay, ay, (replies Sir Andrew) “ I care not for good life.” It is plain, from the character of the last speaker, that he was meant to mistake the sense in which good life is used by the Clown. It may therefore, in the Tempest, mean honest alacrity, or cheerfulness.

Life seems to be used in the chorus to the fifth act of K. Henry V. with some meaning like that wanted to explain the approbation of Prospero :

“ Which cannot in their huge and proper life

“ Be here presented.” STEEVENS.

• Their

Their several kinds have done: my high charms work,
And these; mine enemies, are all knit up
In their distractions: they now are in my power;
And in these fits I leave them, whilst I visit
Young Ferdinand (whom they suppose is drown'd)
And his and my lov'd darling.

[Exit Prospero from above.]

Gon. I'the name of something holy, fir, why stand you
In this strange stare?

Alon. O, it is monstrous! monstrous!
Methought, the billows spoke, and told me of it;
The winds did sing it to me; and the thunder,
That deep and dreadful organ-pipe, pronounc'd
The name of Prosper; it did ⁷ bafs my trespasss.
Therefore my son i'the ooze is bedded; and
I'll seek him deeper than e'er plummet founded,
And with him there lie mudded. [Exit.]

Seb. But one fiend at a time,
I'll fight their legions o'er.

Ant. I'll be thy second. [Exeunt.]

Gon. All three of them are desperate; their great guilt,

* Like poison given to work a great time after,
Now 'gins to bite the spirits:—I do beseech you
That are of suppler joints, follow them swiftly,
And hinder them from what this ecstasy⁹
May now provoke them to.

Adri. Follow, I pray you. [Exeunt.]

⁷ — bafs my trespasss.] The deep pipe told it me in a rough bafs found. JOHNSON.

So in Spenser's Faery Queen, B. II. c. 12 :

“ — the rolling sea resounding soft,

“ In his big bafe them fitly answered.” STEEVENS.

* Like poison given, &c.] The natives of Africa have been supposed to be possessed of the secret how to temper poisons with such art as not to operate till several years after they were administered, and were then as certain in their effect, as they were subtle in their preparation. STEEVENS.

⁹ — this ecstasy] Ecstasy meant not anciently, as at present, rapturous pleasure, but alienation of mind. Mr. Locke has not in elegantly stiled it dreaming with our eyes open. STEEVENS.

A C T IV. S C E N E I.

Prospero's cell.Enter Prospero, Ferdinand, and Miranda.

Pro. If I have too austere puniſh'd you,
Your compenſation makes amends; for I
Have given you here 'a third of mine own life,

Or

* ———a third of mine own life,] Thus all the impreſſions in general; but why is the only a third of his own life? He had no wife living, nor any other child, to rob her of a ſhare in his affection: ſo that we may reckon her at leaſt half of himſelf. Nor could he intend, that he loved himſelf twice as much as he did her; for he immediately ſubjoins, that it was ſhe for whom he liv'd. In Othello, when Iago alarms the ſenator with the loſs of his daughter, he tells him:

“Your heart is burſt, you have loſt half your ſoul.”

And dimidium animæ meæ was the current language with the Latines on ſuch occaſions. THEOBALD.

In conſequence of this ratiocination Mr. Theobald printed the text, a thread of my own life. I have reſtored the ancient reading. Prospero, in his reaſon ſubjoined why he calls her the third of his life, ſeems to allude to ſome logical diſtinction of cauſes, making her the final cauſe. JOHNSON.

Though this conjecture be very ingenious, I cannot think the poet had any ſuch idea in his mind. The word thread was formerly ſpelt third; as appears from the following paſſage:

“Long maiſt thou live, and when the ſiſters ſhall decree

“To cut in twaine the twiſted third of life,

“Then let him die, &c.”

See comedy of Mucedorus, 1619. ſignat. c. 3. HAWKINS.

“A third of my own life” is a ſibre or a part of my own life. Prospero conſiders himſelf as the ſtock or parent-tree, and his daughter as a ſibre or portion of himſelf, and for whoſe benefit he himſelf lives. In this ſenſe the word is uſed in Markham's Engliſh Huſbandman, edit. 1635. p. 146: “Cut off all the maine rootes, within half a foot of the tree, only the ſmall thriddes or twiſt “remain you ſhall not cut at all.” Again, ibid. “Every “branch and thrid of the root.” This is evidently the ſame word as thread, which is likewiſe ſpelt thrid by lord Bacon.

TOLLET.

The

Or that for which I live; whom once again
 I tender to thy hand: all thy vexations
 Were but my trials of thy love, and thou
 Hast strangely stood the test: here, afore Heaven,
 I ratify this my rich gift: o Ferdinand,
 Do not smile at me, that I boast her off,
 For thou shalt find she will outstrip all praise,
 And make it halt behind her.

Fer. I do believe it,
 Against an oracle.

Pro. Then, as my gift, and thine own acquisition Worthily purchas'd, take my daughter: But
 If thou dost break her virgin knot⁴, before
 All sanctimonious ceremonies may
 With full and holy rite be minister'd,
 No sweet aspersion⁵ shall the Heavens let fall
 To make this contract grow; but barren hate,
 Sour-cy'd disdain, and discord, shall bestrew
 The union of your bed with weeds so loathly,

The late Mr. Hawkins has properly observed that the word thread was anciently spelt third. So in Lingua, &c. 1607; and I could furnish many more instances:

“For as a subtle spider closely sitting
 “In center of her web that spreadeth round,
 “If the least fly but touch the smallest third,
 “She feels it instantly.”

The following quotation, however, should seem to place the meaning beyond all dispute. In Acolastus, a comedy, 1529, is this passage:

“—one of worldly shame's children, of his countenance,
 “and THREDE of his body.” STEEVENS.

²—strangely stood the test:] Strangely is used by way of commendation, merveilleusement, to a wonder; the sense is the same in the foregoing scene, with observation strange. JOHNSON.

³—my gift,—] My guest, first folio. JOHNSON.

⁴ her virgin knot,—] The same expression occurs in Pericles Prince of Tyre, 1609:

“Untide I still my virgin knot will keepe.” STEEVENS.

⁵ No sweet aspersion] Aspersion is here used in its primitive sense of sprinkling. At present it is expressive only of calumny and detraction. STEEVENS.

That you shall hate it both : therefore take heed,
As Hymen's lamps shall light you.

Fer. As I hope

For quiet days, fair issue, and long life,
With such love as 'tis now ; the murkiest den,
The most opportune place, the strong'st suggestion
Our worser Genius can, shall never melt
Mine honour into lust ; to take away
The edge of that day's celebration,
When I shall think, or Phœbus' steeds are founde'r'd,
Or night kept chain'd below.

Pro. Fairly spoke :

Sit then, and talk with her, she is 'thine own.—
What, Ariel ; my industrious servant Ariel !—

Enter Ariel.

Ari. What would my potent master ? here I am.

Pro. Thou and thy meaner fellows, your last service
Did worthily perform ; and I must use you
In such another trick : go, bring ⁶ the rabble,
O'er whom I give thee power, here, to this place :
Incite them to quick motion ; for I must Bestow upon the eyes of this young couple
Some vanity of mine art ; it is my promise,
And they expect it from me.

Ari. Presently ?

Pro. Ay, with a twink.

Ari. Before you can say, ' Come, and go,'
And breathe twice ; and cry, so, so ;
Each one, tripping on his toe,
Will be here with mop and moe :
Do you love me, master ? no.

⁶ —the rabble,] The crew of meaner spirits. JOHNSON.

⁷ —Come, and go, —

Each one, tripping on his toe,] So Milton :

" Come, and trip it as you go

" On the light fantastic toe." STEEVENS.

Pro.

Pro. Dearly, my delicate Ariel : Do not approach,
Till thou dost hear me call.

Ari. Well, I conceive. [Exit.

Pro. Look, thou be true ; do not give dalliance
Too much the rein ; the strongest oaths are straw
To the fire i'the blood : be more abstemious,
Or else, good night, your vow !

Fer. I warrant you, fir ;
The white, cold, virgin-snow upon my heart
Abates the ardour of my liver.

Pro. Well.—

Now come, my Ariel ; ⁸ bring a corollary,
Rather than want a spirit ; appear, and pertly.—
⁹ No tongue ; all eyes ; be silent. [Soft music,

A Masque. Enter Iris.

Iris. Ceres, most bounteous lady, thy rich leas
Of wheat, rye, barley, vetches, oats, and pease ;
Thy turfy mountains, where live nibbling sheep,
And flat meads ¹ thatch'd with flower, them to keep ;

⁸ —bring a corollary,] That is, bring more than are sufficient, rather than fail for want of numbers. Corollary means surplus. Corolair, Fr. See Cotgrave's Dictionary. STEEVENS.

⁹ No tongue ; —] Those who are present at incantations are obliged to be strictly silent, “ else,” as we are afterwards told, “ the spell is marred.” JOHNSON.

¹ —thatch'd with flower,—] Stover, from Esflovers, a law word, signifies an allowance in food or other necessities of life. It is here used for provision in general for animals.

From the following instance, flower should mean the pointed blades of grass or corn :

“ Beard, be confin'd to neatness, that no hair

“ May flower up to prick my mistress' lip

“ More rude than bristles of a porcupine.”

Love's Sacrifice, 1633.

The word occurs again in the 25th song of Drayton's Polyolbion :

“ To draw out sedge and reed, for thatch and flower fit.”

Again in his Muse's Elyzium :

“ Their brows and flower waxing thin and scant.”

STEEVENS.

¹ Thy banks with pionied, and twilled brims,
Which spongy April at thy hest betrimms,
To make cold nymphs chaste crowns; ² and thy broom groves,
Whose shadow the dismissed batchelor loves,

² Thy banks with pionied, and twilled brims,] The old edition reads pionied and twilled brims, which gave rise to Mr. Holt's conjecture, that the poet originally wrote, — with pionied and tilled brims.

Spenser and the author of Muleasses the Turk, a tragedy, 1610, use pioning for digging. It is not therefore difficult to find a meaning for the word as it stands in the old copy; and remove a letter from twilled and it leaves us tilled. I am yet, however, in doubt whether we ought not to read killed brims, for Pliny, b. XXVI. ch. x. mentions the water-lilly as a preserver of chastity; and says, elsewhere, that the Pæony medetur Faunorum in Quiete Ludibriis, &c. In the Arraignment of Paris, 1584, are mentioned

“The watry flow'rs, and lillies of the banks.”

In the 20th song of Drayton's Polyolbion, the Naiades are represented as making chaplets with all the tribe of aquatic flowers; and Mr. Tollet informs me that Lyte's Herbal says “one kind of “peonie is called by some, maiden or virgin peonie.”

In Ovid's Banquet of Sense, by Chapman, 1595, I met with the following stanza, in which twill-pants are enumerated among flowers:

“White and red jasmines, merry, melliphill,

“Fair crown-imperial, emperor of flowers,

“Immortal amaranth, white aphroditill,

“And cup-like twill-pants strew'd in Bacchus bowers.”

If twill be the ancient name of any flower, the present reading, pionied and twilled may uncontrovertibly stand. STEEVENS.

— and thy broom groves,] A grove of broom, I believe, was never heard of, as it is a low shrub and not a tree. Hammer reads brown groves. STEEVENS.

Disappointed lovers are still said to wear the willow, and in these lines broom groves are assigned to that unfortunate tribe for a retreat. This may allude to some old custom. We still say that a husband hangs out the broom when his wife goes from home for a short time; and on such occasions a broom besom has been exhibited as a signal that the house was freed from uxorial restraint, and where the master might be considered as a temporary bachelor. Broom grove may signify broom bushes. See Grava in Cowel's Law Dict. TOLLET.

Being last-lorn⁴; thy pole-clipt vineyard⁵;
 And thy sea-marge, steril, and rocky-hard,
 Where thou thyself dost air; The queen o' the sky,
 Whose watery arch, and messenger, am I,
 Bids thee leave these; and with her sovereign grace,
 Here on this grass-plot, in this very place,
 To come and sport: her peacocks fly amain;
 Approach, rich Ceres, her to entertain.

Enter Ceres.

Cer. Hail; many-colour'd messenger, that ne'er
 Dost disobey the wife of Jupiter;
 Who, with thy saffron wings, upon my flowers
 Diffusest honey drops, refreshing showers;
 And with each end of thy blue bow dost crown
⁶ My bosky acres, and my unshrub'd down,
 Rich scarf to my proud earth; Why hath thy queen
 Summon'd me hither, ⁷ to this short-grass'd green?

Iris. A contract of true love to celebrate;
 And some donation freely to estate
 On the bless'd lovers.

Cer. Tell me, heavenly bow,
 If Venus, or her son, as thou dost know,
 Do now attend the queen? since they did plot
 Them eans, that dusky Dis my daughter got,

⁴ Being last-lorn;] Last-lorn is forsaken of his mistress.
 So Spenser:

“Who after that he had fair Una lorn.” STEEVENS.

⁵ — thy pole-clipt vineyard,] To clip is to twine round or embrace. The poles are clipt or embraced by the vines. STEEVENS.

⁶ My bosky acres, &c.] Bosky is woody. Bosquet, Fr. So Milton:

“And every bosky bourn from side to side.”

Again in K. Edward I. 1599:

“Hale him from hence, and in this bosky wood

“Bury his corps.” STEEVENS.

⁷ — to this short-grass'd green?] The old copy reads short-graz'd green. Short-graz'd green means grazed so as to be short.

STEEVENS.

Her and her blind boy's scandal'd company
I have forsworn.

Iris. Of her society

Be not afraid ; I met her deity

Cutting the clouds towards Paphos ; and her son
Dove-drawn with her : here thought they to have done
Some wanton charm upon this man and maid,
Whose vows are, that no bed-rite shall be paid
Till Hymen's torch be lighted : but in vain ;
Mars's hot minion is return'd again ;
Her waspish-headed son has broke his arrows,
Swears he will shoot no more, but play with sparrows,
And be a boy right out.

Cer. * High queen of state,
Great Juno comes ; I know her by her gait.

Enter Juno.

Jun. How does my bounteous sister ? Go with me,
To bless this twain, that they may prosperous be,
And honour'd in their issue.

Jun. Honour, riches, marriage-blessing,
Long continuance, and increasing,

* High queen of state,] Mr. Whalley thinks this passage in
The Tempest :

High queen of state,

Great Juno comes ; I know her by her gait,

a remarkable instance of Shakespeare's knowledge of ancient poetic story ; and that the hint was furnished by the Dirum incedo Regina of Virgil.

John Taylor, the water-poet, declares, that he never learned his Accidence, and that Latin and French were to him Heathen Greek ; yet by the help of Mr. Whalley's argument, I will prove him a learned man, in spite of every thing he may say to the contrary : for thus he makes a gallant address his lady ; " Most " inestimable magazine of beauty ! in whom the port and majesty
" of Juno, the wisdom of Jove's braine-bred girl, and the feature of Cythera, have their domestical habitation." FARMER.
So in The Arraignment of Paris, 1584 :

" First statelie Juno, with her porte and grace."

STEEVENS.

Hourly

Hourly joys be still upon you!

Juno sings her blessings on you.

Cer. *'Earth's increase, and foison plenty';
Barns, and garner, never empty;
Vines, with clust'ring bunches growing;
Plants, with goodly burden bowing;
Spring come to you, at the farthest,
In the very end of harvest!
Scarcity, and want, shall shun you;
Ceres' blessing so is on you.*

Fer. This is a most majestic vision, and 'Harmonious charmingly: May I be bold
To think these spirits?

Pro. Spirits, which by mine art
I have from their confines call'd to enact
My present fancies.

Fer. Let me live here ever;
So rare a wonder'd father, and a wife,
Make this place paradise.

Pro. Sweet now, silence:
Juno, and Ceres, whisper seriously;

'Earth's increase, —] All the editions, that I have ever seen, concur in placing this whole sonnet to Juno; but very absurdly, in my opinion. I believe every accurate reader, who is acquainted with poetical history, and the distinct offices of these two goddesses, and who then seriously reads over our author's lines, will agree with me, that Ceres's name ought to have been placed where I have now prefixed it. THEOBALD.

—foison plenty;] i. e. plenty to the utmost abundance;
foison signifying plenty.

So in Adam Dawg's poem of the Life of Alexander;

"All the innes of the ton

"Hadden litel foyson," STEEVENS.

'Harmonious charmingly: —] Mr. Edwards would read,

Harmonious charming lay: —

For though (says he) the benediction is sung by two goddesses, it is yet but one lay or hymn. I believe this passage appears as it was written by the poet, who, for the sake of the verse, made the words change places; and then the meaning is sufficiently obvious. STEEVENS.

There's

There's something else to do : hush, and be mute,
Or else our spell is marr'd.

[Juno and Ceres whisper, and send Iris on employment.]

Iris. You nymphs, call'd Naiads, of the ³ wandering brooks,

With your sedg'd crowns, and ever harmless looks,

* Leave your crisp channels, and on this green land

Answer your summons ; Juno does command :

Come, temperate nymphs, and help to celebrate

A contract of true love ; be not too late.

Enter certain nymphs.

You sun-burn'd fickle-men, of August weary,

Come hither from the furrow, and be merry ;

Make holy-day : your rye-straw hats put on,

And these fresh nymphs encounter every one

In country footing.

Enter certain reapers, properly habited : they join with the nymphs in a graceful dance ; towards the end whereof Prospero starts suddenly, and speaks ; after which, to a strange, hollow, and confused noise, they vanish heavily.

Pro. [Aside.] I had forgot that foul conspiracy

Of the beast Caliban, and his confederates,

Against my life ; the minute of their plot

Is almost come.— [To the spirits.] Well done ;—

avoid ;—no more,

³ —wandering brooks,] The modern editors read winding brooks. The old copy—windring. I suppose we should read wandring, as it is here printed. STEEVENS.

* Leave your crisp channels,—] Crisp, i. e. curling, winding. Lat. crispus. So Hen. IV. part 1, act I. sc. iv. Hotspur speaking of the river Severn :

“ And hid his crisped head in the hollow bank.”

Crisp, however, may allude to the little wave or curl (as it is commonly called) that the gentlest wind occasions on the surface of waters. STEEVENS.

Fer. This is strange : your father's in some passion
That works him strongly.

Mira. Never till this day,
Saw I him touch'd with anger so distemper'd.

Pro. You do look, my son, in a mov'd fort,
As if you were dismay'd : be cheerful, sir :
Our revels now are ended : these our actors,
As I foretold you, were all spirits, and
Are melted into air, into thin air :
And, like the baseless fabrick of this vision,
The cloud-capt towers, the gorgeous palaces,
The solemn temples, the great globe itself,
Yea, all, which it inherit, shall dissolve ;
And, like this insubstantial pageant faded,
Leave not a rack behind : We are such stuff

As

⁵ And, like the baseless fabrick of this vision, &c.] The exact period at which this play was produced, is unknown : It was not, however, published before 1623. In the year 1603, the Tragedy of Darius, by Lord Sterline, made its appearance, and there I find the following passage :

“ Let greatness of her glassy scepters vaunt,
“ Not scepters, no, but reeds, soon bruis'd, soon broken ;
“ And let this worldly pomp our wits enchant,
“ All fades, and scarcely leaves behind a token.
“ Those golden palaces, those gorgeous halls,
“ With furniture superfluously fair,
“ Those stately courts, those sky-encount'ring walls,
“ Evanesce all like vapours in the air.”

Lord Sterline's play must have been written before the death of queen Elizabeth, (which happen'd on the 24th of March 1603) as it is dedicated to James VI. King of Scots.

Whoever should seek for this passage, (as here quoted from the 4to, 1603) in the folio edition, 1637, will be disappointed, as Lord Sterline made considerable changes in all his plays, after their first publication. STEEVENS.

⁶ Leave not a rack behind:—] “ The winds” (says lord Bacon) “ which move the clouds above, which we call the rack, and are “ not perceived below, pass without noise.”

The word is common to many authors contemporary with Shakespeare. So in the Faithful Shepherdess, by B. and Fletcher :

“ ——— shall I stray
“ In the middle air, and stay
“ The sailing rack.” ———

Again

As dreams are made on, and our little life
Is rounded with a sleep.—⁷ Sir, I am vex'd ;
Bear with my weakness ; my old brain is troubled :
Be not disturb'd with my infirmity :
If thou be pleas'd, retire into my cell,
And there repose ;⁸ a turn or two I'll walk,
To still my beating mind.

Fer. Mira. We wish your peace.

[Exeunt Fer. and Mira.

Again in David and Bethsabe, 1599 :

“ Beating the clouds into their swiftest rack.”

Again in the prologue to the Three Ladies of London, 1584 :

“ We list not ride the rolling rack that dims the chrysalis skies.”

Again in Shakespeare's 33d Sonnet :

“ Anon permits the basest clouds to ride

“ With ugly rack on his celestial face.”

Sir T. H. instead of rack, reads track, which may be supported by the following passage in the first scene of Timon of Athens :

“ But flies an eagle flight, bold, and forth on,

“ Leaving no track behind. STEEVENS.

⁷ ————Sir, I am vex'd ;

Bear with my weakness ; my old brain is troubled.] Prospero here discovers a great emotion of anger on his sudden recollection of Caliban's plot. This appears from the admirable reflection he makes on the insignificance of human things. For thinking men are never under greater depression of mind than when they moralize in this manner ; and yet, if we turn to the occasion of his disorder, it does not appear, at first view, to be a thing capable or moving one in Prospero's circumstances. The plot of a contemptible savage and two drunken sailors, all of whom he had absolutely in his power. There was then no apprehension of danger. But if we look more nearly into the case, we shall have reason to admire our author's wonderful knowledge of nature. There was something in it with which great minds are most deeply affected, and that is, the sense of ingratitude. He recalled to mind the obligations this Caliban lay under for the instructions he had given him, and the conveniences of life he had taught him to use. But these reflexions on Caliban's ingratitude would naturally recall to mind his brother's ; and then these two working together, were very capable of producing all the disorder of passion here represented.—That these two, who had received at his hands the two best gifts mortals are capable of, when rightly employed, regal power, and the use of reason ; that these, in return, should conspire against the life of the donor, would surely afflict a generous mind to its utmost bearing. WARBURTON.

Pro. Come with a thought :—I thank thee :—
Ariel, come.

Prospero comes forward from the cell; enter Ariel to him.

Ari. Thy thoughts I cleave to⁸: What's thy pleasure?

Pro. Spirit,
 We must prepare, ⁹ to meet with Caliban.

Ari. Ay, my commander : when I presented Ceres, I thought to have told thee of it; but I fear'd, Lest I might anger thee.

Pro. Say again, where didst thou leave these varlets?

Ari. I told you, sir, they were red hot with drinking;
 So full of valour, that they smote the air
 For breathing in their faces; beat the ground
 For kissing of their feet; yet always bending
 Towards their project : Then I beat my tabor,
 At which, like unback'd colts, they prick'd their ears,
 Advanc'd their eye-lids, lifted up their noses,

As

⁸ Thy thoughts I cleave to :] To cleave to is to unite with closely.
 So in Macbeth :

“ Like our strange garments cleave not to their mold.”
 Again—“ If you shall cleave to my consent.” STEEVENS.

⁹ —to meet with Caliban.] To meet with is to counteract; to play stratagem against stratagem.—The parson knows the temper of every one in his house, and accordingly either meets with their vices, or advances their virtues. HERBERT'S Country Parson.

JOHNSON.

So in Cynthia's Revenge, 1613 :

“ —You may meet

“ With her abusive malice, and exempt

“ Yourself from the suspicion of revenge.” STEEVENS.

—advanced their eye-lids, &c.] Thus Drayton, in his Court of Fairie of Hobgoblin caught in a Spell :

“ But once the circle got within,

“ The charms to work do straight begin,

“ And he was caught as in a gin :

“ For as he thus was busy,

“ A pain

Nurture can never stick⁴; on whom my pains,
 Humanely taken, all, all lost, quite lost;
 And as, with age, his body uglier grows,
 So his mind cankers: I will plague them all,
 Even to roaring:—Come, hang them on this line.
[Prospero remains invisible.]

Enter Ariel loaden with glistering apparel, &c. Enter Caliban, Stephano, and Trinculo, all wet.

Cal. Pray you, tread softly, that the blind mole may not
 Hear a foot fall: we now are near his cell.

Ste. Monster, your fairy, which, you say, is a harmless fairy, has done little better than play'd the ⁵ Jack with us.

Trin. Monster, I do smell all horse-piss; at which my nose is in great indignation.

Ste. So is mine. Do you hear, monster? If I should take a displeasure against you; look you—

Trin. Thou wert but a lost monster.

Cal. Good my lord, give me thy favour still:
 Be patient, for the prize I'll bring thee to Shall hood-wink this mischance: therefore, speak softly;
 All's hush'd as midnight yet.

Trin. Ay, but to lose our bottles in the pool,—

Ste. There is not only disgrace and dishonour in that, monster, but an infinite loss.

Trin. That's more to me than my wetting: Yet this is your harmless fairy, monster.

Ste. I will fetch off my bottle, though I be o'er ears for my labour.

Cal. Pr'ythee, my king, be quiet: See'st thou here,
 This is the mouth o' the cell; no noise, and enter:

⁴ Nurture can never stick; } Nurture is education. STEEVENS.

⁵ He has play'd Jack with a lantern] Has led us about like an ignis fatuus, by which travellers are decoyed into the mire.

Do that good mischief, which may make this island
Thine own for ever, and I, thy Caliban,
For aye thy foot-licker.

Ste. Give me thy hand : I do begin to have bloody thoughts.

Trin. O king Stephano ! o peer ! o worthy Stephano !

Look, what a wardrobe here is for thee !

Cal. Let it alone, thou fool ; it is but trash.

Trin. Oh, ho, monster ; ' we know what belongs to a frippery :—o, king Stephano !

Ste. Put off that gown, Trinculo ; by this hand,
I'll have that gown.

Trin. Thy grace shall have it.

Cal. The dropsy drown this fool ! what do you mean,

To doat thus on such luggage ? ' Let's along,

And

Trin. O king Stephano ! o peer ! o worthy Stephano !

Look, what a wardrobe here is for thee !] The humour of these lines consists in their being an allusion to an old celebrated ballad, which begins thus : King Stephen was a worthy peer—and celebrates that king's parsimony with regard to his wardrobe.—
There are two stanzas of this ballad in Othello. WAREBURYTON.

The old ballad is printed at large in The Reliques of Ancient Poetry, vol. i. PERCY.

'—we know what belongs to a frippery :—] A frippery was a shop where old cloaths were sold. Fripperie, Fr.

Beaumont and Fletcher use it in this sense, in Wit without Money, act II :

“ As if I were a running frippery.”

So in Monfieur de Olive, a comedy, by Chapman, 1606 : “ Passing yesterday by the frippery, I spied two of them hanging out at a stall with a gambrell thrust from shoulder to shoulder.”

The person who kept one of these shops, was called a fripper.
So again in Monfieur de Olive, 1606 :

“ Taylors, frippers, brokers.”

Again, ibid : “ What is your profession, I pray ?—Fripperie, my lord.”

Again : “ Farewell fripper, farewell petty broker.”

Stowe, in the life of Stowe, says, that these frippers lived in Birchin-lane and Cornhill. STEEVENS.

* First edit. Let's alone. JOHNSON.

Let's

And do the murder first: if he awake,
From toe to crown he'll fill our skin with pinches;
Make us strange stuff.

Ste. Be you quiet, monster.—Mistress line, is not this my jerkin? Now is the jerkin ' under the line: Now, jerkin, you are like to lose your hair, and prove a bald jerkin.

Trin. Do, do; We steal by line and level, and't like your grace.

Ste. I thank thee for that jest; here's a garment for't: wit shall not go unrewarded, while I am king of this country: Steal by line and level, is an excellent pass of pate; there's another garment for't.

Trin. Monster, come, ' put some lime upon your fingers, and away with the rest.

Cal. I will have none on't: we shall lose our time, And all be turn'd * to barnacles, or to apes With foreheads villainous low.

Ste.

Let's alone may mean—Let you and I only go to commit the murder, leaving Trinculo, who is so solicitous about the trash of dress, behind us. STEEVENS.

9 ——— under the line:] An allusion to what often happens to people who pass the line. The violent fevers, which they contract in that hot climate, make them lose their hair.

EDWARDS' MSS.

Perhaps the allusion is to a more indelicate disease than any peculiar to the equinoxial.

So in The Noble Soldier, 1632:

“ 'Tis hot going under the line there.”

Again, in Lady Alimony, 1659:

“ ——— Look to the clime

“ Where you inhabit; that's the torrid zone,

“ Yea, there goes the hair away.”

Shakespeare seems to design an equivocal between the equinoxial, and the girdle of a woman. STEEVENS.

1 ——— put some lime, &c.] That is, birdlime. JOHNSON.

2 ——— to barnacles, or to apes.] Skinner says barnacle is Anser Scoticus. The barnacle is a kind of shell-fish growing on the bottoms of ships, and which was anciently supposed, when broken off, to become one of these geese. Hall, in his Virgdemiarum, lib. iv. sat. 2. seems to favour this supposition:

Ste. Monster, lay to your fingers; help to bear this away, where my hogsthead of wine is, or I'll turn you out of my kingdom: go to, carry this.

Trin. And this.

Ste. Ay, and this.

³ A noise of hunters heard. Enter divers spirits in shape of hounds, hunting them about; Prospero and Ariel setting them on.

Pro. Hey, Mountain, hey!

Ari. Silver! there it goes, Silver!

Pro. Fury, Fury! there, Tyrant, there! hark, hark!——

[To Ariel.] Go, charge my goblins that they grind their joints

With dry convulsions; shorten up their sinews

“The Scottish barnacle, if I might choose,

“That of a worme doth waxe a winged goose,” &c.

So likewise Marston, in his Malecontent, 1604:

“——like your Scotch barnacle, now a block,

“Instantly a worm, and presently a great goose.”

“There are,” (says Gerard, in his Herbal, edit. 1597. pag^o 1391) “in the north parts of Scotland certaint trees, whereon do growe shell-fishes, &c. &c. which, falling into the water, do become fowls, whom we call barnakles; in the north of England brant geese; and in Lancashire tree geese,” &c.

This vulgar error deserves no serious confutation. Commend me, however, to Holinshed, (vol. I. p. 38.) who declares himself to have seen the feathers of these barnacles “hang out of the shell at least two inches.” And in the 27th song of Drayton's Polybion, the same account of their generation is given.

Again, in Valentinian, by B. and Fletcher:

“——not till barnacles

“Breed in my sides.” COLLINS.

³ A noise of hunters heard.——] Shakespeare might have had in view “Arthur's Chase, which many believe to be in France, and think that it is a kennel of black dogs followed by unknown huntsmen with an exceeding great sound of horns, as if it was a very hunting of some wild beast.” See a Treatise of Spectres translated from the French of Peter de Loier, and published in quarto, 1605. Dr. GRAY.

With

With aged cramps ; and more pinch-spotted make them,

Than pard, or cat o' mountain.

Ari. Hark, they roar.

Pro. Let them be hunted soundly : At this hour
Lie at my mercy all mine enemies :

Shortly shall all my labours end, and thou

Shalt have the air at freedom : for a little,

Follow, and do me service.

[Exeunt.]

A C T . V. S C E N E I.

Before the cell.

Enter Prospero in his magick robes, and Ariel.

Pro. Now does my project gather to a head :
My charms crack not ; my spirits obey ; * and time
Goes upright with his carriage. How's the day ?

Ari. On the sixth hour ; at which time, my lord,
You said our work should cease.

Pro. I did say so,
When first I rais'd the tempest. Say, my spirit,
How fares the king and his followers ?

Ari. Confin'd together
In the same fashion as you gave in charge ;
Just as you left them ; all prisoners, sir,
In the lime-grove which weather-fends your cell ;
They cannot budge, till your release. The king,
His brother, and yours, abide all three distracted ;
And the remainder mourning over them,
Brim-full of sorrow, and dismay ; but, chiefly,

* ——— and time

Goes upright with his carriage.—] Alluding to one carrying a burthen. This critical period of my life proceeds as I could wish.
Time brings forward all the expected events, without faltering under his burthen. STEEVENS.

The sole drift of my purpose doth extend
Not a frown further : Go, release them, Ariel ;
My charms I'll break, their senses I'll restore,
And they shall be themselves.

Ari. I'll fetch them, sir. [Exit.

Pro. ' Ye elves of hills, brooks, standing lakes, and groves ;

And ye, that on the sands * with printless foot
Do chase the ebbing Neptune, and do fly him,
When he comes back ; you demy-puppets, that
By moon-shine do the green four ringlets make,
Whereof the ewe not bites ; and you, whose pastime
Is to make midnight mushrooms ; that rejoice
To hear the solemn curfew ; by whose aid
' (Weak masters though ye be) I have be-dimm'd
The

* Ye elves of hills, of standing lakes, and groves ;] This speech Dr. Warburton rightly observes to be borrowed from Medea's in Ovid : and " it proves, says Mr. Holt, beyond contradiction, that Shakespeare was perfectly acquainted with the sentiments of the ancients on the subject of enchantments." The original lines are these :

" Auræque, & venti, montesque, amnesque, lacusque,
" Diique omnes nemorum, diique omnes noctis adeste."

The translation of which, by Golding, is by no means literal, and Shakespeare hath closely followed it :

" Ye ayres and winds ; ye elves of hills, of brookes, of
" woods alone ;

" Of standing lakes, and of the night, approche ye everych
" one." FARMER.

Ye elves of hills, &c.] Fairies and elves are frequently in the poets mentioned together, without any distinction of character that I can recollect. Keytler says that alp and alf, which is elf with the Suedes, and Englisch, equally signified a mountain, or a demon of the mountains. This seems to have been its original meaning ; but Somner's Dict. mentions elves or fairies of the mountains, of the woods, of the sea and fountains, without any distinction between elves and fairies. TOLLET.

* ——— with printless foot

Do chase the ebbing Neptune,—] So Milton in his Masque :

" Whilst from off the waters fleet,

" Thus I set my printless feet." STEEVENS.

* (Weak masters though ye be)—] The meaning of this passage may be ; Though you are but inferior masters of these supernatural powers,—

The noon-tide sun, call'd forth the mutinous winds,
 And 'twixt the green sea and the azur'd vault
 Set roaring war: to the dread rattling thunder
 Have I given fire, and rifted Jove's stout oak
 With his own bolt: the strong-bas'd promontory
 Have I made shake; and by the spurs pluck'd up
 The pine, and cedar: graves, at my command,
 Have wak'd their sleepers; op'd, and let them forth
 By my so potent art: But this rough magick
 I here abjure: and, when I have requir'd
 Some heavenly musick, (which even now I do)
 To work mine end upon their senses, that
 This airy charm is for, I'll break my staff,
 Bury it certain fathoms in the earth,
 And, deeper than did ever plummet sound,
 I'll drown my book. [Solemn musick.]

Re-enter Ariel: after him Alonso with a frantick gesture, attended by Gonzalo. Sebastian and Anthonio in like manner, attended by Adrian and Francisco. They all enter the circle which Prospero had made, and there stand charm'd; which Prospero observing, speaks.

A solemn air, and the best comforter
 To an unsettled fancy, cure thy brains,
 Now useless, boil'd within thy skull! there stand,
 For you are spell-stopp'd,—
 Holy Gonzalo, honourable man,
 Mine eyes, even sociable to the shew of thine,
 Fall fellowly drops,—The charm dissolves apace;
 And as the morning steals upon the night, powers,—though you possess them but in a low degree. Spenser uses the same kind of expression, b. III. cant. 8. st. 4.

“Where she (the witch) was wont her sprights to entertain,

“The masters of her art: there was she fain . . .

“To call them all in order to her aid.” STEEVENS.

—boil'd within thy skull!] So in the Midsummer Night's Dream:

“Lovers and madmen have such fitting brains, &c.”

STEEVENS.

Melting

Melting the darkness, so their rising senses
 Begin to chase the ignorant fumes that mantle
 Their clearer reason.—O good Gonzalo,
 My true preserver, and a loyal sir
 To him thou follow'st; I will pay thy graces
 Home, both in word and deed.—Most cruelly
 Didst thou, Alonso, use me and my daughter:
 Thy brother was a furtherer in the act;—
 Thou'rt pinch'd for't now, Sebastian.—Flesh and blood*,

You brother mine, that entertain'd ambition,
 Expell'd remorse, and nature; who, with Sebastian,
 (Whose inward pinches therefore are most strong)
 Would here have kill'd your king; I do forgive thee,
 Unnatural though thou art!—Their understanding
 Begins to swell; and the approaching tide
 Will shortly fill the reasonable shore,
 That now lies foul and muddy. Not one of them,
 That yet looks on me, or would know me:—Ariel,
 Fetch me the hat and rapier in my cell;—
 I will dis-case me, and myself present, [Exit Ariel.
 As I was sometime Milan:—quickly, spirit;
 Thou shalt e'er long be free.

Ariel enters singing, and helps to attire him.

Where the bee sucks, there suck I:

In a cowslip's bell I lie:

There I couch when owls do cry.

On the bat's back I do fly,

 After summer, merrily:*

Merrily, merrily, shall I live now,

Under the blossom that hangs on the bough.

Pro.

* Thou'rt pinch'd for't now, Sebastian:—Flesh and blood,] Thus the old copy: Theobald points the passage in a different manner, and perhaps rightly:

“Thou'rt pinch'd for't now, Sebastian, flesh and blood.

STEEVENS.

* After summer, merrily:] This is the reading of all the editions. Yet Mr. Theobald has substituted sun-set, because Ariel

Pro. Why, that's my dainty Ariel : I shall miss thee ;

But yet thou shalt have freedom : So, so, so.—
To the king's ship, invisible as thou art :

talks of riding on the bat in this expedition. An idle fancy. That circumstance is given only to design the time of night in which fairies travel. One would think the consideration of the circumstances should have set him right. Ariel was a spirit of great delicacy, bound by the charms of Prospero to a constant attendance on his occasions. So that he was confined to the island winter and summer. But the roughness of winter is represented by Shakespeare as disagreeable to fairies, and such like delicate spirits, who, on this account, constantly follow summer. Was not this then the most agreeable circumstance of Ariel's new-recovered liberty, that he could now avoid winter, and follow summer quite round the globe ? But to put the matter quite out of question, let us consider the meaning of this line :

There I couch when owls do cry.

Where ? in the cowslip's bell, and where the bee sucks, he tells us : this must needs be in summer. When ? when owls cry, and this is in winter :

“ When blood is nipp'd, and ways be foul,

“ Then nightly sings the staring owl.”

The Song of Winter in Love's Labour Lost.

The consequence is, that Ariel flies after summer. Yet the Oxford Editor has adopted this judicious emendation of Mr. Theobald. WARBURTON.

Ariel does not appear to have been confined to the island, summer and winter, as he was sometimes sent on so long an errand as to the Bermoothes. When he says, On the bat's back I do fly, &c. he speaks of his present situation only, nor triumphs in the idea of his future liberty, till the last couplet ;

Merrily, merrily, &c.

The bat is no bird of passage, and the expression is therefore probably used to signify, not that he pursues summer, but that after summer is past, he rides upon the soft down of a bat's back, which suits not improperly with the delicacy of his airy being.

Shakespeare, who, in his Midsummer Night's Dream, has placed the light of a glow-worm in its eyes, might, through the same ignorance of natural history, have supposed the bat to be a bird of passage. Owls cry not only in winter. It is well known that they are to the full as clamorous in summer ; and as a proof of it, Titania, in the Midsummer Night's Dream, the time of which is supposed to be May, commands her meries to—keep back the clamorous owl, that nightly hoots.— STEEVENS.

“ There

There shalt thou find the mariners asleep,
Under the hatches; the master, and the boatswain,
Being awake, enforce them to this place;
And presently, I prythee.

Ari. * I drink the air before me, and return
Or e'er your pulse twice beat. [Exit.]

Gon. All torment, trouble, wonder, and amazement

Inhabits here; Some heavenly power guide us
Out of this fearful country!

Pro. Behold, fir King,
The wrong'd duke of Milan, Prospero:
For more assurance that a living prince
Does now speak to thee, I embrace thy body;
And to thee, and thy company, I bid
A hearty welcome.

Alon. Whe'r thou be'st he, or no,
Or some enchanted trifle to abuse me,
As late I have been, I not know: thy pulse
Bears, as of flesh and blood; and, since I saw thee,
The affliction of my mind amends, with which,
I fear, a madness held me: this must crave
(An if this be at all) a most strange story.
⁶ Thy dukedom I resign; and do intreat,
Thou pardon me my wrongs:—But how should Prospero

Be living, and be here?

Pro. First, noble friend,
Let me embrace thine age; whose honour cannot
Be measur'd, or confin'd.

Gon. Whether this be,
Or be not, I'll not swear.

* To drink the air— is an expression of swiftness of the same kind as to devour the way in Henry IV. JOHNSON.

⁶ Thy dukedom I resign,—] The duchy of Milan being through the treachery of Anthonio made feudatory to the crown of Naples, Alonso promises to resign his claim of sovereignty for the future. STEEVENS.

Pro. You do yet taste
Some subtilties o' the isle, that will not let you Believe things certain :—Welcome, my friends all :—
But you, my brace of lords, were I so minded,

[Aside to Seb. and Ant.

I here could pluck his highness' frown upon you,
And justify you traitors ; at this time
I'll tell no tales.

Seb. The devil speaks in him.

[Aside.

Pro. No :—

For you, most wicked sir, whom to call brother
Would even infect my mouth, I do forgive
Thy rankest fault ; all of them ; and require
My dukedom of thee, which, perforce, I know,
Thou must restore.

Alon. If thou be'st Prospero,
Give us particulars of thy preservation :
How thou hast met us here, who three hours since⁶
Were wreck'd upon this shore ; where I have lost,
How sharp the point of this remembrance is !
My dear son Ferdinand.

Pro. ⁷ I am woe for't, sir.

Alon.

⁶ ——— who three hours since] The unity of time is most rigidly observed in this piece. The fable scarcely takes up a greater number of hours than are employed in the representation ; and from the very particular care which our author takes to point out this circumstance in so many other passages, as well as here, it should seem as if it were not accidental, but purposely designed to shew the admirers of Ben Jonson's art, and the cavillers of the time, that he too could write a play within all the strictest laws of regularity, when he chose to load himself with the critick's fetters.

The Boatswain marks the progress of the day again—which but three glasses since, &c. and at the beginning of this act the duration of the time employed on the stage is particularly ascertained ; and it refers to a passage in the first act, of the same tendency. The storm was raised at least two glasses, after mid-day, and Ariel was promised that the work should cease at the sixth hour.

STEEVENS.

⁷ I am woe for't, sir.] i. e. I am sorry for it. To be woe, is often used by old writers to signify, to be sorry. So Chaucer : See The Court of Love, p. 36.

" ——— I would

Alon. Irreparable is the loss; and patience
Says, it is past her cure.

Pro. I rather think,
You have not sought her help; of whose soft grace,
For the like loss, I have her sovereign aid,
And rest myself content.

Alon. You the like loss?

Pro. ^a As great to me, as late; and, supportable
To make the dear loss, have I means much weaker 'Than you may call to comfort you; for I
Have lost my daughter.

Alon. A daughter?

O heavens! that they were living both in Naples,
The king and queen there! that they were, I wish,
Myself were mudded in that oozy bed,
Where my son lies. When did you lose your daughter?

Pro. In this last tempest. I perceive, these lords
At this encounter do so much admire,
That they devour their reason; and scarce think,
Their eyes do offices of truth, their words
Are natural breath: but, howsoever you have Been jostled from your senses, know for certain,
That I am Prospero, and that very duke
Which was thrust forth of Milan; who most strangely
Upon this shore, where you were wreck'd, was landed
To be the lord on't. No more yet of this;
For 'tis a chronicle of day by day,
Not a relation for a breakfast, nor Befitting this first meeting. Welcome, sir;
This cell's my court: here have I few attendants,

"—— I would be two,

"That I presume to her to write so."

So in the play of The Four Ps, 1569:

"But be ye sure I would be one

"That you should chance to begyle me so."

STEEVENS.

^a As great to me, as late; —] My loss is as great as yours, and has as lately happened to me. JOHNSON.

And

And subjects none abroad : pray you, look in ;
 My dukedom since you have given me again,
 I will requite you with as good a thing ;
 At least, bring forth a wonder, to content yc,
 As much as me my dukedom.

The entrance of the cell opens, and discovers Ferdinand and Miranda playing at chess.

Mira. Sweet lord,* you play me false.

Fer. No, my dearest love,
 I would not for the world.

Mira. ° Yes, for a score of kingdoms,* you should wrangle,
 And I would call it fair play.

Alon. If this prove
 A vision of the island, one dear son
 Shall I twice lose.

Seb. A most high miracle !

Fer. Though the seas threaten, they are merciful :
 I have curs'd them without cause.

Alon. Now all the blessings [Ferd. kneels.
 Of a glad father compass thee about !
 Arise, and say how thou cam'st here.

Mira. O ! wonder !
 How many goodly creatures are there here !
 How beauteous mankind is ! O brave new world,
 That has such people in't !

Pro. 'Tis new to thee.

° Yes, for a score of kingdoms, — I take the sense to be only this : Ferdinand would not, he says, play her false for the world ; yes, answers she, I would allow you to do it for something less than the world, for twenty kingdoms, and I wish you well enough to allow you, after a little wrangle, that your play was fair. So likewise Dr. Gray. JOHNSON.

I would recommend another punctuation, and then the sense would be as follows :

*Yes, for a score of kingdoms you should wrangle,
 And I would call it fair play ;
 because such a contest would be worthy of you.* STELVENS.

Alon.

Alon. What is this maid, with whom thou wast at play ?

Your eld'st acquaintanc^e cannot be three hours :
Is she the goddess that hath sever'd us,
And brought us thus together ?

Per. Sir, she's mortal ;

But, by immortal Providence, she's mine :
I chose her, when I could not ask my father
For his advice ; nor thought, I had one : she
Is daughter to this famous duke of Milan,
Of whom so often I have heard renown,
But never saw before ; of whom I have Receiv'd a second life, and second father
This lady makes him to me.

Alon. I am hers :

But, oh, how oddly will it sound, that I
Must ask my child forgiveness !

Pro. There, sir, stop ;

Let us not burden our remembrance with
An heaviness that's gone.

Gon. I have inly wept,
Or should have spoke ere this. Look down, you gods,
And on this couple drop a blessed crown ;
For it is you, that have chalk'd forth the way
Which brought us hither !

Alon. I say, Amen, Gonzalo !

Gon. Was Milan thrust from Milan, that his issue
Should become kings of Naples ? o, rejoice
Beyond a common joy ; and set it down
With gold on lasting pillars : In one voyage
Did Claribel her husband find at Tunis ;
And Ferdinand, her brother, found a wife,
Where he himself was lost ; Prospero his dukedom,
In a poor isle ; and all of us, ourselves,
When no man was his own.

Alon.

^a When no man was his own.] For when perhaps should be read where. JOHNSON.

When

Alon. Give me your hands :
Let grief and sorrow still embrace his heart,
That doth not wish you joy !

Gon. Be't so, Amen !

Re-enter Ariel, with the Master and Boatswain amazedly following.

O look, sir, look, sir, here are more of us !
I prophesy'd, if a gallows were on land,
This fellow could not drown :—Now, blasphemy,
That swear'st grace o'erboard, not an oath on shore ?
Hast thou no mouth by land ? What is the news ?

Boatsf. The best news is, that we have safely found
Our king, and company : the next, 'our ship,—
Which but three glasses since, we gave out split,—
Is tight, and yare, and bravely rigg'd, as when We first put out to sea.

Ari. Sir, all this service
Have I done since I went.

Pro. My tricksy spirit ! *

Alon. These are not natural events ; they strengthen,
From strange to stranger :—Say, how came you hither ?

When is certainly right ; i. e. at a time when no one was in his senses. Shakespeare could not have written where, (i. e. in the island) because the mind of Prospero, who lived in it, had not been disordered. It is still said, in colloquial language, that a madman is not his own man, i. e. is not master of himself.

STEEVENS.

* My tricksy spirit ! is, I believe, my clever, adroit spirit. Shakespeare uses the same word elsewhere :

“ —that for a tricksy word

“ Defy the matter.”

So in the interlude of the Disobedient Child, bl. 1. no date :

“ —invent and seek out

“ To make them go tricksie, gallaunt and eleane.”

Again, in the interlude of Jacob and Esau, 1568 :

“ Mary, sir, now is Maister Jacob trimme indeede,

“ That is all tricksie and gallant, &c.” *

Again, in Warner's Albion's England, 1602, b. VI. ch. 31 :

“ There was a tricksie girl, I wot albeit clad in gray.”

STEEVENS.

Boatsf.

Boats. If I did think, fir, I were well awake,
 I'd strive to tell you. We were dead asleep¹,
 And (how, we know not) all clapp'd under hatches,
 Where, but even now, with strange and several noises
 Of roaring, shrieking, howling, gingling chains,
 And more diversity of sounds, all horrible,
 We were awak'd; straightway, at liberty :
 Where we, in all her trim, freshly beheld
 Our royal, good, and gallant ship ; our master
 Cap'ring to eye her : On a trice, so please you,
 Even in a dream, were we divided from them,
 And were brought moping hither.

Ari. Was't well done ?

Pro. Bravely, my diligence. Thou shalt } [Aside.
 be free.

Alon. This is as strange a maze as e'er men trod ;
 And there is in this business more than nature
 Was ever conduct⁴ of : some oracle
 Must rectify our knowledge.

Pro. Sir, my liege,
 Do not infect your mind³ with beating on
 The strangeness of this business ; at pick'd leisure,
 Which shall be shortly, single I'll resolve you,
 * (Which to you shall seem probable) of every
 These

³ ———dead asleep,] The old copy reads—of sleep. STEEVENS.

⁴ —conduct for conductor. So in Ben Jonson's Every Man out of his Humour :

“Come, gentlemen, I will be your conduct.” STEEVENS.

⁵ ———with beating on

The strangeness, &c.] A similar expression occurs in one of the parts of Hen. VI :

“—————your thoughts

“Beat on a crown.”

Beating may mean hammering, working in the mind, dwelling long upon. So in the preface to Stanyhurst's Translation of Virgil, 1582 : “For my part, I purpose not to beat on every childish title that concerneth profodie.” Again, Miranda, in the second scene of this play, tells her father that the storm is still beating in her mind. STEEVENS.

⁶ (Which to you shall seem probable)] These words seem, at the first view, to have no use ; some lines are perhaps lost with which they

These happen'd accidents : till when, be cheerful,
And think of each thing well. Come hither, spirit ;

Set Caliban and his companions free :

[To Ariel.]

[Aside.]

Untie the spell. • How fares my gracious sir ?

There are yet missing of your company

Some few odd lads, that you remember not.

Re-enter Ariel, driving in Caliban, Stephano, and Trinculo, in their stolen apparel.

Ste. Every man shift for all the rest, and let no man take care for himself ; for all is but fortune :—
Coragio, bully-monster, Coragio ? !

Trin. If these be true spies which I wear in my head, here's a goodly fight.

Cal. O Setebos, these be brave spirits, indeed !
How fine my master is ! I am afraid
He will chastise me.

Seb. Ha, ha ;
What things are these, my lord Anthonio !
Will money buy them ?

Ant. Very like ; one of them
Is a plain fish, and, no doubt, marketable.

Pro. Mark but the badges of these men, my lords,
Then say, if they be true :—This mis-shapen knave,—

they were connected. Or we may explain them thus : I will resolve you, by yourself, which method, when you hear the story [of Anthonio's and Sebastian's plot] shall seem probable ; that is, shall deserve your approbation. JOHNSON.

Surely Prospero's meaning is : “ I will relate to you the means, by which I have been enabled to accomplish these ends ; which means, though they now appear strange and improbable, will then appear otherwise.” ANONYMOUS.

Coragio !] This exclamation of encouragement I find in J. Florio's Translation of Montaigne, 1603 :

“ — You often cried Coragio, and called ça, ça.”
Again, in the Blind Beggar of Alexandria, 1698. STEEVENS.

—true :—] That is, honest. A true man is, in the language of that time, opposed to a thief. The sense is, Mark what these men wear, and say if they are honest. JOHNSON.

His

His mother was a witch ; and one so strong
That could controul the moon, make flows and ebbs,
And deal in her command without her power :
These three have robb'd me ; and this demi-devil
(For he's a bastard one) had plotted with them
To take my life : two of these fellows, you Must know, and own ; this thing of darkness, I Acknowledge mine.

Cal. I shall be pinch'd to death.

Alon. Is not this Stephano, my drunken butler ?

Seb. He's drunk now : Where had he wine ?

Alon. And Trinculo is reeling ripe : Where should they

* And Trinculo is reeling ripe ; where should they

Find this grand LIQUOR that hath gilded them ?—] Shakespeare, to be sure, wrote—grand 'LIXIR, alluding to the grand Elixir of the alchymists, which they pretend would restore youth, and confer immortality. This, as they said, being a preparation of gold they called Aurum potabile ; which Shakespeare alluded to in the word gilded ; as he does again in Anthony and Cleopatra :

“ How much art thou unlike Mark Anthony ?

“ Yet coming from him, that great med'cine hath,

“ With his tinct gilded thee.”

But the joke here is to insinuate that, notwithstanding all the boasts of the chymists, sack was the only restorer of youth, and bestower of immortality. So Ben Jonson, in his Every Man out of his Humour :—“ Canarie the very Elixir and spirit of wine.” This seems to have been the cant name for sack, of which the English were, at that time, immoderately fond. Randolph, in his Jealous Lover, speaking of it, says,—“ A pottle of Elixir at the “ Pegasus bravely caroused.” So again in Fletcher's Monsieur Thomas, act III :

“ —Old reverend sack, which, for ought that I can read

“ yet,

“ Was that philosopher's stone the wise king Ptolemeus

“ Did all his wonders by.”——

The phrase too of being gilded was a trite one on this occasion. Fletcher, in his Chances :—“ Duke. Is she not drunk too ? Whore. A little gilded o'er, sir ; old sack, old sack, boys !” WARB.

As the alchymist's Elixir was supposed to be a liquor, the old reading may stand, and the allusion holds good without any alteration. STEEVENS.

Find this grand liquor that hath gilded them?—
How cam'st thou in this pickle?

Trin. I have been in such a pickle, since I saw you last, that, I fear me, will never out of my bones: I shall not fear fly-blowing¹.

Seb. Why, how now, Stephano?

Ste. O, touch me not; I am not Stephano, but a cramp².

Pro. You'd be king of the isle, firrah?

Ste. I should have been a fore one then.

Alon. This is a strange thing as e'er I look'd on.

[Pointing to Caliban.

Pro. He is as disproportion'd in his manners,
As in his shape:—Go, firrah, to my cell;
Take with you your companions; as you look
To have my pardon, trim it handsomely.

Cal. Ay, that I will; and I'll be wise hereafter,
And seek for grace: What a thrice-double ass
Was I, to take this drunkard for a god,
And worship this dull fool?

Pro. Go to; away!

Alon. Hence, and bestow your luggage where you found it.

Seb. Or stole it, rather.

Pro. Sir, I invite your highness, and your train,
To my poor cell: where you shall take your rest
For this one night; which (part of it) I'll waste
With such discourse, as, I not doubt, shall make it
Go quick away: the story of my life,
And the particular accidents, gone by,

¹ —fly-blowing.] This pickle alludes to their plunge into the stinking pool; and pickling preserves meat from fly-blowing.

STEEVENS.

² —but a cramp.] i. e. I am all over a cramp. Prospero had ordered Ariel to shorten up their sinews with aged cramps. Touch me not alludes to the foreness occasioned by them. In the next line the speaker confirms this meaning by a quibble on the word fore.

STEEVENS.

Since I came to this isle : And in the morn,
I'll bring you to your ship, and so to Naples,
Where I have hope to see the nuptials
Of these our dear beloved solemniz'd ;
And thence retire me to my Milan, where
Every third thought shall be my grave.

Alon. I long .

To hear the story of your life, which must Take the ear strangely.

Pro. I'll deliver all ;

And promise you calm seas, auspicious gales,

And sail so expeditious, that shall catch

Your royal fleet far off.—My Ariel;—chick,—} Aside.

That is thy charge : then to the elements

Be free, and fare thou well !—Please you, draw near.

[Exeunt omnes.]

E P I L O G U E.

SPOKEN BY PROSPERO.

NOW my charms are all o'erthrown,
And what strength I have's mine own.
Which is most faint : now, 'tis true,
I must be here confin'd by you,
Or sent to Naples : Let me not,
Since I have my dukedom got,
And pardon'd the deceiver, dwell
In this bare island, by your spell ;
But release me from my bands,
³ With the help of your good hands.
Gentle breath of yours, my sails
Must fill, or else my project fails,
Which was to please : Now I want
Spirits to enforce, art to enchant :
⁴ And my ending is despair,
Unless I be reliev'd by prayer,

Which

³ With the help, &c.] By your applause, by clapping hands.

JOHNSON.

Noise was supposed to dissolve a spell. So twice before in this play :

“ No tongue ; all eyes ; be silent.”

Again : “ ———hush ! be mute,

“ Or else our spell is marr'd.” STEEVENS.

⁴ And my ending is despair,

Unless I be reliev'd by prayer ;] This alludes to the old stories told of the despair of necromancers in their last moments, and of the efficacy of the prayers of their friends for them.

WARBURTON.

It

E P I L O G U E,

Which pierces so, that it assaults

Mercy itself, and frees all faults.

As you from crimes would pardon'd be,

Let your indulgence set me free!

It is observed of The Tempest, that its plan is regular; this the author of The Revival thinks, what I think too, an accidental effect of the story, not intended or regarded by our author. But whatever might be Shakespeare's intention in forming or adopting the plot, he has made it instrumental to the production of many characters, diversified with boundless invention, and preserved with profound skill in nature, extensive knowledge of opinions, and accurate observation of life. In a single drama are here exhibited princes, courtiers, and sailors, all speaking in their real characters. There is the agency of airy spirits, and of an earthly goblin. The operations of magick, the tumults of a storm, the adventures of a desert island, the native effusion of untaught affection, the punishment of guilt, and the final happiness of the pair for whom our passions and reason are equally interested.

JOHNSON.

TWO GENTLEMEN

O F

V E R O N A.

Persons Represented.

Duke of Milan, father to Silvia.

Valentine, } the two Gentlemen.
Protheus, }

Anthonio, father to Protheus.

Thurio, a foolish rival to Valentine.

Eglamour, agent for Silvia in her escape.

Host, where Julia lodges in Milan.

Out-laws.

Speed, a clownish servant to Valentine.

Iaunce, the like to Protheus.

Panthino¹, servant to Anthonio.

Julia, a lady of Verona, beloved of Protheus.

Silvia, the duke of Milan's daughter, beloved of Valentine.

Lucetta, waiting-woman to Julia.

Servants, musicians.

SCENE, *sometimes in Verona; sometimes in Milan;
and on the frontiers of Mantua.*

¹ Panthino,] In the enumeration of characters in the old copy, this attendant on Anthonio is called Panthion, but in the play, always Panthino. STEEVENS.

TWO GENTLEMEN

O F

VERONA.

ACT I. SCENE I.

An open place in Verona.

Enter Valentine and Proteus.

Val. Cease to persuade, my loving Proteus;
Home-keeping youth have ever homely wits :
Wer't

* Some of the incidents in this play may be supposed to have been taken from The Arcadia, book I. chap. 6. where Pyrocles consents to head the Helots. (The Arcadia was entered on the books of the Stationers' Company, Aug. 23d, 1588.) The love-adventure of Julia resembles that of Viola in Twelfth Night, and is indeed common to many of the ancient novels. STEEVENS.

Mrs. Lenox observes, and I think not improbably, that the story of Proteus and Julia might be taken from a similar one in the Diana of George of Montemayor.—"This pastoral romance," says she, "was translated from the Spanish in Shakespeare's time." I have seen no earlier translation, than that of Bartholomew Yong, who dates his dedication in November 1598, and Meres, in his Wit's Treasury, printed the same year, expressly mentions the Two Gentlemen of Verona. Indeed Montemayor was translated two or three years before, by one Thomas Wilson; but this work, I am persuaded, was never published entirely; perhaps some parts of it were, or the tale might have been translated by others. However Mr. Steevens says, very truly, that this kind of love-adventure is frequent in the old novelists. FARMER.

There

Wer't not, affection chains thy tender days
To the sweet glances of thy honour'd love,

I rather

There is no earlier translation of the Diana entered on the books of the Stationers' Company, than that of B. Younge, September 1598. Many translations, however, after they were licensed, were capriciously suppressed. Among others, "The Decameron of Mr. John Boccace Florentine," was "recalled by my lord of Canterbury's commands." I much lament having never met with a work entitled, "A Catalogue for English printed Bookes," entered at Stationers' Hall, May 8, 1595.

STEEVENS.

² It is observable (I know not for what cause) that the style of this comedy is less figurative, and more 'natural and unaffected than the greater part of this author's, though supposed to be one of the first he wrote. POPE.

It may very well be doubted, whether Shakespeare had any other hand in this play than the enlivening it with some speeches and lines thrown in here and there, which are easily distinguished, as being of a different stamp from the rest. HANMER.

To this observation of Mr. Pope, which is very just, Mr. Theobald has added, that this is one of Shakespeare's worst plays, and is less corrupted than any other. Mr. Upton peremptorily determines, that if any proof can be drawn from manner and style, this play must be sent packing, and seek for its parent elsewhere. How otherwise, says he, do painters distinguish copies from originals, and have not authors their peculiar style and manner from which a true critic can form as unerring judgment as a painter? I am afraid this illustration of a critic's science will not prove what is desired. A painter knows a copy from an original by rules somewhat resembling these by which critics know a translation, which if it be literal, and literal it must be to resemble the copy of a picture, will be easily distinguished. Copies are known from originals, even when the painter copies his own picture; so if an author should literally translate his work, he would lose the manner of an original.

Mr. Upton confounds the copy of a picture with the imitation of a painter's manner. Copies are easily known, but good imitations are not detected with equal certainty, and are, by the best judges, often mistaken. Nor is it true that the writer has always peculiarities equally distinguishable with those of the painter. The peculiar manner of each arises from the desire, natural to every performer, of facilitating his subsequent works by recurrence to his former ideas; this recurrence produces that repetition which is called habit. The painter, whose work is partly intellectual and partly manual, has habits of the mind, the eye and the hand,

I rather would entreat thy company,
To see the wonders of the world abroad,
Than, living dully sluggish'd at home,
Wear out thy youth with ^a shapeless idleness.
But, since thou lov'st, love still, and thrive therein,
Even as I would, when I to love begin.

Pro. Wilt thou be gone? Sweet Valentine, adieu!
Think on thy Protheus, when thou, haply, see'st
Some rare note-worthy object in thy travel:
Wish me partaker in thy happiness,
When thou dost meet good hap; and, in thy danger,
If ever danger do environ thee,
Commend thy grievance to my holy prayers,
For I will be thy head's-man, Valentine.

Val. And on a love-book pray for my success.

Pro. Upon some book I love, I'll pray for thee.

hand, the writer has only habits of the mind. Yet, some painters have differed as much from themselves as from any other; and I have been told, that there is little resemblance between the first works of Raphael and the last. The same variation may be expected in writers; and if it be true, as it seems, that they are less subject to habit, the difference between their works may be yet greater.

But by the internal marks of a composition we may discover the author with probability, though seldom with certainty. When I read this play, I cannot but think that I find, both in the serious and ludicrous scenes, the language and sentiments of Shakespeare. It is not indeed one of his most powerful effusions, it has neither many diversities of character, nor striking delineations of life, but it abounds in grace beyond most of his plays, and few have more lines or passages, which, singly considered, are eminently beautiful. I am yet inclined to believe that it was not very successful, and suspect that it has escaped corruption, only because being seldom played, it was less exposed to the hazards of transcription. JOHNSON.

¹ Home-keeping youth have ever homely wits:] Milton has the same play on words:

"It is for homely features to keep home,

"They had their name thence." STEEVENS.

* — Shapeless idleness.] The expression is fine, as implying that idleness prevents the giving any form or character to the manners. WARBURTON.

. Val.

Val. That's on some shallow story of deep love,
How young Leander cros'd the Hellespont.

Pro. That's a deep story of a deeper love;
For he was more than over shoes in love.

Val. 'Tis true; for you are over boots in love,
And yet you never swom the Hellespont.

Pro. Over the boots? 'nay, give me not the boots.

Val. No, I will not; for it boots thee not.

Pro. What?

Val. To be in love, where scorn is bought with groans;
Coy looks, with heart-fore sighs; one' fading moment's mirth,

With twenty watchful, weary, tedious nights:
If haply won, perhaps, a hapless gain;
If lost, why then a grievous labour won;
' However, but a folly bought with wit,
Or else a wit by folly vanquished.

⁵ ——— nay, give me not the boots.] A proverbial expression, though now disused, signifying, don't make a laughing stock of me; don't play upon me. The French have a phrase, Bailler foin en corne; which Cotgrave thus interprets, To give one the boots; to sell him a bargain. THEOBALD.

Perhaps this expression took its origin from a sport the country people in Warwickshire use at their harvest-home, where one sits as judge to try misdemeanors committed in harvest, and the punishment for the men is to be laid on a bench, and slapped on the breech with a pair of boots. This they call giving them the boots. I meet with the same expression in the old comedy called Mother Bombe, by Lyly:

"What do you give me the boots?"

Again, in The Weakest goes to the Wall, a comedy, 1618:

"—Nor your fat bacon can carry it away, if you offer us the boots."

The boots, however, were an ancient engine of torture. In MS. Harl. 6999—48, Mr. T. Randolph writes to lord Hunston, &c. and mentions, in the P. S. to his letter, that Geo. Flecke had yesterday night the boots, and is said to have confessed that the E. of Morton was privy to the poisoning the E. of Arhol, 16 March, 1580: and in another letter, March 18, 1580, "—that the laird of Whittingham had the boots, but without torment confess'd, &c." STEEVENS.

Pro.

Pro. So; by your circumstance, you call me fool.

Val. So, by your circumstance, I fear, you'll prove.

Pro. 'Tis love you cavil at; I am not love.

Val. Love is your master, for he masters you;
And he that is so yoked by a fool,
Methinks should not be chronicled for wise.

Pro. Yet writers say, As in the sweetest bud
The eating canker dwells, for eating love
Inhabits in the finest wits of all.

Val. And writers say, As the most forward bud
Is eaten by the canker ere it blow,
Even so by love the young and tender wit
Is turn'd to folly; blasting in the bud,
Losing his verdure even in the prime,
And all the fair effects of future hopes.
But wherefore waste I time to counsel thee,
That art a votary to fond desire?
Once more adieu: my father at the road
Expects my coming, there to see me shipp'd.

Pro. And thither will I bring thee, Valentine.

Val. Sweet Protheus, no; now let us take our leave.

At Milan, let me hear from thee by letters,
Of thy success in love, and what news else
Betideth here in absence of thy friend;
And I likewise will visit thee with mine.

Pro. All happiness bechance to thee in Milan!

Val. As much to you at home! and so, farewell!

[Exit.]

Pro. He after honour hunts, I after love:
He leaves his friends, to dignify them more;
I leave myself, my friends, and all for love.
Thou, Julia, thou hast metamorphos'd me;
Made me neglect my studies, lose my time,

* However, but a folly—] This love will end in a foolish action, to produce which you are long to spend your wit, or it will end in the loss of your wit, which will be overpowered by the folly of love. JOHNSON.

War with good counsel, set the world at nought;
 ' Made wit with musing weak, heart sick with thought.

* Enter Speed.

Speed. Sir Protheus, save you: Saw you my master?

Pro. But now he parted hence to embark for Milan.

Speed. Twenty to one then, he is shipp'd already;
 And I have play'd the sheep, in losing him.

Pro. Indeed, a sheep doth very often stray,
 An if the shepherd be awhile away.

Speed. You conclude, that my master is a shepherd then, and I a sheep?

Pro. I do.

Speed. Why then my horns are his horns, whether
 I wake or sleep.

Pro. A silly answer, and fitting well a sheep.

Speed. This proves me still a sheep.

Pro. True; and thy master a shepherd.

Speed. Nay, that I can deny by a circumstance.

Pro. It shall go hard, but I'll prove it by another.

Speed. The shepherd seeks the sheep, and not the sheep the shepherd; but I seek my master, and my master seeks not me: therefore I am no sheep.

' Made wit with musing weak,—] For made read make. Thou, Julia, hast made me woe with good counsel, and make wit weak with musing. JOHNSON.

Surely there is no need of emendation. It is Julia, who has already made wit weak with musing, &c. STEEVENS.

* This whole scene, like many others in these plays (some of which I believe were written by Shakespeare, and others interpolated by the players) is composed of the lowest and most trifling conceits, to be accounted for only from the gross taste of the age he lived in; Populo ut placeant. I wish I had authority to leave them out; but I have done all I could, set a mark of reprobation upon them throughout this edition. POPE.

That this, like many other scenes, is mean and vulgar, will be universally allowed; but that it was interpolated by the players seems advanced without any proof, only to give a greater licence to criticism. JOHNSON.

Pro.

Pro. The sheep for fodder follows the shepherd, the shepherd for the food follows not the sheep; thou for wages followest thy master, thy master for wages follows not thee: therefore thou art a sheep.

Speed. Such another proof will make me cry baä:

Pro. But dost thou hear? gav'st thou my letter to Julia?

Speed. Ay, sir: 'I, a lost mutton, gave your letter to her, a lac'd mutton; and she, a lac'd mutton, gave me, a lost mutton, nothing for my labour.

Pro. Here's too small a pasture for such a store of muttons.

Speed. If the ground be overcharg'd, you were best stick her.

Pro.

'I, a lost mutton, gave your letter to her, a lac'd mutton;—'] Speed calls himself a lost mutton, because he had lost his master, and because Protheus had been proving him a sheep. But why does he call the lady a lac'd mutton? Wenchers are to this day called mutton-mongers; and consequently the object of their passion must, by the metaphor, be the mutton. And Cotgrave, in his English-French Dictionary, explains lac'd mutton, Une garce, putain, fille de joye. And Mr. Motteux has rendered this passage of Rabelais, in the prologue of his fourth book, Cailles coïbbees mignonnement chantans, in this manner; Coated quails and lac'd mutton waggishly singing. So that lac'd mutton has been a sort of standard phrase for girls of pleasure. THEOBALD.

Nash, in his Have with you to Saffron Walden, 1595, speaking of Gabriel Harvey's incontinence, says: he would not stick to extoll rotten lac'd mutton. So in the comedy of The Shoemaker's Holiday, or the Gentle Craft, 1610:

"Why here's good lac'd mutton, as I promis'd you."

Again, in Blurt Master Constable, 1602:

"Cupid hath got me a stomach, and I long for lac'd mutton."

Again, in Whetstone's Promos and Cassandra, 1578:

"And I smelt he lov'd lac'd mutton well."

Again, Heywood, in his Love's Mistress, 1636, speaking of Cupid, says, he is the "Hero of hie-hoes, admiral of ay-me's, and monsieur of mutton lac'd." STEEVENS.

A laced mutton was so established a name for a courtesan, that a street in Clerkenwell, which was much frequented by women of the town, was formerly called Mutton-lane. It is mentioned, with many others of the same character, in A New Trick to cheat the Devil, 1639:

"Search

Pro. 'Nay, in that you are a stray; 'twere best pound you.'

Speed. Nay, fir, less than a pound shall serve me for carrying your letter.

Pro. You mistake; I mean the pound, a pinfold.

Speed. From a pound to a pin? fold it over and over,

'Tis threefold too little for carrying a letter to your lover.

Pro. But what said she? 'did she nod. [Speed nods.

Speed. I.

Pro. Nod, I? why, that's noddy?'

Speed. You mistook, fir; I said, she did nod; and you ask me, if she did nod; and I said, I.

Pro. And that set together, is—noddy.

Speed. Now you have taken the pains to set it together, take it for your pains.

Pro. No, no, you shall have it for bearing the letter.

" Search all the alleys, Spittle or Pickthatch,

" Turnbull, the Bank-side, or the Minories,

" White Friars, St. Peter's Street, and Mutton-lane."

Again, in Blurt Master Constable, by Middleton, 1602:

" Laz. Pilcher, Cupid hath got me a stomach, and I long for laced mutton.

" Pilch. Plain mutton without a lace will do for me."

Before I met with this passage, I own I understood laced mutton in the sense of mouton galonné, and could not at all account for so strange an expression. From the above, it appears to have been a phrase much of the same kind as caille coiffée. MALONE.

'Nay, in that you are astray;—] For the reason Protheus gives, Dr. Thirlby advises that we should read, a stray, i. e. a stray sheep; which continues Protheus's banter upon Speed.

THEOBALD.

" ————did she nod?] These words have been supplied by some of the editors, to introduce what follows. STEEVENS.

'Noddy was a game at cards. So in The Inner Temple Mask, by Middleton, 1619: "I leave them wholly (says Christmas) to my eldest son Noddy, whom, during his minority, I commit to the custody of a pair of knaves and one and thirty." Again, in Quarles's Virgin Widow, 1656: "Let her forbear chess and noddy, as games too serious." STEEVENS.

Speed.

Speed. Well, I perceive, I must be fain to bear with you.

Pro. Why, fir, how do you bear with me?

Speed. Marry, fir, the letter very orderly; having nothing but the word noddy for my pains.

Pro. Beshrew me, but you have a quick wit.

Speed. And yet it cannot overtake your slow purse.

Pro. Come, come, open the matter in brief: What said she?

Speed. Open your purse; that the money, and the matter, may be both at once deliver'd.

Pro. Well, fir, here is for your pains: What said she?

Speed. Truly, fir, I think you'll hardly win her.

Pro. Why? Could'st thou perceive so much from her?

Speed. Sir, I could perceive nothing at all from her; no, not so much as a ducket for delivering your letter: And being so hard to me that brought your mind, I fear, she'll prove as hard to you in ⁴ telling her mind. Give her no token but stones; for she's as hard as steel.

Pro. What; said she nothing?

Speed. No, not so much as—take this for thy pains. To testify your bounty, I thank you, ⁵ you have testern'd me; in requital whereof, henceforth carry your letters yourself: and so, fir, I'll commend you to my master.

Pro. Go, go, be gone, to save your ship from wreck;
Which cannot perish, having thee aboard,
Being destin'd to a drier death on shore:—

⁴ ——— telling her mind.] The old copy reads, your mind.

STEEVENS.

⁵ ——— you have testern'd me;] You have gratified me with a tester, testern, or testen, that is, with a sixpence. JOHNSON.

The old reading is cestern'd. Mr. Rowe made the alteration.

STEEVENS.

130 TWO GENTLEMEN

I must go send some better messenger ;
I fear, my Julia would not deign my lines,
Receiving them from such a worthless post.

[Exeunt severally.]

S C E N E II.

Changes to Julia's chamber.

Enter Julia and Lucetta.

Jul. But say, Lucetta, now we are alone,
Would'st thou then counsel me to fall in love ?

Luc. Ay, madam ; so you stumble not unheedfully.

Jul. Of all the fair resort of gentlemen,
That every day with parle encounter me,
In thy opinion which is worthiest love ?

Luc. Please you, repeat their names, I'll shew my mind

According to my shallow simple skill.

Jul. What think'st thou of the fair Sir Eglamour ?

Luc. As of a knight well spoken, neat and fine ;
But, were I you, he never should be mine ⁶.

Jul. What think'st thou of the rich Mercatio ?

Luc. Well, of his wealth ; but, of himself, so, so.

Jul. What think'st thou of the gentle Protheus ?

Luc. Lord, lord ! to see what folly reigns in us !

Jul. How now ? what means this passion at his name ?

Luc. Pardon, dear madam ; 'tis a passing shame,

⁶ — he never should be mine.] Perhaps the insignificance of sir Eglamour's character is burlesqued in the following passage in Decker's Satiromastix.

" Adieu, sir Eglamour ; adieu lute-string, curtain-rod, goosequill, &c." Sir Eglamour of Artoys, is the hero of an ancient metrical romance, " Imprinted at London, in Foster-lane, at the sygne of the Harteshorne, by John Walley." bl. l. no date.

STEEVENS.

That I, unworthy body as I am,
Should censure thus on lovely gentlemen.

Jul. Why not on Protheus, as of all the rest?

Luc. Then thus,—of many good, I think him best.

Jul. Your reason?

Luc. I have no other but a woman's reason;
I think him so, because I think him so.

Jul. And would'st thou have me cast my love on him?

Luc. Ay, if you thought your love not cast away.

Jul. Why, he of all the rest hath never mov'd me.

Luc. Yet he of all the rest, I think, best loves ye.

Jul. His little speaking shews his love but small.

Luc. Fire, that is closest kept, burns most of all.

Jul. They do not love, that do not shew their love.

Luc. Oh, they love least, that let men know their love.

Jul. I would I knew his mind.

Luc. Peruse this paper, madam.

Jul. To Julia,—Say, from whom?

Luc. That the contents will shew.

Jul. Say, say; who gave it thee?

Luc. Sir Valentine's page; and sent, I think, from Protheus:

He would have given it you, but I, being in the way,
Did in your name receive it; pardon the fault, I pray.

Jul. Now, by my modesty, 'a goodly broker!
Dare you presume to harbour wanton lines?
To whisper and conspire against my youth?
Now, trust me, 'tis an office of great worth,

¹ Should censure thus &c.] To censure means, in this place, to pass sentence. So in Othello:

“——to you, lord governor,

“Remains the censure of this hellish villain.” STEEVENS.

² —a goodly broker!] A broker was used for matchmaker, sometimes for a procurer. JOHNSON.

So in Daniel's Complaint of Rosamond, 1599:

“And flie (oh flie) these bed-brokers unclean,

“The monsters of our sex, &c.” STEEVENS.

132 TWO GENTLEMEN

And you an officer fit for the place.

There, take the paper, see it be return'd;

Or else return no more into my sight.

Luc. To plead for love deserves more fee than hate.

Jul. Will ye be gone?

Luc. That you may ruminate. [Exit.]

Jul. And yet, I would I had o'erlook'd the letter.

It were a shame, to call her back again,

And pray her to a fault for which I chid her.

What fool is she, that knows I am a maid,

And would not force the letter to my view?

Since maids, in modesty, say No, to that⁹

Which they would have the profferer construe, Ay.

Fie, fie! how wayward is this foolish love,

That, like a testy babe, will scratch the nurse,

And presently, all humbled, kifs the rod!

How churlishly I chid Lucetta hence,

When willingly I would have had her here!

How angerly I taught my brow to frown,

When inward joy enforc'd my heart to smile!

My penance is, to call Lucetta back,

And ask remission for my folly past:—

What ho! Lucetta!

. Re-enter Lucetta.

Luc. What would your ladyship?

Jul. Is it near dinner-time?

Luc. I would, it were;

That you might kill your 'stomach on your meat,

And not upon your maid.

Jul. What is't that you

Took up so gingerly?

Luc. Nothing.

Jul. Why didst thou stoop then?

⁹ —say No, to that, &c.] A paraphrase on the old proverb,
"Maids say nay, and take it." STEEVENS.

—stomach on your meat,] Stomach was used for passion or obstinacy. JOHNSON.

Luc.

Luc. To take a paper up, that I let fall.

Jul. And is that paper nothing?

Luc. Nothing concerning me.

Jul. Then let it lie for those that it concerns.

Luc. Madam, it will not lye where it concerns,
Unless it have a false interpreter.

Jul. Some love of yours hath writ to you in rhyme.

Luc. That I might sing it, madam, to a tune :
Give me a note ; your ladyship can set.

Jul. As little by such toys as may be possible :
Best sing it, to the tune of Light o' love ².

Luc. It is too heavy for so light a tune.

Jul. Heavy, ³ 'belike, it hath some burden then.

Luc. Ay ; and melodious were it, would you sing it.

Jul. And why not you ?

Luc. I cannot reach so high.

Jul. Let's see your song :—How now, minion ?

Luc. Keep tune there still, so you will sing it out :
And yet, methinks, I do not like this tune.

Jul. You do not ?

Luc. No, madam, it is too sharp.

Jul. You, minion, are too saucy.

Luc. Nay, now you are too flat,
And mar the concord with too harsh a descant ⁴ :
There wanteth but a mean ⁵ to fill your song.

Jul. The mean is drown'd with your unruly base.

Luc. ⁶ Indeed, I bid the base for Protheus.

Jul.

² Light o' love.] This tune is given in a note on Much ado about Nothing, act III. sc. iv. STEEVENS.

³ —too harsh a descant:] Descant is a term in music. See Sir John Hawkins's note on the first speech in K. Richard III.

STEEVENS.

⁴ —but a mean &c.] The mean is the tenor in music. So in the enterlude of Mary Magdalene's Repentance, 1569:

“ Utilitie can sing the base full cleane,

“ And noble honour shall sing the meane.” STEEVENS.

⁵ Indeed, I bid the base for Protheus.] The speaker here turns the allusion (which her mistress employed) from the base in music to a country exercise, Bid the base: in which some pursue, and

Jul. This babble shall not henceforth trouble me.
Here is a coil with protestation! — [Tears it.
Go, get you gone; and let the papers lie:
You would be fingering them, to anger me.

Luc. She makes it strange; but she would be best pleas'd

To be so anger'd with another letter.. [Exit.

Jul. Nay, would I were so anger'd with the same!
Oh hateful hands, to tear such loving words!
Injurious wasps; to feed on such sweet honey,
And kill the bees, that yield it, with your stings!
I'll kiss each several paper for amends.
Look, here is writ—kind Julia;—uh*kind* Julia!
As in revenge of thy ingratitude,
I throw thy name against the bruising stones,
Trampling contemptuously on thy disdain.
Look, here is writ—love-wounded Protheus:—
Poor wounded name! my bosom, as a bed,
Shall lodge thee, till thy wound be throughly heal'd;
And thus I search it with a sovereign kiss.
But twice, or thrice, was Protheus written down:
Be calm, good wind, blow not a word away,
Till I have found each letter in the letter,
Except mine own name; that some whirlwind bear
Unto a ragged, fearful, hanging rock,
And throw it thence into the raging sea!
Lo, here in one line is his name twice writ,—
Poor forlorn Protheus, passionate Protheus,
To the sweet Julia;—that I'll tear away;
And yet I will not, fith so prettily
He couples it to his complaining names;

others are made prisoners. So that Lucetta would intend, by this, to say, Indeed I take pains to make you a captive to Protheus's passion.—He uses the same allusion in his Venus and Adonis:

“ To bid the winds a bafe he now prepares.”
And in his Cymbeline he mentions the game:

“ ——— Lads more like

“ To run the country bafe. WARBURTON.

Thus

Thus will I fold them one upon another;
Now kifs, embrace, contend, do what you will.

Re-enter Lucetta.

Luc. Madam, dinner's ready, and your father stays.

Ful. Well, let us go.

Luc. What, shall these papers lie like tell-tales here?

Ful. If thou respect them, best to take them up.

Luc. Nay, I was taken up for laying them down:
Yet here they shall not lie, for catching cold.

Ful. I see, you have a month's mind to them.

Luc. Ay, madam, you may say what sights you see;
I see things too, although you judge I wink.

Ful. Come, come, will't please you go? [Exeunt.

I see you have a month's mind to them.] A month's mind was an anniversary in times of popery; or, as Mr. Ray calls it, a less solemnity directed by the will of the deceased. There was also a year's mind, and a week's mind. See Proverbial Phrases.

This appears from the interrogatories and observations against the clergy, in the year 1552. Inter. 7. "Whether there are any month's minds, and anniversaries?" Strype's Memorials of the Reformation, vol. ii. p. 354.

"Was the month's mind of sir Will. Laxton, who died the last month (July 1556.) his hearse burning with wax, and the morrow mafs celebrated, and a sermon preached," &c. Strype's Mem. vol. iii. p. 205. Dr. GRAY.

A month's mind, in the ritual sense, signifies not desire or inclination, but remonstrance; yet I suppose this is the true original of the expression. JOHNSON.

Puttenham, in his Art of Poetry, 1589, chap. 24. speaking of Poetical Lamentations, says, they were chiefly used "at the burials of the dead, also at month's minds, and longer times;" and in the churchwarden's accounts of St. Helens in Abington, Berkshire, 1558, these month's minds, and the expences attending them, are frequently mentioned. Instead of month's minds, they are sometimes called month's monuments, and in the Injunctions of K. Edward VI. memories, Injunct. 21. By memories, says Fuller, we understand the Obsequia for the dead, which some say succeeded in the place of the heathen Parentalia.

If this line was designed for a verse, we should read—month's mind. So in the Midsummer Night's Dream:

"Swifter than the moon's sphere."

Both these are the Saxon genitive case. STEEVENS.

SCENE III.

Antonio's house.Enter Antonio and Panthino.

Ant. Tell me, Panthino, ' what sad talk was that,
Wherewith my brother held you in the cloister ?

Pant. 'Twas of his nephew Protheus, your son.

Ant. Why, what of him ?

Pant. He wonder'd, that your lordship
Would suffer him to spend his youth at home ;
While other men, of slender reputation,
Put forth their sons to seek preferment out :
Some to the wars, to try their fortune there ;
' Some, to discover islands far away ;
Some, to the studious universities.
For any, or for all these exercises,
He said, that Protheus, your son, was meet ;
And did request me, to importune you,
To let him spend his time no more at home,
Which would be great impeachment^s to his age,
In having known no travel in his youth.

Ant. Nor need'st thou much importune me to that Whereon this month I have been hammering.

* — what sad talk —] Sad is the same as grave or serious.

JOHNSON.

' Some, to discover islands far away ;] In Shakespeare's time, voyages for the discovery of the islands of America were much in vogue. And we find, in the journals of the travellers of that time, that the sons of noblemen, and of others of the best families in England, went very frequently on these adventures. Such as the Fortescues, Collitons, Thornhills, Farmers, Pickerings, Littletons, Willoughbys, Chesters, Hawleys, Bromleys, and others. To this prevailing fashion our poet frequently alludes, and not without high commendations of it. WARBURTON.

* — great impeachment to his age,] Impeachment is hindrance. So in Henry V :

“ — but could be glad

“ Without impeachment to march on to Calais.”

STEEVENS.

• I have

I have consider'd well his loss of time ;
 And how he cannot be a perfect man,
 Not being try'd, and tutor'd in the world :
 Experience is by industry atchiev'd,
 And perfected by the swift course of time :
 Then, tell me, whither were I best to send him ?

Pant. I think, your lordship is not ignorant,
 How his companion, youthful Valentine,
 Attends the emperor in his royal court.

Ant. I know it well.

Pant. 'Twere good, I think, your lordship sent him thither :

There shall he practise tilts and tournaments,
 Hear sweet discourse, converse with noblemen ;

Attends the emperor in his royal court.] The emperor's royal court is properly at Vienna, but Valentine, 'tis plain, is at Milan ; where, in most other passages, it is said he is attending the duke, who makes one of the characters in the drama. This seems to convict the author of a forgetfulness and contradiction ; but perhaps it may be solved thus, and Milan be called the emperor's court ; as, since the reign of Charlemagne, this dukedom and its territories have belonged to the emperors. I wish I could as easily solve another absurdity which encounters us, of Valentine's going from Verona to Milan, both inland places, by sea.

THEOBALD.

Mr. Theobald discovers not any great skill in history. Vienna is not the court of the emperor as emperor, nor has Milan been always without its princes since the days of Charlemagne ; but the note has its use. JOHNSON.

Shakespeare has been guilty of no mistake in placing the emperor's court at Milan in this play. Several of the first German emperors held their courts there occasionally, it being, at that time, their immediate property, and the chief town of their Italian dominions. Some of them were crowned kings of Italy at Milan, before they received the imperial crown at Rome. Nor has the poet fallen into any contradiction by giving a duke to Milan at the same time that the emperor held his court there. The first dukes of that, and all the other great cities in Italy, were not sovereign princes, as they afterwards became ; but were merely governors, or viceroys, under the emperors, and removeable at their pleasure. Such was the Duke of Milan mentioned in this play.

STEEVENS.

And

138 TWO GENTLEMEN

And be in eye of every exercise,
Worthy his youth and nobleness of birth.

Ant. I like thy counsel; well hast thou advis'd:
And, that thou may'st perceive how well I like it,
The execution of it shall make known;
Even with the speediest expedition
I will dispatch him to the emperor's court.

Pant. To-morrow, may it please you, Don Alphonso,
With other gentlemen of good esteem,
Are journeying to salute the emperor,
And to commend their service to his will.

Ant. Good company; with them shall Protheus go:
And, ² in good time,—now will we break with him.

Enter Protheus.

Pro. Sweet love! sweet lines! sweet life!
Here is her hand, the agent of her heart;
Here is her oath for love, her honour's pawn:
Oh! that our fathers would applaud our loves,
To seal our happiness with their consents!
Oh heavenly Julia!

Ant. How now? what letter are you reading there?

Pro. May't please your lordship, 'tis a word or two
Of commendation sent from Valentine,
Deliver'd by a friend that came from him.

Ant. Lend me the letter; let me see what news.

Pro. There is no news, my lord; but that he writes
How happily he lives, how well belov'd,
And daily graced by the emperor;
Wishing me with him, partner of his fortune.

Ant. And how stand you affected to his wish?

² —in good time] In good time was the old expression when something happened which suited the thing in hand, as the French say, à propos. JOHNSON.
So in Rich. III.

“ And, in good time, here comes the sweating lord.”

STEEVENS.

Pro.

Pro. As one relying on your lordship's will,
And not depending on his friendly wish.

Ant. My will is something sorted with his wish :
Mute not ~~that~~ I thus suddenly proceed ;
For what I will, ~~I will~~, and there an end.
I am resolv'd, that thou shalt spend some time
With Valentino in the emperor's court ;
What maintenance he from his friends receives,
Like exhibition³ thou shalt have from me.
To-morrow be in readiness to go :
Excuse it not, for I am peremptory.

Pro. My lord, I cannot be so soon provided ;
Please you, deliberate a day or two.

Ant. Look, what thou want'st, shall be sent after thee :

No more of stay ; to-morrow thou must go.—

Come on, Panthino ; you shall be employ'd

To hasten on his expedition. [Exeunt Ant. and Pant.]

Pro. Thus have I shunn'd the fire, for fear of burning ;

And drench'd me in the sea, where I am drown'd :

I fear'd to shew my father Julia's letter,

Lest he should take exceptions to my love ;

And with the vantage of mine own excuse

Hath he excepted most against my love.

† Oh, how this spring of love resembleth

The

³ — exhibition] i. e. allowance.

So in Othello :

“ Due reference of place and exhibition.”

Again, in the Devil's Law-case, 1623 :

“ — in his riot does far exceed the exhibition I allowed him.” STEEVENS.

† Oh, how this spring of love resembleth] At the end of this verse there is wanting a syllable, for the speech apparently ends in a quatrain. I find nothing that will rhyme to sun, and therefore shall leave it to some happier critic. But I suspect that the author might write thus :

Oh, how this spring of love resembleth right,

The uncertain glory of an April day ;

Which now shows all the glory of the light,

And, by and by, a cloud takes all away !

, Light

The uncertain glory of an April day ;
Which now shews all the beauty of the sun,
And by and by a cloud takes all away !

Re-enter Pant.

Pant. Sir Protheus, your father calls for you ;
He is in haste, therefore, I pray you, go.

Pro. Why, this it is ! my heart accords thereto ;
And yet a thousand times it answers, no. [Exeunt.]

Light was either by negligence or affectation changed to sun, which, considered without the rhyme, is indeed better. The next transcriber, finding that the word right did not rhyme to sun, supposed it erroneously written, and left it out. JOHNSON.

It was not always the custom among our early writers, to make the first and third lines rhyme to each other ; and when a word was not long enough to complete the measure, they occasionally extended it. Thus Spenser, in his Faery Queen, b. II. c. 12 :

“ Formerly grounded, and fast settled.”

Again, b. II. c. 12 :

“ The while sweet Zephyrus loud whistled

“ His treble, a strange kind of harmony ;

“ Which Guyon’s senses softly tickled,” &c.

From this practice, I suppose our author wrote resembleth, which, though it affords no jingle, completes the verse. The old ballad of Titus Andronicus is written in this measure, where the second and fourth lines only rhyme. STEEVENS.

Resembleth is here used as a quadrisyllable, as if it was written resembeleth. See Com. of Errors, act V. sc. the last :

“ And these two Dromios, one in semblance.”

As you like it, act II. sc. ii.

“ The parts and graces of the wrestler.”

And it should be observed, that Shakespeare takes the same liberty with many other words, in which l or r are subjoined to another consonant. See Com. of Errors, next verse but one to that cited above :

“ These are the parents to these children.”

where some editors, being unnecessarily alarmed for the metre, have endeavoured to help it by a word of their own.

“ These plainly are the parents to these children.”

TYRWHITT.

ACT II. SCENE I.

to Milan.

An apartment in the duke's palace.

Enter Valentine and Speed.

Speed. Sir, your glove.

Val. Not mine; my gloves are on.

Speed. Why then this may be yours; for this is but one.

Val. Ha! let me see: ay, give it me, it's mine:—
Sweet ornament, that decks a thing divine!
Ah Silvia! Silvia!

Speed. Madam Silvia! madam Silvia!

Val. How now, firrah?

Speed. She is not within hearing, fir.

Val. Why, fir, who bad you call her?

Speed. Your worship, fir; or else I mistook.

Val. Well, you'll still be too forward.

Speed. And yet I was last chidden for being too slow.

Val. Go to, fir; tell me, do you know madam Silvia?

Speed. She that your worship loves?

Val. Why, how know you that I am in love?

Speed. Marry, by these special marks: First, you have learn'd, like fir Protheus, to wreath your arms like a male-content; to relish a love-song, like a Robin-red-breast; to walk alone, like one that had the pestilence; to sigh, like a school-boy that had lost his A. B. C; to weep, like a young wench that had buried her grandam; to fast, like one that takes diet^s; to watch, like one that fears robbing; to

^s —takes diet;] To take diet was the phrase for being under a regimen for a disease mentioned in Timon:

“ —bring down^d the rose-cheek'd youth

“ To the tub-fast and the diet. STEEVENS.

speak

speaking, like a beggar at ⁶ Hallowmas. You were wont, when you laugh'd, to crow like a cock; when you walk'd, to walk like one of the lions; when you fasted, it was presently ~~after~~ ^{after} dinner; when you look'd sadly, it was for want of money: and now you are metamorphos'd with a mistress, that, when I look on you, I can hardly think you my master.

Val. Are all these things perceiv'd in me?

Speed. They are all perceiv'd without ye.

Val. Without me? they cannot.

Speed. Without you? nay, that's certain; for, without you were so simple, ⁷ none else would: but you are so without these follies, that these follies are within you, and shine through you like the water in an urinal; that not an eye, that sees you, but is a physician to comment on your malady.

Val. But, tell me, dost thou know my lady Silvia?

Speed. She, that you gaze on so, as she sits at supper?

Val. Hast thou observ'd that? even she I mean.

Speed. Why, sir, I know her not.

Val. Dost thou know her by my gazing on her, and yet know'st her not?

Speed. Is she not hard-favour'd, sir?

Val. Not so fair, boy, as well-favour'd.

⁶ — Hallowmas. —] That is, about the feast of All-Saints, when winter begins, and the life of a vagrant becomes less comfortable. JOHNSON.

Is it worth remarking that on All-Saints-Day the poor people in Staffordshire, and perhaps in other country places, go from parish to parish a souling as they call it; i. e. begging and puling (or singing small, as Bailey's Dict. explains puling) for soul-cakes, or any good thing to make them merry? This custom is mentioned by Peck, and seems a remnant of Popish superstition to pray for departed souls, particularly those of friends. 'The souler's song, in Staffordshire, is different from that which Mr. Peck mentions, and is by no means worthy publication. TOLLER.

⁷ — none else would: —] None else would be so simple.

JOHNSON.

Speed.

Speed. Sir, I know that well enough.

Val. What dost thou know?

Speed. That she is not so fair, as (of you) well-favour'd.

Val. I mean, that her beauty is exquisite, but her favour infinite.

Speed. That's because the one is painted, and the other out of all count.

Val. How painted? and how out of count?

Speed. Marry, sir, so painted, to make her fair, that no man counts of her beauty.

Val. How bestgem'st thou me? I account of her beauty.

Speed. You never saw her since she was deform'd.

Val. How long hath she been deform'd?

Speed. Ever since you lov'd her.

Val. I have lov'd her, ever since I saw her; and still I see her beautiful.

Speed. If you love her, you cannot see her.

Val. Why?

Speed. Because love is blind. O, that you had mine eyes; or your own eyes had the lights they were wont to have, when you chid at sir Protheus for going ungarter'd!

Val. What should I see then?

Speed. Your own present folly, and her passing deformity: for he, being in love, could not see to garter his hose; and you, being in love, cannot see to put on your hose.

Val. Belike, boy, then you are in love; for last morning you could not see to wipe my shoes.

Speed. True, sir; I was in love with my bed: I thank you, you swing'd me for my love, which makes me the bolder to chide you for yours.

Val. In conclusion, I stand affected to her.

Speed. I would you were set, so your affection would cease.

Val.

Val. Last night she injoin'd me to write some lines to one she loves.

Speed. And have you?

Val. I have.

Speed. Are they not lamely writ?

Val. No, boy, but as well as I can do them:—
Peace, here she comes.

Enter Silvia.

Speed. * Oh excellent motion! Oh exceeding puppet! now will he interpret to her.

Val. Madam and mistress, a thousand good morrows.

Speed. Oh! 'give ye good even! here's a million of manners.

Sil. * Sir Valentine and servant, to your two thousand.

Speed.

* Oh excellent motion! &c.] Motion, in Shakespeare's time, signified puppet. In Ben Jonson's Bartolomeus Fair it is frequently used in that sense, or rather perhaps to signify a puppet-show; the master whereof may properly be said to be an interpreter, as being the explainer of the inarticulate language of the actors. The speech of the servant is an allusion to that practice, and he means to say, that Silvia is a puppet, and that Valentine is to interpret to, or rather for her. SIR J. HAWKINS:

So, in The City Match, 1639, by Jasper Maine:

" ——— his mother came,

" Who follows strange fights out of town, and went

" To Brentford for a motion." —

Again, in Beaumont and Fletcher's Rule a Wife, &c.:

" ——— let me see him,

" And if he be that motion that thou speak'st of."

Again, in The Pilgrim:

" ——— Nothing but a motion?

" A puppet pilgrim?" —

Again, in Love and Honour, by Sir W. Davenant, 1649:

" — The motion of Queen Guinever's death

" Acted by puppets would please you as well." STEEVENS.

* Sir Valentine and servant, —] Here Silvia calls her lover servant, and again below her gentle servant. This was the language of ladies to their lovers at the time when Shakespeare wrote.

SIR J. HAWKINS.

So

Speed. He should give her interest; and she gives it him.

Val. As you enjoin'd me, I have writ your letter,
Unto the secret nameless friend of yours;
Which I was much unwilling to procted in,
But for my duty to your ladyship.

Sil. I thank you, gentle servant: 'tis very clerkly done¹.

Val. Now trust me, madam, it came hardly off²;
For, being ignorant to whom it goes,
I writ at random, very doubtfully.

Sil. Perchance you think too much of so much pains?

Val. No, madam; so it stead you, I will write,
Please you command, a thousand times as much:
And yet,—

Sil. A pretty period! Well, I guess the sequel;
And yet I will not name it:—and yet I care not;—
And yet take this again;—and yet I thank you;
Meaning henceforth to trouble you no more.

Speed. And yet you will; and yet another yet.

[Aside.

Val. What means your ladyship? do you not like it?

Sil. Yes, yes! the lines are very quaintly writ:—
But since unwillingly, take them again;
Nay, take them.

So in Marston's What you will, 1607:

"Sweet sister, let's sit in judgment a little; faith upon my servant Monsieur Laverdure.

Md. Troth, well for a servant, but for a husband!"
Again, in Ben Jonson's Every Man out of his Humour:

"Every man was not born with my servant Brisk's features." STEEVENS.

¹ —'tis very clerkly done.] i. e. like a scholar.

So in the Merry Wives of Windsor:

"Thou art clerkly, fit John, clerkly." STEEVENS.

² —it came hardly off;] A similar phrase occurs in Timon, act I. sc. i:

"This comes off well and excellent." STEEVENS.

Val. Madam, they are for you.

Sil. Ay, ay; you writ them, fir, at my request;
But I will none of them; they are for you:
I would have had them writ more movingly.

Val. Please you, I'll write your ladyship another.

Sil. And, when it's writ, for my sake read it over:
And, if it please you, so; if not, why, so.

Val. If it please me, madam? what then?

Sil. Why, if it please you, take it for your labour;
And so good-morrow, servant. [Exit.]

Speed. O jest unseen, inscrutable, invisible,
As a nose on a man's face, or a weathercock on a steeple!

My master sues to her; and she hath taught her suitor,
He being her pupil, to become her tutor.

O excellent device! was there ever heard a better?
That my master, being the scribe, to himself should write the letter?

Val. How now, fir? what are you? reasoning with yourself?

Speed. Nay, I was rhiming; 'tis you that have the reason.

Val. To do what?

Speed. To be a spokesman from madam Silvia.

Val. To whom?

Speed. To yourself: why, she wooes you by a figure.

Val. What figure?

Speed. By a letter, I should say.

Val. Why, she hath not writ to me?

Speed. What need she, when she made you write to yourself? Why, do you not perceive the jest?

Val. No, believe me.

Speed. No believing you indeed, fir: But did you perceive her earnest?

Val. She gave me none, except an angry word.

Speed. Why, she hath given you a letter.

³ —reasoning with yourself? That is, discoursing, talking.
An Italianism. JOHNSON.

Val.

Val. That's the letter I writ to her friend.

Speed. And that letter hath she deliver'd, and there an end.

Val. I would, ~~it were~~ no worse.

Speed. I'll warrant you, 'tis as well:

*For often you have writ to her; and she, in modesty,
Or else for want of idle time, could not again reply;
Or fearing else some messenger, that might her mind dis-* cover,

Herself hath taught her love himself to write unto her lover.—

All this I speak in print; for in print I found it.—

Why muse you, sir? 'tis dinner time.

Val. I have din'd.

Speed. Ay, but hearken, sir: though theameleon love can feed on the air, I am one that am nourish'd by my victuals, and would fain have meat: Oh be not like your mistress; be moved, be moved.

[Exeunt.]

S C E N E II.

Julia's house at Verona.

Enter Proteus and Julia.

Pro. Have patience, gentle Julia.

Jul. I must, where is no remedy.

Pro. When possibly I can, I will return.

⁴ ——— and there an end] i. e. there's the conclusion of the matter. So in Macbeth:

“ ——— a time has been

“ That when the brains were out, the man would die,

“ And there an end.” ——— STEEVENS.

⁵ All this I speak in print;] In print means with exactness.
So in the comedy of All Fools, 1605:

“ ——— not a hair

“ About his butt, but it stands in print.” STEEVENS.

Jul. If you turn not, you will return the sooner :
Keep this remembrance for thy Julia's sake.

Pro. Why then we'll make ~~exchange~~ ^{give a ring} ; here, take you this.

Jul. And seal the bargain with a holy kiss.

Pro. Here is my hand for my true constancy ;
And when that hour o'er-slips me in the day,
Wherein I sigh not, Julia, for thy sake,
The next ensuing hour some foul mischance
Torment me for my love's forgetfulness !
My father stays my coming ; answer not ;
The tide is now : nay, not thy tide of tears ;
That tide will stay me longer than I should :

[Exit Julia.]

Julia, farewell.—What ! gone without a word ?
Ay, so true love should do : it cannot speak ;
For truth hath better deeds, than words, to grace it.

Enter Panthino.

Pan. Sir Protheus, you are staid for.

Pro. Go ; I come, I come : —

Alas ! this parting strikes poor lovers dumb. [Exeunt.]

S C E N E III.

A street.

Enter Launce, leading a dog.

Laun. Nay, 'twill be this hour ere I have done weeping ; all the kind of the Launces have this very fault : I have receiv'd my proportion, like the prodigious son, and am going with sir Protheus to the imperial's court. I think, Crab my dog be the fourest natur'd dog that lives : my mother weeping, my father wailing, my sister crying, our maid howling,

howling, our cat wringing her hands, and all our house in a great perplexity, yet did not this cruel-hearted cur shed one tear: he is a stone, a very pebble-stone, and has no more pity in him than a dog: a Jew would have wept to have seen our parting; why, my grandam having no eyes, look you, wept herself blind at my parting. Nay, I'll show you the manner of it: This shoe is my father;—no, this left shoe is my father;—no, no, this left shoe is my mother;—nay, that cannot be so neither;—yes, it is so, it is so; it hath the worser sole: This shoe, with the hole in it, is my mother, and this my father; A vengeance on't! there 'tis: now, sir, this staff is my sister; for, look you, she is as white as a lilly, and as small as a wand: this hat is Nan, our maid; ⁶ I am the dog:—no, the dog is himself, and ⁷ I am the dog,—oh, the dog is me, and I am myself; ay, so, so. Now come I to my father; Father, your blessing; now should not the shoe speak a word for weeping; now should I kiss my father; well, he weeps on: now come I to my mother;—oh that she could speak now ⁸ like a wood woman!

⁶ —I am the dog:—&c.] A similar thought occurs in a play of elder date than this. See A Christian turn'd Turk, 1642.

“—you shall stand for the lady, you for her dog, and I the page; you and the dog looking one upon another: the page presents himself.” STEEVENS.

⁷ —I am the dog, &c.] This passage is much confused, and of confusion the present reading makes no end. Sir T. Hanmer reads, I am the dog, no, the dog is himself and I am me, the dog is the dog, and I am myself. This certainly is more reasonable, but I know not how much reason the author intended to bestow on Launce's soliloquy. JOHNSON.

⁸ —like a wood woman! —] The first folios agree in would-woman; for which, because it was a mystery to Mr. Pope, he has unmeaningly substituted ould woman. But it must be writ, or at least understood, wood woman, i. e. crazy, frantic with grief; or distracted, from any other cause. The word is very frequently used in Chaucer; and sometimes writ wood, sometimes wode. THEOBALD.

woman!—well, I kiss her;—why there 'tis; here's my mother's breath up and down: now come I to my sister; mark the moan she makes: now the dog all this while sheds not a tear, nor speaks a word; but see how I lay the dust with my tears.

Enter Panthino.

Pan. Launce, away, away, aboard; thy master is shipp'd, and thou art to post after with oars. What's the matter? why weep'st thou, man? Away, afs; you will lose the tide, if you tarry any longer.

Laun. It is no matter if the ty'd were lost⁹; for it is the unkindest ty'd that ever any man ty'd.

Pan. What's the unkindest tide?

Laun. Why, he that's ty'd here; Crab, my dog.

Pan. Tut, man, I mean thou'lt lose the flood; and, in losing the flood, lose thy voyage; and, in losing thy voyage, lose thy master; and, in losing thy master, lose thy service; and, in losing thy service,—Why dost thou stop my mouth?

Laun. For fear thou should'st lose thy tongue,

Pan. Where should I lose my tongue?

Laun. In thy tale.

Ob that she could speak now like a wood woman!] I am not certain that I understand this passage. Wood, or crazy women, were anciently supposed to be able to tell fortunes. Launce may therefore mean, that as her gestures are those of frantic persons, so he wishes she was possessed of their other powers, and could predict his fate. Or should we point the line as interrupted?

Oh that she could speak now!—like a wood woman! meaning, I wish she could speak—but she behaves as if she were quit of her senses! STEEVENS.

⁹ —if the ty'd were lost; &c.] This quibble, wretched as it is, might have been borrowed by Shakespeare from Lilly's Endymion, 1591:

“You know it is said, the tide tarrieth for no man.—

“True.

“A monstrous lye: for I was ty'd two hours, and tarried for one to uplose me.”

The same occurs in Chapman's Andromeda Liberata, 1614:

“And now came roaring to the tied tide.” STEEVENS,

Pan.

Pan. In thy tail?

Laun. 'Lose the tide, and the voyage, and the master, and the service, and the tide?' Why, man, if the river were dry, I am able to fill it with my tears; if the wind were down, I could drive the boat with my sighs.

Pan. Come, come away, man; I was sent to call thee.

Laun. Sir, call me what thou dar'st.

Pan. Wilt thou go?

Laun. Well, I will go.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.

MILAN.

An apartment in the duke's palace.

Enter Valentine, Silvia, Thurio, and Speed.

Sil. Servant,—

Val. Mistress?

Speed. Master, sir Thurio frowns on you.

Val. Ay, boy, it's for love.

Speed. Not of you.

Val. Of my mistress then.

Speed. 'Twere good, you knock'd him.

Sil. Servant, you are sad.

Val. Indeed, madam, I seem so.

Thu. Seem you that you are not?

Val. Haply, I do.

Thu. So do counterfeit.

Val. So do you.

Thu. What seem I, that I am not?

Val. Wife.

[Lose the tide, —] Thus the old copy. The modern editors read—the flood. STEEVENS.

[—and the tide?] I should suppose these three words to be repeated through some error of the printer. STEEVENS.

Thu. What instance of the contrary?

Val. Your folly.

Thu. And how quote you my folly?

Val. I quote it in your jerkin.

Thu. My jerkin is a doublet.

Val. Well, then, I'll double your folly.

Thu. How?

Sil. What, angry, fir Thurio? do you change colour?

Val. Give him leave, madam; he is a kind of cameleon.

Thu. That hath more mind to feed on your blood, than live in your air.

Val. You have said, fir.

Thu. Ay, fir, and done too, for this time.

Val. I know it well, fir; you always end ere you begin.

Sil. A fine volley of words, gentlemen, and quickly shot off.

Val. 'Tis indeed, madam; we thank the giver.

Sil. Who is that, servant?

Val. Yourself, sweet lady; for you gave the fire; fir Thurio borrows his wit from your ladyship's looks, and spends what he borrows, kindly in your company.

Thu. Sir, if you spend word for word with me, I shall make your wit bankrupt.

Val. I know it well, fir: you have an exchequer of words, and, I think, no other treasure to give your followers; for it appears by their bare liveries, that they live by your bare words.

Sil. No more, gentlemen, no more; here comes my father.

* — how quote you my folly?] To quote is to observe.
So in Hamlet:

“ I am sorry that with better heed and judgment

“ I had not quoted him.” STEEVENS.

Enter

Enter the Duke.

Duke. Now, daughter Silvia, you are hard beset,
Sir Valentine, your father's in good health :
What say you to a letter from your friends
Of much good news ?

Val My lord, I will be thankful
To any happy messenger from thence.

Duke. Know you Don Anthonio, your countryman ?

Val. Ay, my good lord, I know the gentleman
To be of worth, and worthy estimation,
And * not without desert so well reputed.

Duke. Hath he not a son ?

Val. Ay, my good lord ; a son, that well deserves
The honour and regard of such a father.

Duke. You know him well ?

Val. I knew him, as myself ; for from our infancy
We have convers'd, and spent our hours together :
And though myself have been an idle truant,
Omitting the sweet benefit of time,
To cloath mine age with angel-like perfection ;
Yet hath sir Protheus, for that's his name,
Made use and fair advantage of his days ;
His years but young, but his experience old : —
His head unmellow'd, but his judgment ripe ;
And, in a word, (for far behind his worth Come all the praises that I now bestow)
He is complete in feature, and in mind,
With all good grace to grace a gentleman.

Duke. Bestrew me, sir, but, if he make this good,
He is as worthy for an empreis' love,
As meet to be an emperor's counsellor.
Well, sir ; this gentleman is come to me,
With commendation from great potentates ;

* —not without desert—] And not dignified with so much reputation without proportionate merit. JOHNSON.

And

And here he means to spend his time a-while :
I think, 'tis no unwelcome news to you.

Val. Should I have wish'd a thing, it had been he.

Duke. Welcome him then according to his worth ;
Silvia, I speak to you ; and you, sir Thurio :—
For Valentine, I need not cite him to it :
I'll send him hither to you presently. [Exit Duke.]

Val. This is the gentleman, I told your ladyship,
Had come along with me, but that his mistress
Did hold his eyes lock'd in her crystal looks.

Sil. Belike, that now she hath enfranchis'd them
Upon some other pawn for fealty.

Val. Nay, sure, I think, she holds them prisoners still.

Sil. Nay, then he should be blind ; and, being blind,
How could he see his way to seek out you ?

Val. Why, lady, love hath twenty pair of eyes.

Thu. They say, that love hath not an eye at all.

Val. To see such lovers, Thurio, as yourself ;
Upon a homely object love can wink.

Enter Protheus.

Sil. Have done, have done ; here comes the gentleman.

Val. Welcome, dear Protheus !—Mistress, I beseech you, Confirm his welcome with some special favour.

Sil. His worth is warrant for his welcome hither,
If this be he you oft have wish'd to hear from.

Val. Mistress, it is : sweet lady, ~~entertain him~~
To be my fellow-servant to your ladyship.

Sil. Too low a mistress for so high a servant.

Pro. Not so, sweet lady ; but too mean a servant
To have a look of such a worthy mistress.

Val. Leave off discourse of disability :—
Sweet lady, entertain him for your servant.

Pro. My duty will I boast of, nothing else.

Sil.

Sil. And duty never yet did want his need :
 Servant, you are welcome to a worthless mistress.

Pro. I'll die on him that says so, but yourself.

Sil. That you are welcome ?

Pro. ' No ; that you are worthless.

Enter Servant.

Ser. ' Madam ; my lord your father would speak with you.

Sil. I'll wait upon his pleasure. [Exit Serv.] Come,
 Sir Thurio,

Go with me :—Once more, new servant, welcome :

I'll leave you to confer of home-affairs ;

When you have done, we look to hear from you.

Pro. We'll both attend upon your ladyship.

[Exit Silvia and Thurio.]

Val. Now, tell me, how do all from whence you came ?

Pro. Your friends are well ; and have them much commended.

Val. And how do yours ?

Pro. I left them all in health.

Val. How does your lady ? and how thrives your love ?

Pro. My tales of love were wont to weary you ;
 I know, you joy not in a love-discourse.

Val. Ay, Protheus, but that life is alter'd now ;
 I have done penance for contemning love ;

7 Whose high imperious thoughts have punish'd me

5 No ; that you are worthless.] I have inserted the particle no to fill up the measure. JOHNSON.

Val. Madam, my lord your father—] This speech in all the editions is assigned improperly to Thurio ; but he has been all along upon the stage, and could not know that the duke wanted his daughter. Besides, the first line and half of Silvia's answer is evidently addressed to two persons. A servant, therefore, must come in and deliver the message ; and then Silvia goes out with Thurio. THEOBALD.

7 Whose high imperious —] For whose I read those. I have contemned love and am punished. Those high thoughts by which I exalted myself above human passions or frailties, have brought upon me falls and groans. JOHNSON.

With

With bitter fasts, with penitential groans,
 With nightly tears, and daily heart-fore sighs ;
 For, in revenge of my contempt of love,
 Love hath chac'd sleep from my enthralled eyes,
 And made them watchers of mine own heart's sorrow,
 O, gentle Protheus, love's a mighty lord ;
 And hath so humbled me, as, I confess,
 There is * no woe to his correction,
 Nor, to his service; no such joy on earth !
 Now, no discourse, except it be of love ;
 Now can I break my fast, dine, sup, and sleep,
 Upon the very naked name of love.

Pro. Enough ; I read your fortune in your eye ;
 Was this the idol that you worship so ?

Val. Even she ; and is she not a heavenly saint ?

Pro. No ; but she is an earthly paragon.

Val. Call her divine.

Pro. I will not flatter her.

Val. O flatter me ; for love delights in praise.

Pro. When I was sick, you gave me bitter pills ;
 And I must minister the like to you.

Val. Then speak the truth by her ; if not divine,
 Yet let her be † a principality,
 Sovereign to all the creatures on the earth.

Pro. Except my mistress,

Val. Sweet, except not any ;
 Except thou wilt except against my love.

Pro. Have I not reason to prefer mine own ?

* —no woe to his correction ;] No misery that can be compared to the punishment inflicted by love. ~~Herbert~~ called for the prayers of the liturgy a little before his death, saying, None to them, none to them. JOHNSON.

The same idiom occurs in an old ballad quoted in Cupid's Whirligig, 1616:

“ There is no comfort in the world

“ To women that are kind.” MALONE.

† —a principality,] The first or principal of women. So the old writers use state. “ She is a lady, a great state.” Latymer. “ This look is called in states warlike, in others otherwife.” Sir T. More.

JOHNSON.

Val. And I will help thee to prefer her too :
 She shall be dignified with this high honour,—
 To bear my lady's train ; lest the base earth
 Should from her vesture chance to steal a kiss,
 And, of so great a favour growing proud,
 Disdain to root the ' summer-swelling flower,
 And make rough winter everlastingly.

Pro. Why, Valentine, what braggardism is this ?

Val. Pardon me, Protheus : all I can, is nothing
 To her, whose worth makes other worthies nothing ;
 ' She is alone.

Pro. Then let her alone.

Val. Not for the world : why, man, she is mine own ;

And I as rich in having such a jewel,
 As twenty seas, if all their sand were pearl,
 The water nectar, and the rocks pure gold.
 Forgive me, that I do not dream on thee,
 Because thou see'st me doat upon my love.
 My foolish rival, that her father likes,
 Only for his possessions are so huge,
 Is gone with her along ; and I must after,
 For love, thou know'st, is full of jealousy.

Pro. But she loves you ?

Val. Ay, and we are betroth'd ; nay, more, our marriage hour,
 With all the cunning manner of our flight,

* ——— summer-swelling flower,] I once thought that the poet had written summer-smelling ; but the epithet which stands in the text I have since met with in the translation of Lucan, by Sir Arthur Gorges, 1614, v. vii. p. 354 :

“ — no Roman chieftaine should • “ Come neare to Nyles Pelusian mould,

“ But shun that summer-swelling shore.”

The original is, “ — ripasque æstate tumentes,” l. 829. May likewise renders it summer-swelled banks. The summer-swelling flower is the flower which swells in summer, till it expands itself into bloom. STEEVENS.

* She is alone.] She stands by herself. There is none to be compared to her. JOHNSON.

Determin'd

Determin'd of : how I must climb her window ;
 The ladder made of cords ; and all the means
 Plotted, and 'greed on, for my happiness.
 Good Protheus, go with me to my chamber,
 In these affairs, to aid me with thy counsel.

Pro. Go on before ; I shall enquire you forth :
 I must unto the road, to disembark
 Some necessaries that I needs must use ;
 And then I'll presently attend you.

Val. Will you make haste ?

Pro. I will.—

[Exit Val.]

Even as one heat another heat expels,
 Or as one nail by strength drives out another,
 So the remembrance of my former love
 Is by a newer object quite forgotten.
 Is it mine eye, or Valentino's praise,
 Her true perfection, or my false transgression,
 That makes me, reasonless, to reason thus ?
 She's fair ; and so is Julia, that I love ;—
 That I did love, for now my love is thaw'd ;
 Which, like a waxen image 'gainst a fire⁴,
 Bears no impression of the thing it was.
 Methinks, my zeal to Valentine is cold ;

³ Is it mine THEN, or Valentino's praise,] Here Protheus questions with himself, whether it is his own praise, or Valentine's, that makes him fall in love with Valentine's mistress. But not to insist on the absurdity of falling in love through his own praises, he had not indeed praised her any farther than giving his opinion of her in three words, when his friend asked it of him. In all the old editions we find the line printed thus :

It is mine, or Valentino's praise ? ~~—————~~

A word is wanting. The line was originally thus :

Is it mine EYE, or Valentino's praise ?

Protheus had just seen Valentine's mistress, whom her lover had been lavishly praising. His encomiums therefore heightening Protheus's idea of her at the interview, it was the less wonder he should be uncertain which had made the strongest impression, Valentine's praises, or his own view of her. WARBURTON.

⁴ — a waxen image 'gainst a fire,] Alluding to the figures made by witches, as representatives of those whom they designed to torment or destroy. STEEVENS.

And

And that I love him not, as I was wont ;
 O ! but I love his lady too, too much ;
 And that's the reason I love him so little.
 How shall I doat on her ^s with more advice,
 That thus without advice begin to love her ?
 'Tis but her picture I have yet beheld,
 And that hath dazzled so my reason's light ;
 But when I look on her perfections,
 There is no reason but I shall be blind.
 If I can check my erring love, I will ;
 If not, to compass her I'll use my skill.

[Exit.

^s — with more advice,] With more prudence, with more discretion. JOHNSON.

With more advice, is on further knowledge, on better consideration.
 So in Titus Andronicus :

"The Greeks, upon advice, did bury Ajax."

The word, as Mr. Malone observes, is still current among mercantile people, whose constant language is, "We are advised by letters from abroad," meaning informed. So in bills, the conclusion always is — "Without further advice." So in this very play :

"This pride of hers, upon advice, &c."

So in Measure for Measure :

"Yet did repent me after more advice." STEEVENS.

⁶ 'Tis but her picture —] This is evidently a slip of attention, for he had seen her in the last scene, and in high terms offered her his service. JOHNSON.

I believe Protheus means, that, as yet, he had seen only her outward form, without having known her long enough to have any acquaintance with her mind.

So in Cymbeline :

"All of her, that is, out of door, most rich !

"If she be furnish'd with a mind so rare, &c."

Again, in the Winter's Tale, act II. sc. i :

"Praise her ~~but~~ for this her without-door form."

STEEVENS.

160 TWO GENTLEMEN

S C E N E V.

A street.

Enter Speed and Launce.

Speed. Launce! by mine honesty, welcome to Milan.

Laun. Forswear not thyself, sweet youth; for I am not welcome. I reckon this always—that a man is never undone, till he be hang'd; nor never welcome to a place, till some certain shot be paid, and the hostess say, welcome.

Speed. Come on, you mad-cap, I'll to the ale-house with you presently; where, for one shot of five pence, thou shalt have five thousand welcomes. But, firrah, how did thy master part with madam Julia?

Laun. Marry, after they clos'd in earnest, they parted very fairly in jest.

Speed. But shall she marry him?

Laun. No.

Speed. How then? shall he marry her?

Laun. No, neither.

Speed. What, are they broken?

Laun. No, they are both as whole as a fish.

Speed. Why then how stands the matter with them?

Laun. Marry, thus; when it stands well with him, it stands well with her.

Speed. What an ass art thou? I understand thee not.

Laun. What a block art thou, that thou canst not? My staff understands me.

† It is Padua in the former editions. See the note on act III.
POPE.

‡ My staff understands me.] This equivocation, miserable as it is, has been admitted by Milton in his great poem. B. vi:

" — The

Speed. What thou say'st ?

Laun. Ay, and what I do too : look thee, I'll but lean, and my staff understands me.

Speed. It stands under thee, indeed.

Laun. Why, stand-under and understand is all one.

Speed. But tell me true, will't be a match ?

Laun. Ask my dog : if he say, ay, it will ; if he say, no, it will ; if he shake his tail, and say nothing, it will.

Speed. The conclusion is then, that it will.

Laun. Thou shalt never get such a secret from me, but by a parable.

Speed. 'Tis well that I get it so. But, Launce, how say'st thou, that my master is become a notable lover ?

Laun. I never knew him otherwise.

Speed. Than how ?

Laun. A notable lubber, as thou reportest him to be.

Speed. Why, thou whorson ass, thou mistakest me.

Laun. Why, fool, I meant not thee ; I meant thy master.

Speed. I tell thee, my master is become a hot lover.

Laun. Why, I tell thee, I care not though he burn himself in love. If thou wilt go with me to the ale-house, so ; if not, thou art an Hebrew, a Jew, and not worth the name of a Christian.

Speed. Why ?

Laun. Because thou hast not so much charity in thee, as to go to the ale-house⁹ with a Christian : wilt thou go ?

Speed. At thy service.

[Exeunt.

SCENE

“ — The terms we sent were terms of weight,
 “ Such as we may perceive, amaz'd them all,
 “ And stagger'd many ; who receives them right,
 “ Had need from head to foot well understand ;
 “ Not understood, this gift they have besides,
 “ To shew us when our foes stand not upright.”

JOHNSON.

— the ale-house] The old copy reads only—the ale ; and
 Vol. I. M Ales

SCENE VI.

Enter Protheus.

Pro. To leave my Julia, shall I be forsworn;
To love fair Silvia, shall I be forsworn;
To wrong my friend, I shall be much forsworn;
And even that power, which gave me first my oath,
Provokes me to this threefold perjury.
Love bad me swear, and love bids me forswear:
O sweet-suggesting love, if thou hast sinn'd,
Teach me, thy tempted subject, to excuse it!
At first I did adore a twinkling star,
But now I worship a celestial sun.
Unheedful vows may heedfully be broken;
And he wants wit, that wants resolved will
To learn his wit to exchange the bad for better.—
Fie, fie, unreverend tongue! to call her bad,
Whose sovereignty so oft thou hast preferr'd
With twenty thousand soul-confirming oaths.
I cannot leave to love, and yet I do;

Ales were merry-meetings instituted in country places. Thus Ben Jonson:

- “And all the neighbourhood, from old records
- “Of antique proverbs drawn from Whitsun lords,
- “And their authorities at wakes and ales,
- “With country precedents and old wives’ tales,
- “We bring you now.” STEEVENS.

* It is to be observed, that in the first folio edition, the only edition of authority, there are no directions concerning the scenes; they have been added by the later editors, and may therefore be changed by any reader that can give more consistency or regularity to the drama by such alterations. I make this remark in this place, because I know not whether the following soliloquy of Protheus is so proper in the street. JOHNSON.

² O sweet-suggesting love, — } To suggest is to tempt in our author’s language. So again:

“Knowing that tender youth is soon suggested.”
The sense is. O tempting love, if thou hast influenced me to sin, teach me to excuse it. Dr. Warburton reads, if I have sinn’d; but, I think, not only without necessity, but with less elegance.

JOHNSON.

But

But there I leave to love, where I should love.
 Julia I lose, and Valentine I lose :
 If I keep them, I needs must lose myself ;
 If I lose them, this find I by their loss,
 For Valentine, myself ; for Julia, Silvia.
 I to myself am dearer than a friend ;
 For love is still more precious in itself :
 And Silvia, witness heaven, that made her fair !
 Shews Julia but a swarthy Ethiopie.
 I will forget that Julia is alive,
 Remembring that my love to her is dead ;
 And Valentine I'll hold an enemy,
 Aiming at Silvia as a sweeter friend.
 I cannot now prove constant to myself,
 Without some treachery us'd to Valentine : —
 This night, he meaneth with a corded ladder
 To climb celestial Silvia's chamber-window ;
 I myself in counsel, his competitor :
 Now presently I'll give her father notice
 Of their disguising, and ⁴ pretended flight ;
 Who, all enrag'd, will banish Valentine ;
 For Thurio, he intends, shall wed his daughter :
 But, Valentine being gone, I'll quickly cross,
 By some sly trick, blunt Thurio's dull proceeding.
 Love, lend me wings to make my purpose swift,
 As thou hast lent me wit to plot this drift ! [Exit.]

³ Myself, who am his competitor or rival, being admitted to his counsel. JOHNSON.

Competitor is confederate, assistant, partner.

⁴ So in Antony and Cleopatra:

“ It is not Cæsar's natural vice, to hate

“ One great competitor.”

and he is speaking of Lepidus, one of the triumvirate. STEEVENS.

⁵ — pretended flight ;] We may read intended flight. JOHNSON.

Pretended flight is proposed or intended flight. So in Macheth :

“ — What good could they pretend ? ” STEEVENS.

⁶ I suspect that the author concluded the act with this couplet, and that the next scene should begin the third act ; but the change, as it will add nothing to the probability of the action, is of no great importance. JOHNSON.

S C E N E VII,

Julia's house in Verona.Enter Julia and Lucetta.

Jul. Counsel, Lucetta; gentle girl, assist me!
 And, even in kind love, I do conjure thee,—
 Who art the table wherein all my thoughts
 Are visibly character'd and engrav'd,—
 To lesson me; and tell me some good mean,
 How, with my honour, I may undertake
 A journey to my loving Protheus.

Luc. Alas! the way is wearisome and long.

Jul. A true-devoted pilgrim is not weary
 To measure kingdoms with his feeble steps;
 Much less shall she, that hath love's wings to fly;
 And when the flight is made to one so dear,
 Of such divine perfection, as sir Protheus.

Luc. Better forbear, till Protheus make return.

Jul. Oh, know'st thou not, his looks are my soul's food?

Pity the dearth that I have pined in,
 By longing for that food so long a time.
 Didst thou but know the inly touch of love,
 Thou would'st as soon go kindle fire with snow,
 As seek to quench the fire of love with words.

Luc. I do not seek to quench your love's hot fire;
 But qualify the fire's extreme rage;
 Lest it should burn above the bounds of reason.

Jul. The more thou damm'st it up, the more it burns:

The current, that with gentle murmur glides,
 Thou know'st, being stopp'd, impatiently doth rage;
 But, when his fair course is not hindered,
 He makes sweet musick with the enamel'd stones,
 Giving a gentle kiss to every sedge.

He

He overtaketh in his pilgrimage;
 And so by many winding nooks he strays,
 With willing sport, to the wild ocean.
 Then let me go, and hinder not my course:
 I'll be as patient as a gentle stream,
 And make a pastime of each weary step,
 Till the last step have brought me to my love;
 And there I'll rest, as, after much turmoil,
 A blessed soul doth in Elysium.

Luc. But in what habit will you go along?

Jul. Not like a woman; for I would prevent
 The loose encounters of lascivious men:
 Gentle Lucetta, 'fit me with such weeds
 As may beseem some well-reputed page.

Luc. Why then your ladyship must cut your hair.

Jul. No, girl; I'll knit it up in filken strings,
 With twenty odd-conceited true-love knots:
 To be fantastic, may become a youth
 Of greater time than I shall shew to be.

Luc. What fashion, madam, shall I make your breeches?

Jul. That fits as well, as—"tell me, good my lord,
 "What compass will you wear your farthingale?"
 Why, even that fashion thou best lik'st, Lucetta,

Luc. You must needs have them⁶ with a cod-piece, madam.

Jul. Out, out, Lucetta⁷! that will be ill-favour'd.

⁶ —with a cod-piece, &c.] Whoever wishes to be acquainted with this particular, relative to dress, may consult Bulwer's Artificial Changeling, in which such matters are very amply discussed. Ocular instruction may be had from the armour shewn as John of Gaunt's in the Tower of London. The same fashion appears to have been no less offensive in France. See Montaigne, chap. XXII. The custom of sticking pins in this ostentatious piece of indecenty, was continued by the illiberal warders of the Tower, till forbidden by authority. STEEVENS.

⁷ Out, out, Lucetta! &c.] Dr. Percy observes, that this interjection is still used in the North. It seems to have the same meaning as apage, Lat. STEEVENS.

Luc. A round hose, madam, now's not worth a pin,

Unless you have a cod-piece to stick pins on.

Jul. Lucetta, as thou lov'st me, let me have
What thou think'st meet, and is most mannerly ;
But tell me, weñch, how will the world repute me,
For undertaking so unstaid a journey ?
I fear me, it will make me scandaliz'd.

Luc. If you think so, then stay at home, and go not.

Jul. Nay, that I will not.

Luc. Then never dream on infamy, but go.
If Protheus like your journey, when you come,
No matter who's displeas'd, when you are gone :
I fear me, he will scarce be pleas'd withal.

Jul. That is the least, Lucetta, of my fear :
A thousand oaths, an ocean of his tears,
And instances * as infinite of love,
Warrant me welcome to my Protheus.

Luc. All these are servants to deceitful men.

Jul. Base men, that use them to so base effect !
But truer stars did govern Protheus' birth :
His words are bonds, his oaths are oracles ;
His love sincere, his thoughts immaculate ;
His tears, pure messengers sent from his heart ;
His heart as far' from fraud, as heaven from earth,

Luc. Pray heaven, he prove so, when you come to him !

Jul. Now, as thou lov'st me, do him not that wrong,
To bear a hard opinion of his truth :
Only deserve my love, by loving him ;
And presently go with me to my chamber,
To take a note of what I stand in need of,
To furnish me upon my longing journey ?
All that is mine I leave at thy dispose, .

* — of infinite —] Old edit. JOHNSON.

† — my longing journey.] Dr. Gray observes, that longing is a participle active, with a passive signification; for longed, wished or desired. STEEVENS.

My goods, my lands, my reputation ;
 Only, in lieu thereof, dispatch me hence.
 Come, answer not, but to it presently ;
 I am impatient of my tarriance.

[Exeunt.]

ACT III. SCENE I.

The duke's palace in Milan.

Enter Duke, Thurio, and Protheus.

Duke. Sir Thurio, give us leave, I pray, awhile ;
 We have some secrets to confer about.——

[Exit Thur.]

Now, tell me, Protheus, what's your will with me ?

Pro. My gracious lord, that which I would discover,
 The law of friendship bids me to conceal :

But, when I call to mind your gracious favours

Done to me, undeserving as I am,

My duty pricks me on to utter that

Which else no worldly good should draw from me.

Know, worthy prince, sir Valentine, my friend,

This night intends to steal away your daughter ;

Myself am one made privy to the plot.

I know, you have determin'd to bestow her

On Thurio, whom your gentle daughter hates ;

And should she thus be stolen away from you,

It would be much vexation to your age.

Thus, for my duty's sake, I rather chose

To cross my friend in his intended drift,

Than, by concealing it, heap on your head

A pack of sorrows, which would press you down,

Being unprevented, to your timeless grave.

Duke. Protheus, I thank thee for thine honest care ;

Which to requite, command me while I live.

This love of theirs myself have often seen,

Haply, when they have judg'd me fast asleep;
 And oftentimes have purpos'd to forbid
 Sir Valentine her company, and my court:
 But, fearing lest my jealous aim¹ might err,
 And so, unworthily, disgrace the man,
 (A rashness that I ever yet have shunn'd)
 I gave him gentle looks; thereby to find
 That which thyself hast now disclos'd to me.
 And, that thou may'st perceive my fear of this,
 Knowing that tender youth is soon suggested,
 I nightly lodge her in an upper tower,
 The key whereof myself have ever kept;
 And thence she cannot be convey'd away.

Pro. Know, noble lord, they have devis'd a mean
 How he her chamber-window will ascend,
 And with a corded ladder fetch her down;
 For which the youthful lover now is gone,
 And this way comes he with it presently;
 Where, if it please you, you may intercept him.
 But, good my lord, do it so cunningly,
 That my discovery² be not aimed at;
 For love of you, not hate unto my friend,
 Hath made me publisher³ of this pretence.

Duke. Upon mine honour, he shall never know
 That I had any light from thee of this.

Pro. Adieu, my lord; sir Valentine is coming.

{ Exit Pro.

* Enter Valentine.

Duke. Sir Valentine, whither away so fast?

¹ — jealous aim] Aim is guess, in this instance, as in the following. So in Romeo and Juliet:

“ I aim'd so near when I suppos'd you lov'd.” STEEVENS.

² — be not aimed at :] Be not guessed. JOHNSON.

³ — of this pretence.] Of this claim made to your daughter. JOHNSON.

Pretence is design. So in K. Lear: “ ——— to feel my affection to your honour, and no other pretence of danger.”

Again, in the same play; “ ——— pretence and purpose of unkindness.” STEEVENS.

Val.

Val. Please it your grace, there is a messenger
That stays to bear my letters to my friends,
And I am going to deliver them.

Duke. Be they of much import?

Val. The tenor of them doth but signify
My health, and happy being at your court.

Duke. Nay, then no matter ; stay with me a while ;
I am to break with thee of some affairs,
That touch me near, wherein thou must be secret.
'Tis not unknown to thee, that I have sought
To match my friend, sir Thurio, to my daughter.

Val. I know it well, my lord; and, sure, the match
Were rich and honourable; besides, the gentleman
Is full of virtue, bounty, worth, and qualities
Beseeming such a wife as your fair daughter :
Cannot your grace win her to fancy him ?

Duke. No, trust me; she is peevish, fullen, froward,
Proud, disobedient, stubborn, lacking duty;
Neither regarding that she is my child,
Nor fearing me as if I were her father :
And, may I say to thee, this pride of hers,
Upon advice, hath drawn my love from her ;
And, where I thought the remnant of mine age
Should have been cherish'd by her child-like duty,
I now am full resolv'd to take a wife,
And turn her out to who will take her in :
Then let her beauty be her wedding-dower ;
For me, and my possessions, she esteems not.

Val. What would your grace have me to do in this?

Duke. There is a lady, ⁺ fir, in Milan, here,
Whom I affect; but she is nice, and coy,
And nought esteems my aged eloquence:

* 4 —sir, in Milan, here,] It ought to be thus, instead of—in Verona, here—for the scene apparently is in Milan, as is clear from several passages in the first act, and in the beginning of the first scene of the fourth act. A like mistake has crept into the eighth scene of act II. where Speed bids his fellow-servant Launce welcome to Padua.

POPE,

Now,

170 TWO GENTLEMEN

Now, therefore, would I have thee to my tutor,
(For long ago I have forgot to court;
Besides, ' the fashion of the time is chang'd)
How, and which way, I may bestow myself,
To be regarded in her sun-bright eye.

Val. Win her with gifts, if she respect not words;
Dumb jewels often, in their silent kind,
More than quick words, do move a woman's mind.

Duke. But she did scorn a present that I sent her.

Val. A woman scorns sometimes what best contents
her;

Send her another; never give her o'er;
For scorn at first makes after-love the more.
If she do frown, 'tis not in hate of you,
But rather to beget more love in you:
If she do chide, 'tis not to have you gone;
For why, the fools are mad if left alone.
Take no repulse, whatever she doth say;
For, get you gone, she doth not mean, away:
Flatter, and praise, commend, extol their graces;
Though ne'er so black; say, they have angels' faces.
That man that hath a tongue, I say, is no man,
If with his tongue he cannot win a woman.

Duke. But she, I mean, is promis'd by her friends
Unto a youthful gentleman of worth;
And kept severely from resort of men,
That no man hath access by day to her.

Val. Why then I would resort to her by night.

Duke. Ay, but the doors be lock'd, and keys kept safe,

That no man hath recourse to her by night.

Val. What lets*, but one may enter at her window?

Duke. Her chamber is aloft, far from the ground;
And built so shelving, that one cannot climb it Without apparent hazard of his life.

* ——— the fashion of the time—] The modes of courtship, the acts by which men recommended themselves to ladies. JOHNSON.

* What lets,] i. e. what hinders. STEEVENS.

Val.

Val. Why, then a ladder, quaintly made of cords,
To cast up, with a pair of anchoring hooks,
Would serve to scale another Hero's tower,
So bold Leander would adventure it,

Duke. Now, as thou art a gentleman of blood,
Advise me where I may have such a ladder.

Val. When would you use it? pray, sir, tell me that.

Duke. This very night; for love is like a child,
That longs for every thing that he can come by.

Val. By seven o'clock I'll get you such a ladder.

Duke. But hark thee; I will go to her alone;
How shall I best convey the ladder thither?

Val. It will be light, my lord, that you may bear
it

Under a cloak, that is of any length,

Duke. A cloak as long as thine will serve the turn?

Val. Ay, my good lord.

Duke. Then let me see thy cloak;
I'll get me one of such another length.

Val. Why, any cloak will serve the turn, my lord.

Duke. How shall I fashion me to wear a cloak?—
I pray thee, let me feel thy cloak upon me.—
What letter is this same? what's here?—To Silvia?
And here an engine fit for my proceeding!
I'll be so bold to break the seal for once. [Duke reads.

My thoughts do harbour with my Silvia nightly;

And slaves they are to me, that send them flying:

Oh, could their master come and go as lightly,

Himself would lodge, where senseless they are lying.

My herald thoughts in thy pure bosom rest them;

While I, their king, that thither them importune,

Do curse the grace that with such grace hath bless'd them,

Because myself do want my servant's fortune:

I curse myself, for they are sent by me,

That they should harbour where their lord would be.

For they are sent by me,] For is the same as for that, since.

JOHNSON.

What's

What's here? Silvia, this night will I enfranchise thee:

'Tis so; and here's the ladder for the purpose.—

Why, Phaëton, (for thou art ^s Merops' son)

Wilt thou aspire to guide the heavenly car,

And with thy daring folly burn the world?

Wilt thou reach stars, because they shine on thee?

Go, base intruder! over-weening slave!

Bestow thy fawning smiles on equal mates;

And think, my patience, more than thy desert,

Is privilege for thy departure hence:

Thank me for this, more than for all the favours,

Which, all too much, I have bestow'd on thee.

But if thou linger in my territories,

Longer than swiftest expedition

Will give thee time to leave our royal court,

By heaven, my wrath shall far exceed the love

I ever bore my daughter, or thyself.

Be gone, I will not hear thy vain excuse,

But, as thou lov'st thy life, make speed from hence.

[Exit.

Val. And why not death, rather than living torment?

To die, is to be banish'd from myself;

And Silvia is myself: banish'd from her,

Is self from self! a deadly banishment!

What light is light, if Silvia be not seen?

What joy is joy, if Silvia be not by?

Unless it be, to think that she is by,

* ——— Merops' son]] Thou art Phaëton in thy rashness, but without his pretensions; thou art not the son of a divinity, but a terra filius, a low born wretch; Merops is thy true father, with whom Phaëton was falsely reproached. JOHNSON.

This scrap of mythology Shakespeare might have found in the spurious play of K. John, 1591, 1611, and 1622:

“ ——— as sometime Phaeton

“ Mistrusting silly Merops for his fire.”

Or in Robert Greene's Orlando Furioso, 1594:

“ Why foolish, hardy, daring, simple groom,

“ Follower of fond conceited Phaeton, &c.” STEEVENS.

And

And feed upon the shadow of perfection.
 Except I be by Silvia in the night,
 There is no musick in the nightingale ;
 Unless I look on Silvia in the day,
 There is no day for me to look upon ;
 She is my essence ; and I leave to be ,
 If I be not by her fair influence
 Foster'd, illumin'd, cherish'd, kept alive.
 I fly not death, to fly his deadly doom :
 Tarry I here, I but attend on death ;
 But, fly I hence, I fly away from life.

Enter Protheus and Launce.

Pro. Run, boy, run, run, and seek him out.

Laun. So-ho ! so-ho !

Pro. What seest thou ?

Laun. Him we go to find : there's not a hair
 On's head, but 'tis a Valentine.

Pro. Valentine ?

Val. No.

Pro. Who then ? his spirit ?

Val. Neither.

Pro. What then ?

Val. Nothing.

Laun. Can nothing speak ? master, shall I strike ?

Pro. Whom would'st thou strike ?

Laun. Nothing.

Pro. Villain, forbear.

Launc. Why, sir, I'll strike nothing : I pray you,—

Pro. Sirrah, I say, forbear : Friend Valentine, a word.

Val. My ears are stopp'd, and cannot hear good news,

⁹ I fly not death, to fly his deadly doom :] To fly his doom, used for by flying, or in flying, is a gallicism. The sense is, By avoiding the execution of his sentence I shall not escape death. If I stay here, I suffer myself to be destroyed ; if I go away, I destroy myself. JOHNSON.

174 TWO GENTLEMEN

So much of bad already hath possess'd them.

Pro. Then in dumb silence will I bury mine,
For they are harsh, untuneable, and bad.

Val. Is Silvia dead?

Pro. No, Valentine.

Val. No Valentine, indeed, for sacred Silvia!—
Hath she forsworn me?

Pro. No, Valentine.

Val. No Valentine, if Silvia have forsworn me!—
What is your news?

Laun. Sir, there's a proclamation that you are vanish'd.

Pro. That thou art banish'd, oh, that is the news,
From hence, from Silvia, and from me thy friend.

Val. Oh, I have fed upon this woe already,
And now excess of it will make me surfeit.
Doth Silvia know that I am banished?

Pro. Ay, ay; and she hath offer'd to the doom,
(Which unrevers'd, stands in effectual force)
A sea of melting pearl, which some call tears:
Those at her father's shrillish feet she tender'd;
With them, upon her knees, her humble self;
Wringing her hands, whose whiteness became them,
As if but now they waxed pale for woe:
But neither bended knees, pure hands held up,
Sad sighs, deep groans, nor silver-shedding tears,
Could penetrate her uncompassionate fire;
But Valentine, if he be ta'en, must die.
Besides, her intercession chaf'd him so,
When she for thy repeal was suppliant,
That to close prison he commanded her,
With many bitter threats of 'biding there.

Val. No more; unless the next word, that thou speak'st,

Have some malignant power upon my life:
If so, I pray thee, breathe it in mine ear,
As ending anthem of my endless dolor.

Pro. Cease to lament for that thou canst not help,
 And study help for that which thou lament'st.
 Time is the nurse and breeder of all good.
 Here if thou stay, thou canst not see thy love;
 Besides, thy staying will abridge thy life.
 Hope is a lover's staff; walk hence with that,
 And manage it against despairing thoughts.
 Thy letters may be here, though thou art hence;
 Which, being writ to me, shall be deliver'd
 Even in the milk-white bosom of thy love¹.
 The time now serves not to expostulate :
 Come, I'll convey thee through the city-gate ;
 And, ere I part with thee, confer at large
 Of all that may concern thy love-affairs :
 As thou lov'st Silvia, though not for thyself,
 Regard thy danger, and along with me.

Val. I pray thee, Launce, an if thou scest my boy,
 Bid him make haste, and meet me at the north-gate.

Pro. Go, firrah, find him out. Come, Valentine.

Val. O my dear Silvia ! hapless Valentine !

[Exeunt Valentine and Proteus.]

² Laun. I am but a fool, look you ; and yet I have the wit to think, my master is a kind of a knave :
 but that's all one, if he be but one knave. He lives
 not

¹ Even in the milk-white bosom of thy love.] So in Hamlet ;

“ These to her excellent white bosom, &c. ”

Trifling as the remark may appear, before the meaning of this address of letters to the bosom of a mistress can be understood, it should be known that women anciently had a pocket in the fore part of their stays, in which they not only carried love-letters and love tokens, but even their money and materials for needle work. In many parts of England the rustic damsels still observe the same practice ; and a very old lady informs me that she remembers when it was the fashion to wear very prominent stays, it was no less the custom for stratagem or gallantry to drop its literary favours within the front of them. STEEVENS.

² Laun. I am but a fool, look you ; and yet I have the wit to think my master is a kind of knave : but that's all one, if he be but one KNAVE.] Where is the sense ? or, if you won't allow the speaker that, where is the humour of this speech ? Nothing had , given not now, that knows me to be in love : yet I am in love ; but ' a team of horse shall not pluck that from given the fool occasion to suspect that his master was become double, like Antipholis in The Comedy of Errors. The last word is corrupt. We should read

—— if he be but one KIND.

He thought his master was a kind of knave ;, however,, he keeps himself in countenance with this reflection, that if he was a knave but of one kind, he might pass well enough amongst his neighbours. This is truly humorous. WARBURTON.

This alteration is acute and specious, yet I know not whether, in Shakespeare's language, one knave may not signify a knave on only one occasion, a single knave. We still use a double villain for a villain beyond the common rate of guilt. JOHNSON.

This passage has been altered, with little difference, by Dr. Warburton and Sir Tho. Hanmer.—Mr. Edwards explains it,—“ if he only be a knave, if I myself be not found to be another.” I agree with Dr. Johnson, and will support the old reading and his interpretation with indisputable authority. In the old play of Damon and Pythias, Aristippus declares of Carisophus, “ you lose money by him if you sell him for one knave, for he serves for twwayne.”

This phraseology is often met with : Arragon says in the Merchant of Venice :

“ With one fool's head I came to woo,

“ But I go away with two.”

Donne begins one of his sonnets :

“ I am two fools, I know,

“ For loving and for saying so, &c.”

And when Panurge cheats St. Nicholas of the chapel, which he vowed to him in a storm, Rabelais calls him “ a rogue—a rogue and an half—Le gallant, gallant et demy.” FARMER.

Again, in Like will to Like, quoth the Devil to the Collier, 1587 :

“ Thus thou may'st be called a knave in graine,

“ And where knaves be scant, thou may'st go for twwayne.”

STEEVENS.

Again in Chapman's Two wise Men and all the rest Fools, 1619 :

“ I desire no more cunning than I now have, and I'll serve you still and set up for myself ; for I had rather be a double knave than a single fool.” MALONE.

3 ——— a team of horse shall not pluck—] I see, how Valentine suffers for telling his love-secrets, therefore I will keep mine close. JOHNSON.

Perhaps Launce was not intended to shew so much sense ; but here indulges himself in talking contradictory nonsense.

STEEVENS.

me ;

me; nor who 'tis I love, and yet 'tis a woman: but what woman, I will not tell myself, and yet 'tis a milk-maid: yet 'tis not a maid, for she hath had gossip⁴: yet 'tis a maid, for she is her master's maid, and serves for wages. She hath more qualities than a water-spaniel—which is much in a bare christian⁵. Here is the cat-log [Pulling out a paper] of her conditions. Imprimis, She can fetch and carry: Why, a horse can do no more: nay, a horse cannot fetch, but only carry; therefore, is she better than a jade. Item, She can milk, look you; A sweet virtue in a maid with clean hands.

Enter Speed.

Speed. How now, signior Launce? what news with --- your mastership?

Laun. With my master's ship? why, it is at sea.

Speed. Well, your old vice still; mistake the word: What news then in your paper?

Laun. The blackest news that ever thou heard'st.

Speed. Why, man, how black?

Laun. Why, as black as ink.

⁴ — for she hath had gossip:] Gossips not only signify those who answer for a child in baptism, but the tattling women who attend lyings-in. The quibble between these is evident. STEEVENS.

⁵ — a bare christian.] Launce is quibbling on. Bare has two senses; mere and naked. In Coriolanus it is used in the first:

“ 'Tis but a bare petition of the state.”

Launce uses it in both, and opposes the naked female to the water-spaniel cover'd with hairs of remarkable thickness.

STEEVENS.

⁶ In former editions it is,

With my mastership? why, it is at sea. For how does Launce mistake the word? Speed asks him about his mastership, and he replies to it literatim. But then how was his mastership at sea, and on shore too? The addition of a letter and a note of apostrophe make Launce both mistake the word, and sets the pun right: it restores, indeed, but a mean joke; but, without it, there is no sense in the passage. Besides, it is in character with the rest of the scene; and, I dare be confident, the poet's own conceit.

THEOBALD.

Speed. Let me read them.

Laun. Fie on thee, jolt-head; thou can'st not read.

Speed. Thou lyeſt, I can.

Laun. I will try thee: Tell me this: Who begot thee?

Speed. Marry, the ſon of my grandfather.

Laun. O illiterate loiterer! it was the ſon of thy grandmother⁷: this proves, that thou can'ſt not read.

Speed. Come, fool, come: try me in thy paper.

Laun. There; And ⁸ St. Nicholas be thy ſpeed!

Speed. Imprimis, She can milk.

⁷ —the ſon of thy grandmother:] It is undoubtedly true that the mother only knows the legitimacy of the child. I ſuppoſe Launce infers, that if he could read, he muſt have read this well known obſervation. STEEVENS.

⁸ —St. Nicholas be thy ſpeed!] St. Nicholas preſided over ſcholars, who were therefore called St. Nicholas's clerks. Hence, by a quibble between Nicholas and Old Nick, highwaymen, in The Firſt Part of Henry the Fourth, are called Nicholas's clerks.

WARBURTON.

That this ſaint preſided over young ſcholars, may be gathered from Knight's Life of Deſay Colet, p. 362. For by the ſtatutes of Paul's ſchool there inſerted, the children are required to attend divine ſervice at the cathedral on his anniversary. The reaſon I take to be, that the legend of this ſaint makes him to have been a biſhop, while he was a boy. At Salisbury cathedral is a monument of a boy biſhop; and it is ſaid that a cuſtom formerly prevailed there, of chooſing, from among the chorifters, a biſhop, who actually performed the paſtoral functions, and diſpoſed of ſuch prebends as became vacant during his epiſcopacy, which laſted but a few days. It is thought that the monument above-mentioned was for ſome boy who died in office.—See The Poſthumous Works of Mr. John Gregory, 4to. Oxon. SIR. J. HAWKINS.

So Puttenham, in his Art of Poetry, 1589: 'Methinks this fellow ſpeaks like biſhop Nicholas; for on Saint Nicholas' night commonly the ſcholars of the country make them a biſhop, who, like a fooliſh boy, goeth about bleſſing and preaching with ſuch childiſh terms, as maketh the people laugh at his fooliſh counterfeited ſpeeches.' STEEVENS.

In Hearne's Liber Niger Scaccarii, 1771, vol. ii. p. 674, and 686, we find that archbiſhop Rotherham bequeathed "a myter for the barne-biſhop, of cloth of gold, with two knoppes of ſilver gilt and enamyled." And this was in a country village in Yorkſhire. TOLLET.

Laun.

Laun. Ay, that she can.

Speed. Item, She brews good ale.

Laun. And therefore comes the proverb, — Blessing of your heart, you brew good ale⁹.

Speed. Item, She can sew.

Laun. That's as much as to say, Can she so?

Speed. Item, She can knit.

Laun. What need a man care for a stock with a wench, when she can knit him a stock¹.

Speed. Item, She can wash and scour.

Laun. A special virtue; for then she need not to be wash'd and scour'd.

Speed. Item, She can spin.

Laun. Then may I set the world on wheels, when she can spin for her living.

Speed. Item, She hath many nameless virtues.

Laun. That's as much as to say, Bastard virtues; that, indeed, know not their fathers, and therefore have no names.

Speed. Here follow her vices.

Laun. Close at the heels of her virtues.

Speed. Item, ² She is not to be kiss'd fasting, in respect of her breath.

Laun. Well, that fault may be mended with a breakfast: Read on.

Speed. Item, She hath a³ sweet mouth.

Laun.

⁹ Blessing o' your heart, &c.] So in Ben Jonson's Masque of Augurs:

"Our ale's o' the best,

"And each good guest

"Prays for their souls that brew it." STEEVENS.

— knit him a stock.] i. e. a stocking. So in Twelfth Night:

"— it does indifferent well in a flame-colour'd stock."

STEEVENS.

² — she is not to be kiss'd fasting, —] The old copy reads, — she is not to be fasting, &c. The necessary word kiss'd, was first added by M^r. ROWE. STEEVENS.

³ — sweet mouth.] This I take to be the same with what is Laun. That makes amends for her four breath;

Speed. Item, She doth talk in her sleep.

Laun. It's no matter for that, so she sleep not in her talk.

Speed. Item, She is slow in words.

Laun. O villain! that set down among her vices! To be slow in words, is a woman's only virtue: I pray thee, out with't; and place it for her chief virtue.

Speed. Item, She is proud.

Laun. Out with that too; it was Eve's legacy, and cannot be ta'en from her.

Speed. Item, She hath no teeth.

Laun. I care not for that neither, because I love crusts.

Speed. Item, She is curst.

Laun. Well; the best is, she hath no teeth to bite.

Speed. Item, *She will often * praise her liquor.*

Laun. If her liquor be good; she shall: if she will not, I will; for good things should be praised.

Speed. Item, She is too liberal.

Laun. Of her tongue she cannot; for that's writ down, she is slow of: of her purse she shall not; for that I'll keep shut: now of another thing she may; and that I cannot help. Well, proceed.

now vulgarly called a sweet tooth, a luxurious desire of dainties and sweetmeats. JOHNSON.

How a luxurious desire of dainties can make amends for offensive breath, I know not: I rather believe that by a sweet mouth is meant that she sings sweetly. In Twelfth Night we have heard of a sweet breast as the recommendation of a finger. It may however mean a liquorish mouth, in a wanton sense. So in Measure for Measure:

“ Their saucy sweetness that do coin heaven's image, &c.”

STEEVENS.

* —praise her liquor.] That is, shew how well she likes it by drinking often. JOHNSON.

† —she is too liberal.] Liberal, is licentious and gross in language. So in Othello: “ Is he not a profane and very liberal counsellor?” JOHNSON.

Speed.

Speed. Item, She hath more hair than wit, and more faults than hairs, and more wealth than faults.

Laun. Stop there; I'll have her: she was mine, and not mine, twice or thrice in that last article: Rehearse that once more.

Speed. Item, 'She hath more hair than wit,—

Laun. More hair than wit,—it may be; I'll prove it: The cover of the salt hides the salt, and therefore it is more than the salt: the hair, that covers the wit, is more than the wit; for the greater hides the less. What's next?

Speed. —And more faults than hairs—

Laun. That's monstrous: Oh, that that were out!

Speed. —And more wealth than faults.

Laun. Why, that word makes the faults gracious: Well, I'll have her: And if it be a match, as nothing is impossible,— Speed. What then?

Laun. Why, then will I tell thee,—that thy master stays for thee at the north gate.

Speed. For me?

Laun. For thee? ay; who art thou? he hath staid for a better man than thee.

Speed. And must I go to him?

Laun. Thou must run to him, for thou hast staid so long, that going will scarce serve the turn.

'—she hath more hair than wit,—] An old English proverb. See Ray's Collection:

"Bush natural, more hair than wit."

Again, in Decker's Satiromastix:

"Hair! 'tis the basest stubble; in scorn of it

"This proverb sprung—He has more hair than wit."

Again, in Rhodon and Iris, 1631:

"Now is the old proverb really perform'd,

"More hair than wit." STEEVENS.

'—makes the faults gracious:] Gracious, in old language, means graceful. So in K. John:

"There was not such a gracious creature born."

STEEVENS.

Speed. Why didst not tell me sooner? pox on your love-letters!

Laun. Now will he be swing'd for reading my letter; An unmannerly slave, that will thrust himself into secrets!—I'll after, to rejoice in the boy's correction. [Exeunt.]

S C E N E II.

Enter Duke and Thurio, and Protheus behind.

Duke. Sir Thurio, fear not, but that she will love you,

Now Valentine is banish'd from her sight.

Thu. Since his exile she hath despis'd me most, Forsworn my company, and rail'd at me, That I am desperate of obtaining her.

Duke. This weak impress of love is as a figure
* Trenched in ice; which with an hour's heat
Dissolves to water, and doth lose his form.
A little time will melt her frozen thoughts,
And worthless Valentine shall be forgot.—
How now, sir Protheus? Is your countryman,
According to our proclamation, gone?

Pro. Gone, my good lord.

Duke. My daughter takes his going heavily.

Pro. A little time, my lord, will kill that grief.

Duke. So I believe; but Thurio thinks not so.—
Protheus, the good conceit I hold of thee,
(For thou hast shewn some sign of good desert)
Makes me the better to confer with thee,

Pro. Longer than I prove loyal to your grace,
Let me not live to look upon your grace.

Duke. Thou know'st, how willingly I would effect
The match between sir Thurio and my daughter.

* Trenched in ice; —] Cut, carved in ice. Trancher, to cut, French. JOHNSON.

So in Arden of Feversham, 1633:

“Is deeply trenched in my blushing brow.” STEEVENS.

Pro.

Pro. I do, my lord.

Duke. And also, I think, thou art not ignorant
How she opposes her against my will.

Pro. She did, my lord, when Valentine was here.

Duke. Ay, and perversely she perseveres so.
What might we do to make the girl forget
The love of Valentine, and love sir Thurio?

Pro. The best way is, to slander Valentine
With falshood, cowardice, and poor descent;
Three things, that women highly hold in hate.

Duke. Ay, but she'll think, that it is spoke in hate.

Pro. Ay, if his enemy deliver it:
Therefore it must, ⁹ with circumstance, be spoken
By one, whom she esteemeth as his friend.

Duke. Then you must undertake to slander him.

Pro. And that, my lord, I shall be loth to do:
'Tis an ill office for a gentleman;
Especially, against his very friend ¹.

Duke. Where your good word cannot advantage
him,
Your slander never can endamage him;
Therefore the office is indifferent,
Being intreated to it by your friend.

Pro. You have prevail'd, my lord; if I can do it,
By aught that I can speak in his dispraise,
She shall not long continue love to him.
But say, this weed her love from Valentine,
It follows not that she will love sir Thurio.

Thu. Therefore ² as you unwind her love from him,
Lest

⁹ —with circumstance,—] With the addition of such incidental particulars as may induce belief. JOHNSON.

¹ his very friend.] Very is immediate. So in Macbeth:

“And the very points they blow.” STEEVENS.

² —as you unwind her love—] As you wind off her love from him, make me the bottom on which you wind it. The housewife's term for a ball of thread wound upon a central body, is a bottom of thread. JOHNSON.

Left it should ravel, and be good to none,
 You must provide to bottom it on me :
 Which must be done, by praising me as much
 As you in worth dispraise sir Valentine.

Duke. And, Protheus, we dare trust you in this kind ;

Because we know, on Valentine's report,
 You are already love's firm votary,
 And cannot soon revolt and change your mind.
 Upon this warrant shall you have access,
 Where you with Silvia may confer at large ;
 For she is lumpish, heavy, melancholy,
 And, for your friend's sake, will be glad of you ;
 Where you may temper her, by your persuasion,
 To hate young Valentine, and love my friend.

Pro. As much as I can do, I will effect :—
 But you, sir Thurio, are not sharp enough ;
 You must lay ³ lime, to tangle her desires,
 By wailful sonnets, whose composed rhimes
 Should be full fraught with serviceable vows.

Duke. Ay, Much is the force of heaven-bred poesy.

Pro. Say, that upon the altar of her beauty
 You sacrifice your tears, your sighs, your heart :
 Write, till your ink be dry ; and with your tears
 Moist it again ; and frame some feeling line,
 That may discover such integrity :—
 * For Orpheus' lute was strung with poets' sinews ; Whose

So in Grange's Garden, 1577, in answer to a letter written unto him by Curtyzan :

“ A bottome for your filke it seemes

“ My letters are become,

“ Which oft with winding off and on

“ Are wasted whole and some.” STEEVENS.

³ —lime,—] That is, birdlime. JOHNSON.

* For Orpheus lute was strung with poets' sinews ;] This shews Shakespeare's knowledge of antiquity. He here assigns Orpheus his true character of legislator. For under that of a poet only, or lover,

Whose golden touch could soften steel and stones,
 Make tygers tame, and huge leviathans
 Forsake unfounded deeps to dance on sands.
 After your dire-lamenting elegies,
 Visit by night your lady's chamber-window
 With some sweet concert : to their instruments
 Tune a deploring dump⁵ ; the night's dead silence
 Will well become such sweet, complaining grievance.
 This, or else nothing, will inherit her⁶.

Duke. This discipline shews thou hast been in love.

Thu. And thy advice this night I'll put in practice :
 Therefore, sweet Protheus, my direction-giver,
 Let us into the city presently
 To sort⁷ some gentlemen well skill'd in musick :
 I have a sonnet⁸ that will serve the turn,
 To give the onset to thy good advice.

Duke. About it, gentlemen.

Pro. We'll wait upon your grace, till after supper ;
 And afterwards determine our proceedings.

Duke. Even now about it ;⁹ I will pardon you.

[Exeunt.]

lover, the quality given to his lute is unintelligible. But, considered as a lawyer, the thought is noble, and the imagery exquisitely beautiful. For by his lute is to be understood his system of laws ; and by the poet's sinews, the power of numbers, which Orpheus actually employed in those laws to make them received by a fierce and barbarous people. WARBURTON.

⁵ Tune a deploring dump ;] A dump was the ancient term for a mournful elegy. STEEVENS.

⁶ — will inherit her.] To inherit, is, by our author, sometimes used, as in this instance, for to obtain possession of, without any idea of acquiring by inheritance. So in Titus Andronicus :

“ He that had wit would think that I had none,

“ To bury so much gold under a tree,

“ And never after to inherit it.” STEEVENS.

⁷ To sort] i. e. to chuse out. So in K. Richard III. :

“ Yet I will sort a pitchy hour for thee.” STEEVENS.

⁸ — I will pardon you.] I will excuse you from waiting.

JOHNSON.

A C T . IV. S C E N E I.

A forest, leading towards Mantua.

Enter certain Out-laws.

1 Out. Fellows, stand fast ; I see a passenger.

2 Out. If there be ten, shrink not, but down with 'em.

Enter Valentine and Speed.

3 Out. Stand, fir, and throw us what you have about you ;

° If not, we'll make you fit, and rifle you.

Speed. Sir, we are undone ! these are the villains That all the travellers do fear so much.

Val. My friends,—

1 Out. That's not so, fir ; we are your enemies.

2 Out. Peace ; we'll hear him.

3 Out. Ay, by my beard, will we ;
For he's a proper man.

Val. Then know, that I have little wealth to lose ;
A man I am, cross'd with adversity :

My riches are these poor habiliments,
Of which if you should here disfurnish me,
You take the sum and substance that I have.

2 Out. Whither travel you ?

° Val. To Verona.

1 Out. Whence came you ?

Val. From Milan.

3 Out. Have you long sojourn'd there ?

° If not, we'll make you fit, and rifle you.] The old copy reads ' as I have printed the passage. Paltry as the opposition between stand and fit may be thought, it is Shakespeare's own. The editors read, — we'll make you, fir, &c. ' STEEVENS.

Val.

Val. Some sixteen months; and longer might have staid,

If crooked fortune had not thwarted me.

1 Out. What, were you banish'd thence?

Val. I was.

2 Out. For what offence?

Val. For that which now torments me to rehearse:
I kill'd a man, whose death I much repent;
But yet I slew him manfully in fight,
Without false vantage, or base treachery.

1 Out. Why ne'er repent it, if it were done so:
But were you banish'd for so small a fault?

Val. I was, and held me glad of such a doom.

1 Out. Have you the tongues?

Val. My youthful travel therein made me happy;
Or else I often had been miserable.

3 Out. By the bare scalp of 'Robin Hood's fat friar,

This fellow were a king for our wild faction.

1 Out. We'll have him: first, a word.

Speed. Master, be one of them;

It is a kind of honourable thievery.

Val. Peace, villain!

2 Out. Tell us this; Have you any thing to take to?

Val. Nothing, but my fortune.

3 Out. Know then, that some of us are gentlemen,
Such as the fury of ungovern'd youth

Thrust

- 'Robin Hood' was captain of a band of robbers, and was much inclined to rob churchmen." JOHNSON.

So in A mery Geste of Robyn Hooode, &c. bl. l. no date:

"These byshoppes and these archebyshoppes

"Ye shall them beate and bynde, &c."

- By Robin Hood's fat friar, I believe, Shakespeare means Friar Tuck, who was confessor and companion to this noted outlaw. So in one of the old songs of Robin Hood:

"And of brave little John,

"Of Friar Tuck and Will Scarlett,

"Stokesly and Maid Marian."

, Again,

Thrust from the company of ¹ awful men :
 Myself was from Verona banish'd,
 For practising to steal away a lady,
² An heir, and niece ally'd unto the duke.

² Out. And I from Mantua, for a gentleman,
 Whom, in my mood, I stabb'd unto the heart.

¹ Out. And I, for such like petty crimes as these.
 But to the purpose,—(for we cite our faults,
 That they may hold excus'd our lawless lives)
 And, partly, seeing you are beautify'd
 With goodly shape ; and by your own report
 A linguist ; and a man of such perfection,
 As we do in our quality ⁴ much want,—

² Out. Indeed, because you are a banish'd man,
 Therefore, above the rest, we parley to you :

Again, in the 26th song of Drayton's Polyolbion :

“ Of Tuck the merry friar which many a sermon made,

“ In praise of Robin Hood, his outlawes, and his trade.”

See figure III. in the plate at the end of the first part of K. Henry IV. with Mr. Tollet's observations on it. STEEVENS.

² —awful men :] Reverend, worshipful, such as magistrates, and other principal members of civil communities. JOHNSON.

I think we should read lawful in opposition to lawless men. In judicial proceedings the word has this sense. SIR J. HAWKINS.

The author of The Revival has proposed the same expendation.

STEEVENS.

Awful is used by Shakespeare, in another place, in the sense of lawful. Second part of Henry IV. act IV. sc. ii.

“ We come within our awful banks again.” TYRWHITT.

³ All the impressions, from the first downwards, An heir and niece allied unto the duke. But our poet would never have expressed himself so stupidly, as to tell us, this lady was the duke's niece, and allied to him : for her alliance was certainly sufficiently included in the first term. Our author meant to say, she was an heiress, and near allied to the duke ; an expression the most natural that can be for the purpose, and very frequently used by the stage-poets. THEOBALD.

A niece or a nephew did not always signify the daughter of a brother or sister, but any remote descendant. Of this use I have given instances as to a nephew. See Othello, act I. STEEVENS.

⁴ —in our quality] Quality is nature relatively considered.

STEEVENS.

Are

Are you content to be our general ?

To make a virtue of necessity,

And live, as we do, in the wilderness ?

3 Out. What say'st thou ? wilt thou be of our confort ?

Say, ay, and be the captain of us all ;

We'll do thee homage, and be rul'd by thee,

Love thee as our commander, and our king.

1 Out. But if thou scorn our courtesy, thou dy'st.

2 Out. Thou shalt not live to brag what we have offer'd.

Val. I take your offer, and will live with you ;
Provided, that you do no outrages^s

On silly women, or poor passengers.

3 Out. No, we detest such vile base practices.

Come, go with us, we'll bring thee to our crews,

And shew thee all the treasure we have got ;

Which, with ourselves, all rest at thy dispose.

[Exeunt.]

S C E N E II.

Under Silvia's apartment in Milan.

Enter Proteus.

Pro. Already have I been false to Valentine,

And now I must be as unjust to Thurio.

Under the colour of commending him,

I have access my own love to prefer ;

But Silvia is too fair, too true, too holy,

To be corrupted with my worthless gifts.

When I protest true loyalty to her,

She twits me with my falshood to my friend ;

When to her beauty I commend my vows,

She bids me think, how I have been forsworn

^s — go outrages

[On silly women or poor passengers.] This was one of the rules of Robin Hood's government. STEEVENS.

. In

In breaking faith with Julia whom I lov'd :
 And, notwithstanding all her ⁶ sudden quips,
 The least whereof would quell a lover's hope,
 Yet, spaniel-like, the more she spurns my love,
 The more it grows, and fawneth on her still.
 But here comes Thurio : now must we to her window,
 And give some evening music to her ear. ✓

Enter Thurio and Musicians.

Thu. How now, fir Protheus ? are you crept before us ?

Pro. Ay, gentle Thurio ; for, you know, that love

Will creep in service where it cannot go.

Thu. Ay, but, I hope, fir, that you love not here.

Pro. Sir, but I do ; or else I would be ~~hence~~.

Thu. Whom ? Silvia ?

Pro. Ay, Silvia,—for your sake.

Thu. I thank you for your own. Now, gentlemen, Let's tune, and to it lustily a while.

Enter Host, at a distance ; and Julia in boy's cloaths.

Host. Now, my young guest ! methinks you're aMycholly ; I pray you, why is it ?

Jul. Marry, mine host, because I cannot be merry.

Host. Come, we'll have you merry : I'll bring you where you shall hear music, and see the gentleman that you ask'd for.

Jul. But shall I hear him speak ?

Host. Ay, that you shall.

Jul. That will be music.

Host. Hark ! hark !

⁶ — sudden quips,] That is, hasty passionate reproofs and scoffs. So Macbeth is in a kindred sense said to be sudden ; that is, irascible and impetuous. JOHNSON.

The same expression is used by Dr. Wilson in his Arte of Rhetorique, 1553 : " And make him at his wit's end through the sudden quip." MALONE.

Jul. Is he among these?

Hof. Ay : but peace, let's hear 'em.

S N G.

*Who is Silvia ? what is she,
That all our swains commend her ?
Holy, fair, and wise is she ;
The heavens such grace did lend her,
That she might admired be.*

*Is she kind, as she is fair ?
For ' beauty lives with kindness :
Love doth to her eyes repair,
To help him of his blindness ;
And, being help'd, inhabits there.*

*Then to Silvia let us sing,
That Silvia is excelling ;
She excells each mortal thing,
Upon the dull earth dwelling :
To her let us garlands bring.*

Hof. How, now ? are you sadder than you were before ?

How do you, man ? the music likes you not.

Jul. You mistake ; the musician likes me not.

Hof. Why, my pretty youth ?

Jul. He plays false, father.

Hof. How ? out of tune on the strings ?

Jul. Not so ; but yet so false, that he grieves my very heart-strings.

Hof. You have a quick ear.

Jul. Ay, I would I were deaf ! it makes me have
- a flow heart.

Hof. I perceive, you delight not in music.

7 — beauty lives with kindness :] Beauty without kindness dies unenjoyed, and undelighting. JOHNSON.

Jul.

Jul. Not a whit, when it jars so.

Hof. Hark, what fine change is in the music!

Jul. Ay; that change is the spite.

Hof. You would have them always play but one thing?

Jul. I would always have one play but one thing. But, host, doth this sir Protheus, that we talk on, Often resort unto this gentlewoman?

Hof. I tell you what Launce, his man, told me, he lov'd her out of all nick.

Jul. Where is Launce?

Hof. Gone to seek his dog; which, to-morrow, by his master's command, he must carry for a present to his lady.

Jul. Peace! stand aside, the company parts.

Pro. Sir Thurio, fear not you; I will so plead, That you shall say, my cunning drift excels.

Thu. Where meet we?

Pro. At Saint Gregory's well.

Thu. Farewell. [Exeunt Thurio and music.]

Silvia appears above, at her window.

Pro. Madam, good even to your ladyship.

Sil. I thank you for your music, gentlemen: Who is that, that spake?

Pro. One, lady, if you knew his pure heart's truth, You'd quickly learn to know him by his voice.

Sil. Sir Protheus, as I take it.

Pro. Sir Protheus, gentle lady, and your servant.

Sil. What is your will?

* ——— out of all nick.] Beyond all reckoning or count. Reckonings are kept upon nicked or notched sticks or tallies.

WARBURTON.

So in a Woman never vex'd, 1632:

" ——— I have carried

" The tallies at my girdle seven years together,

" For I did ever love to deal honestly in the nick."

As it is an inn-keeper who employs the allusion, it is much in character. STEEVENS.

Pro.

Pro. That I may compass yours.

Sil. ' You have your wish ; my will is even this,—
That presently you hie, you home to bed.

Thou subtle, perjur'd, false, disloyal man !

Think'st thou, I am so shallow, so conceited,

To be seduced by thy flattery,

That hast deceived so many with thy vows ?

Return, return, and make thy love amends.

For me,—by this pale queen of night, I swear,

I am so far from granting thy request,

That I despise thee for thy wrongful suit ;

And by and by intend to chide myself,

Even for this time I spend in talking to thee.

Pro. I grant, sweet love, that I did love a lady ;
But she is dead.

Jul. [Aside.] 'Twere false, if I should speak it ;
For, I am sure, she is not buried.

Sil. Say, that she be ; yet Valentine, thy friend,
Survives ; to whom, thyself art witness,
I am betroth'd ; And art thou not ashamed
To wrong him with thy importunacy ?

Pro. I likewise hear, that Valentine is dead.

Sil. And so, suppose, am I ; for in his grave,
Assure thyself, my love is buried.

Pro. Sweet lady, let me rake it from the earth.

Sil. Go to thy lady's grave, and call her's thence ;
Or, at the least, in her's sepulchre thine.

Jul. [Aside.] He heard not that.

Pro. Madam, if that your heart be so obdurate,
Vouchsafe me yet your picture for my love,
The picture that is hanging in your chamber ;
To that I'll speak, to that I'll sigh and weep :
For, since the substance of your perfect self
Is else devoted, I am but a shadow ;
And to your shadow will I make true love.

' You have your wish ; my will is even this,—] The word will is here ambiguous. He wishes to gain her will : she tells him, if he wants her will he has it. JOHNSON.

194 TWO GENTLEMEN

Jul. [Aside.] If 'twere a substance, you would, sure, deceive it,

And make it but a shadow, as I am.

Sil. I am very loath to be your idol, sir;
But, since your falshood, shall become you well
To worship shadows, and adore false shapes,
Send to me in the morning, and I'll send it;
And so, good rest.

Pro. As wretches have o'er night,
That wait for execution in the morn.

[Exeunt Protheus and Silvia.]

Jul. Host, will you go?

Host. By my hallidom, I was fast asleep.

Jul. Pray you, where lies sir Protheus?

Host. Marry, at my house: Trust me, I think,
'tis almost day.

Jul. Not so; but it hath been the longest night
That e'er I watch'd, and the most heaviest. [Exeunt.]

S C E N E III.

Enter Eglamour.

Egl. This is the hour that madam Silvia
Entreated me to call, and know her mind;
There's some great matter she'd employ me in.—
Madam, madam!

Silvia, above at her window.

Sil. Who calls?

¹ But, since your falshood, shall become you well] This is hardly sense. We may read, with very little alteration,

But since you're false, it shall become you well. JOHNSON.

There is no occasion for any alteration, if we only suppose that it is understood here, as in several other places.

But, since your falshood, shall become you well

To worship shadows and adore false shapes,

i. e. But, since your falshood, it shall become you well, &c.

Or indeed, in this place, To worship shadows, &c. may be considered as the nominative case to shall become. TYRWHITT.

Egl.

Egl. Your servant, and your friend ;
One that attends your ladyship's command.

Sil. Sir Eglamour, a thousand times good morrow.

Egl. As many, worthy lady, to yourself.
According to your ladyship's impose²,
I am thus early come to know what service
It is your pleasure to command me in.

Sil. O Eglamour, thou art a gentleman,
(Think not, I flatter, for, I swear, I do not)
Valiant, wise, remorseful³, well accomplish'd.
Thou art not ignorant, what dear good will
I bear unto the banish'd Valentine ;
Nor how my father would enforce me marry
Vain Thurio, whom my very soul abhors.
Thyself hast lov'd ; and I have heard thee say,
No grief did ever come so near thy heart,
As when thy lady and thy true love dy'd,
* Upon whose grave thou vow'dst pure chastity.
Sir Eglamour, I would to Valentine,
To Mantua, where, I hear, he makes abode ;

² —your ladyship's impose,] Impose is injunction, command.
A task set at college, in consequence of a fault, is still called an imposition. STEEVENS.

³ Remorseful is pitiful. So in the Mail's Metamorphosis, by Lilly, 1600 :

“ Provokes my mind to take remorse of thee.”
Again, in Chapman's translation of the 2d Book of Homer, 1598 :

“ Descend on our long-toyled host with thy remorseful eye.” STEEVENS.

* Upon whose grave thou vow'dst pure chastity.] It was common in former ages for widowers and widows to make vows of chastity in honour of their deceased wives or husbands. In Dugdale's Antiquities of Warwickshire, page 1013, there is the form of a commission by the bishop of the diocese for taking a vow of chastity made by a widow. It seems that, besides observing the vow, the widow was, for life, to wear a veil and a mourning habit. The same distinction we may suppose to have been made in respect of male votaries ; and therefore this circumstance might inform the players how Sir Eglamour should be dress'd ; and will account for Silvia's having chosen him as a person in whom she could confide without injury to her own character. STEEVENS.

And, for the ways, are dangerous to pass;
 I do desire thy worthy company,
 Upon whose faith and honour I repose.
 Urge not my father's anger, Eglamour,
 But think upon my grief, a lady's grief;
 And on the justice of my flying hence,
 To keep me from a most unholy match,
 Which heaven, and fortune, still reward with plagues.
 I do desire thee, even from a heart
 As full of sorrows as the sea of sands,
 To bear me company, and go with me:
 If not, to hide what I have said to thee,
 That I may venture to depart alone.

Egl. Madam, I pity much your 'grievances;
 Which since I know they virtuously are plac'd,
 I give consent to go along with you;
 Recking as little ' what betideth me,
 As much I wish all good befortune you.
 When will you go?

Sil. This evening coming.

Egl. Where shall I meet you?

Sil. At friar Patrick's cell,
 Where I intend holy confession.

Egl. I will not fail your ladyship:
 Good morrow, gentle lady.

Sil. Good morrow, kind sir Eglamour. [Exeunt.]

Enter Launce with his dog.

When a man's servant shall play the cur with him, look you, it goes hard: one that I brought up of a puppy; one that I sav'd from drowning, when three or four of his blind brothers and sisters went to it! I have taught him—even as one would say precisely,

³ —grievances;] Sorrows, sorrowful affections. JOHNSON.

⁶ Recking as little] To reck is to care for. So in Hamlet:

"And recks not his own read."

Both Chaucer and Spenser use this word with the same signification. STEEVENS.

Thus I would teach a dog. I was sent to deliver him, as a present to mistress Silvia, from my master; and I came no sooner into the dining-chamber, but he steps me to her trencher, and steals her capon's leg. O, 'tis a foul thing, when a cur cannot keep himself⁷ in all companies! I would have, as one should say, one that takes upon him⁸ to be a dog indeed, to be, as it were, a dog at all things. If I had not had more wit than he, to take a fault upon me that he did, I think verily he had been hang'd for't; sure as I live, he had suffer'd for't: you shall judge. He thrusts me himself into the company of three or four gentleman-like dogs, under the duke's table: he had not been there (bless the mark) a pissing while⁹, but all the chamber smelt him. Out with the dog, says one; What cur is that? says another; Whip him out, says the third; Hang him up, says the duke: I, having been acquainted with the smell before, knew it was Crab; and goes me to the fellow that whips the dogs: Friend, quoth I, you mean to whip the dog? Ay, marry, do I, quoth he. You do him the more wrong, quoth I; 'twas I did the thing you wot of. He makes no more ado, but whips me out of the chamber. How many masters would do this for¹⁰ their servant? nay, I'll be sworn I have sat in the stocks for puddings he hath stolen, other-

⁷ —keep himself.] i. e. restrain himself. STEEVENS.

⁸ —to be a dog—] I believe we should read, I would have, &c. one that takes upon him to be a dog, to be a dog indeed, to be, &c. JOHNSON.

⁹ —a pissing while.] This expression is used in Ben Jonson's Magnetic Lady: "—have patience but a pissing while." It appears from Ray's Collection, that it is proverbial. STEEVENS.

¹⁰ The fellow that whips the dogs:] This appears to have been part of the office of an usher of the table. So in Mucedorus:

"—I'll prove my office good; for look you, &c. —When a dog chance to blow his nose backward, then with a whip I give him good time of the day, and strew rushes presently." STEEVENS.

² —their servant? —] The old copy reads,
—his servant? — STEEVENS.

198 TWO GENTLEMEN

wife he had been executed : I have stood on the pillory for geese he hath kill'd, otherwise he had suffer'd for't : thou think'st not of this now !—Nay, I remember the trick you serv'd me, when I took my leave of madam Silvia¹ ; did not I bid thee still mark me, and do as I do ? when didst thou see me heave up my leg, and make water against a gentlewoman's farthingale ? didst thou ever see me do such a trick ?

Enter Protheus and Julia.

Pro. Sebastian is thy name ? I like thee well, And will employ thee in some service presently.

Jul. In what you please ;—I'll do, sir, what I can.

Pro. I hope, thou wilt.—How now, you whore-son peasant, [To Launce. Where have you been these two days loitering ?

Laun. Marry, sir, I carry'd mistress Silvia the dog you bade me.

Pro. And what says she to my little jewel ?

Laun. Marry, she says, your dog was a cur ; and tells you, currish thanks is good enough for such a present.

Pro. But she receiv'd my dog ?

Laun. No, indeed, she did not : here I have brought him back again.

Pro. What, didst thou offer her this from me ?

Laun. Ay, sir ; the other squirrel⁴ was stol'n from me by the hangman's boy in the market-place : and then I offer'd her mine own ; who is a dog as big as ten of yours, and therefore the gift the greater.

Pro. Go, get thee hence, and find my dog again,

¹ —madam Silvia ;] Perhaps we should read of madam Julia. It was Julia only of whom a formal leave could have been taken.

STEELENS.

⁴ —the other squirrel, &c.] Sir T. Hanmer reads, —the other, Squirrel, &c. and consequently makes Squirrel the proper name of the beast. Perhaps Launce only speaks of it as a diminutive animal, more resembling a squirrel in size, than a dog. STEEVENS.

Or ne'er return again into my sight.

Away, I say; Stray'st thou to vex me here?

A slave, that, still an end³, turns me to shame.

[Exit Launce.

Sebastian, I have entertained thee,

Partly, that I have need of such a youth,

That can with some discretion do my business,

For 'tis no trusting to yon foolish lowt;

But, chiefly, for thy face, and thy behaviour;

Which (if my augury deceive me not)

Witness good bringing up, fortune, and truth:

Therefore know thou, for this I entertain thee.

Go presently, and take this ring with thee,

Deliver it to madam Silvia:

She lov'd me well, deliver'd it to me.

Jul. 'It seems, you lov'd not her, to leave her token:

She's dead, belike.

Pro. Not so; I think, she lives.

Jul. Alas!

Pro. Why do'st thou cry, alas?

Jul. I cannot chuse but pity her.

Pro. Wherefore should'st thou pity her?

Jul. Because, methinks, that she lov'd you as well

As you do love your lady Silvia:

She dreams on him, that has forgot her love;

You doat on her, that cares not for your love.

'Tis pity love should be so contrary,

And, thinking on it, makes me cry, alas!

Pro. Well, give her that ring, and therewithal.

³ — an end,] i. e. in the end, at the conclusion of every business he undertakes. STEEVENS.

⁶ It seems, you lov'd not her, to leave her token:] Protheus does not properly leave his lady's token, he gives it away. The old edition has it:

It seems you lov'd her not, not leave her token.

I should correct it thus:

It seems you lov'd her not, nor leave her token. JOHNSON.

This letter ;—that's her chamber.—Tell my lady,
I claim the promise for her heavenly picture.
Your message done, hie home unto my chamber,
Where thou shalt find me sad and solitary.

[Exit Protheus.]

Jul. How many women would do such a message?
Alas, poor Protheus ! thou hast entertain'd
A fox, to be the shepherd of thy lambs :
Alas, poor fool ! why do I pity him
That with his very heart despiseth me ?
Because he loves her, he despiseth me ;
Because I love him, I must pity him.
This ring I gave him, when he parted from me,
To bind him to remember my good will :
And now I am (unhappy messenger)
To plead for that, which I would not obtain ;
To carry that, which I would have refus'd ;
To praise his faith, which I would have disprais'd.
I am my master's true confirmed love ;
But cannot be true servant to my master,
Unless I prove false traitor to myself,
Yet will I woo for him ; but yet so coldly,
As, heaven it knows, I would not have him speed.

Enter Silvia.

Gentlewoman, good day ! I pray you, be my mean
To bring me where to speak with madam Silvia.

Sil. What would you with her, if that I be she ?

Jul. If you be she, I do intreat your patience
To hear me speak the message I am sent on.

Sil. From whom ?

Jul. From my master, sir Protheus, madam.

Sil. Oh ! he sends you for a picture ?

Jul. Ay, madam.

* To carry that, which I would have refus'd ;] The sense is, To go and present that which I wish to be not accepted, to praise him whom I wish to be dispraised. JOHNSON.

Sil.

Sil. Urfula, bring my picture there.

[Picture brought.

Go, give your master this : tell him from me,
One Julia, that his changing thoughts forget,
Would better fit his chamber, than this shadow.

Jul. Madam, please you peruse this letter.

— Pardon me, madam ; I have unadvis'd Deliver'd you a paper that I should not ;
This is the letter to your ladyship.

Sil. I pray thee, let me look on that again.

Jul. It may not be ; good madam, pardon me.

Sil. There, hold.

I will not look upon your master's lines :
I know, they are stuff'd with protestations,
And full of new-found oaths ; which he will break,
As easily as I do tear this paper.

Jul. Madam, he sends your ladyship this ring.

Sil. The more shame for him, that he sends it me ;
For, I have heard him say a thousand times,
His Julia gave it him at his departure :
Though his false finger hath profan'd the ring,
Mine shall not do his Julia so much wrong.

Jul. She thanks you.

Sil. What say'st thou ?

Jul. I thank you, madam, that you tender her :
Poor gentlewoman ! my master wrongs her much.

Sil. Dost thou know her ?

Jul. Almost as well as I do know myself :
To think upon her woes, I do protest,
That I have wept an hundred several times.

Sil. Belike, she thinks, that Protheus hath forsook
her.

Jul. I think she doth ; and that's her cause of sorrow.

Sil. Is she not passing fair ?

Jul. She hath been fairer, madam, than she is :
When she did think my master lov'd her well,
She, in my judgment, was as fair as you ;

But

* But since she did neglect her looking-glass,
And threw her sun-expelling mask away,
The air hath starv'd the roses in her cheeks,
And pinch'd the lily-tincture of her face,
That now she is become as black as I.

Sil. How tall was she?

Ful. About my stature: for, at pentecost,
When all our pageants of delight were play'd,
Our youth got me to play the woman's part,
And I was trimm'd in madam Julia's gown;
Which served me as fit, by all mens' judgment,
As if the garment had been made for me:
Therefore, I know she is about my height.
And, at that time, I made her weep a-good?

* But since she did neglect her looking-glass,
And threw her sun-expelling mask away,
The air hath starv'd the roses in her cheeks,
And PINCH'D the lily-tincture of her face,

That now she is become as black as I.] To starve the roses is certainly a very proper expression: but what is pinching a tincture? However, starv'd, in the third line, made the blundering editors write pinch'd in the fourth: though they might have seen that it was a tanning scorching, not a freezing air that was spoken of. For how could this latter quality in the air so affect the whiteness of the skin as to turn it black? We should read:—

And PITCH'D the lily-tincture of her face.

i. e. turned the white tincture black, as the following line has it:

That now she is become as black as I:

and we say, in common speech, as black as pitch.—By the roses being starv'd, is only meant their being withered, and losing their colour. WARBURTON.

This is no emendation; none ever heard of a face being pitched by the weather. The colour of a part pinched, is livid, as it is commonly termed, black and blue. The weather may therefore be justly said to pinch when it produces the same visible effect. I believe this is the reason why the cold is said to pinch. JOHNSON.

Cleopatra says of herself:

“I that am with Phœbus’ pinches black.” STEEVENS.

* —weep a-good;] i. e. in good earnest. Tout de bon. Fr.

STEEVENS.

So in Marlowe’s Jew of Malta, 1633:

“And therewithal their knees have rankled so

“That I have laugh’d a-good.” MALONE.

For

For I did play a lamentable part
 Madam, 'twas Ariadne, passioning
 For Theseus' perjury, and unjust flight;

Which

* ——— 'twas Ariadne, passioning

For Theseus' perjury and unjust flight; The history of this twice-deserted lady is too well known to need an introduction here; nor is the reader interrupted on the business of Shakespeare: but I find it difficult to refrain from making a note the vehicle for a conjecture like this, which I may have no better opportunity of communicating to the public.—The subject of a picture of Guido (commonly supposed to be Ariadne deserted by Theseus and courted by Bacchus) may possibly have been hitherto mistaken. Whoever will examine the fabulous history critically, as well as the performance itself, will acquiesce in the truth of the remark. Ovid, in his Fasts, tell us, that Bacchus (who left Ariadne to go on his Indian Expedition) found too many charms in the daughter of the kings of that country.

“ Interea Liber depexos crinibus Indos

“ Vincit, et Eoo dives ab orbe redit.

“ Inter captivas facie præstante puellas

“ Grata nimis Baccho filia regis erat.

“ Flebat amans conjux, spatiatæque littore curvo

“ Edidit incultis talia verba sonis.

“ Quid me desertis perituram, Liber, arenis

“ Servabas? potui dedoluisse semel.—

“ Ausus es, ante oculos, adducta pellice, nostros

“ Tassq bene compositum sollicitare torum, &c.”

Ovid. Fast. l. iii. lin. 465.

In this picture he appears as if just returned from India, bringing with him his new favourite, who hangs on his arm; and whose presence only causes those emotions so visible in the countenance of Ariadne, who has been hitherto represented on this occasion,

————— as passioning

For Theseus' perjury and unjust flight.

From this painting a plate was engraved by Giacomo Freij, which is generally a companion to the Aurora of the same master. The print is so common, that the curious may easily satisfy themselves concerning the propriety of a remark which has perhaps intruded itself among the notes on this author.

To passion is used as a verb by writers contemporary with Shakespeare. In The Blind Beggar of Alexandria, printed 1598, we meet with the same expression:

“ ——— what, are thou passioning over the picture of Cle-anthes?”

Again, in Eliosto Libidinoso, a novel, by John Hinde, 1606:

“ ——— if thou gaze on a picture, thou must with Pigmalion be passionate.”

Again,

Which I so lively acted with my tears,
That my poor mistress, moved therewithal,
Wept bitterly; and, would I might be dead,
If I in thought felt not her very sorrow!

Sil. She is beholden to thee, gentle youth:—
Alas, poor lady! desolate and left!—
I weep myself, to think upon thy words.
Here, youth, there is my purse; I give thee this
For thy sweet mistress' sake, because thou lov'st her.
Farewell. [Exit Silvia.]

Jul. And she shall thank you for't, if e'er you know
her,—

A virtuous gentlewoman, mild, and beautiful.
I hope, my master's suit will be but cold,
Since she respects my mistress' love so much.
Alas, how love can trifle with itself!
Here is her picture: Let me see; I think,
If I had such a tire, this face of mine
Were full as lovely as is this of hers;
And yet the painter flatter'd her a little,
Unless I flatter with myself too much.
Her hair is auburn, mine is perfect yellow;
If that be all the difference in his love,
I'll get me such a colour'd periwig.
Her eyes are grey as glass; and so are mine:
Ay, but 'her forehead's low; and mine's as high.
What should it be, that he respects in her,
But I can make respectful⁴ in myself,

Again, in Spenser's Fairy Queen, b. iii. c. 2:

"Some argument of matter passioned." STEEVENS.

² I'll get me such a colour'd periwig.] It should be remembered, that false hair was worn by the ladies, long before wigs were in fashion. These false coverings, however, were called periwigs. So in Northward Hoe, 1607: "There is a new trade come up for cast gentlewomen, of perriwig-making: let your wife set up in the Strand." STEEVENS.

³ —her forehead's low;—] A high forehead was in our author's time accounted a feature eminently beautiful. So in The History of Guy of Warwick: Felice his lady is said to have the same high forehead as Venus. JOHNSON.

⁴ —respectful] i. e. respectful, or respectable. STEEVENS.

If this fond love were not a blinded god?
 Come, shadow, come, and take this shadow up,
 For 'tis thy rival. O thou senseless form,
 Thou shalt be worshipp'd, kiss'd, lov'd, and ador'd;
 And, were there sense in his idolatry,
 ' My substance should be statue in thy stead.
 I'll use thee kindly for thy mistress' sake,
 That us'd me so; or else, by Jove I vow,
 I should have scratch'd out your unseeing eyes,
 To make my master out of love with thee. [Exit.

ACT V. SCENE I.

Near the Friar's cell, in Milan.

Enter Eglamour.

Egl. The sun begins to gild the western sky;
 And now it is about the very hour
 That Silvia, at friar Patrick's cell, should meet me.

' My substance should be statue in thy stead. } It is evident this noun should be a participle statued, i. e. placed on a pedestal, or fixed in a shrine to be adored. WARBURTON.

Statued is, I am afraid, a new word, and that it should be received, is not quite evident. JOHNSON.

It would be easy to read with no more roughness than is to be found in many lines of Shakespeare:

—should be a statue in thy stead.

The sense, as Mr. Edwards observes, is, "He should have my substance as a statue, instead of thee [the picture] who art a senseless form." This word, however, is used without the article a in Masinger's Great Duke of Florence:

"—it was your beauty

"That turn'd me statue."

And again, in Lord Surrey's translation of the 4th Æneid:

"And Trojan statue throw into the flame."

Again, in Dryden's Don Sebastian:

"—try the virtue of that Gorgon face,

"To stare me into statue." STEEVENS.

, She

She will not fail ; for lovers break not hours,
 Unless it be to come before their time ;
 So much they spur their expedition.
 See, where she comes : Lady, a happy evening.

Enter Silvia.

Sil. Amen, amen ! go on, good Eglamour,
 Out at the postern by the abbey-wall ;
 I fear, I am attended by some spies.

Egl. Fear not : the forest is not three leagues off ;
 If we recover that, we are ' sure enough. [Exeunt.]

S C E N E . II.

An apartment in the Duke's palace.

Enter Thurio, Protheus, and Julia.

Thu. Sir Protheus, what says Silvia to my suit ?

Pro. Oh, sir, I find her milder than she was ;
 And yet she takes exceptions at your person.

Thu. What, that my leg is too long ?

Pro. No ; that it is too little.

Thu. I'll wear a boot, to make it somewhat rounder.

Pro. But love will not be spurr'd to what it loaths.

Thu. What says she to my face ?

Pro. She says, it is a fair one.

Thu. Nay, then the wanton lies ; my face is black.

Pro. But pearls are fair ; and the old saying is,
 " Black men are pearls in beauteous ladies' eyes."

Jul. 'Tis true, such pearls as put out ladies' eyes ;
 For I had rather wink, than look on them. [Aside.]

* — sure enough.] Sure is safe, out of danger. JOHNSON.

* " Black men are pearls, &c.] So in Heywood's Iron Age, 1632 :

" — a black complexion

" Is always precious in a woman's eye."

Again, in Sir Giles Goosecap : " — but to make every black slovenly cloud a pearl in her eye." STEEVENS.

* Jul. 'Tis true, &c.] This speech, which certainly belongs to Julia, is given in the old copy to Thurio. Mr. Rowe restored it to its proper owner. STEEVENS.

Pro.

Thu. How likes she my discourse ?

Pro. Ill, when you talk of war.

Thu. But well, when I discourse of love, and peace ?

Jul. But better, indeed, when you hold your

Thu. What says she to my valour ?

Pro. Oh, fir, she makes no doubt of that.

Jul. She needs not, when she knows it cowardice.

[Afide.

Thu. What says she to my birth ?

Pro. That you are well deriv'd.

Jul. True ; from a gentleman to a fool. [Afide.

Thu. Considers she my possessions ?

Pro. O, ay ; and pities them.

Thu. Wherefore ?

Jul. That such an ass should owe them. [Afide.

Pro. That they are out by lease ?

Jul. Here comes the duke.

Enter Duke.

Duke. How now, fir Protheus ? how now, Thurio ?
Which of you saw fir Eglamour of late ?

Thu. Not I.

Pro. Nor I.

Duke. Saw you my daughter ?

Pro. Neither. !

Duke. Why, then she's fled unto that peasant
Valentine ;

And Eglamour is in her company.

'Tis true ; for friar Laurence met them both,

As he in penance wander'd through the forest :

Him he knew well, and guess'd that it was she ;

But, being mask'd, he was not sure of it :

Besides, she did intend confession

At Patrick's cell this even ; and there she was not :

These likelihoods confirm her flight from hence.

* That they are out by lease.] I suppose he means because Thurio's folly has let them on disadvantageous terms. STEEVENS.

Therefore,

Therefore, I pray you, stand not to discourse,
But mount you presently; and meet with me
Upon the rising of the mountain-foot
That leads toward Mantua, whither they are fled:
Dispatch, sweet gentlemen, and follow me.

[Exit Duke.]

Thu. Why, this it is to be a peevish girl,
That flies her fortune when it follows her:
I'll after; more to be reveng'd on Eglamour,
Than for the love of reckless Silvia.

Pro. And I will follow, more for Silvia's love,
Than hate of Eglamour that goes with her.

Ful. And I will follow, more to cross that love,
Than hate for Silvia, that is gone for love. [Exeunt.]

S C E N E "III.

The Forest.

Enter Silvia and Out-laws.

Out. Come, come;

Be patient, we must bring you to our captain.

Sil. A thousand more mischances, than this one,
Have learn'd me how to brook this patiently.

2 Out. Come, bring her away.

1 Out. Where is the gentleman that was with her?

3 Out. Being nimble-footed, he hath out-run us;
But Moyse, and Valerius, follow him.

Go thou with her to the west end of the wood,
There is our captain: we'll follow him that's fled;
The thicket is beset, he cannot scape.

1 Out. Come, I must bring you to our captain's cave:

Fear not; he bears an honourable mind,
And will not use a woman lawlessly.

Sil. O Valentine, this I endure for thee! [Exeunt.]

The Out-laws' cave in the forest.

Enter Valentine.

Val. How use doth breed a habit in a man !
 This shadowy desert, unfrequented woods,
 I better brook than flourishing peopled towns :
 Here can I sit alone, unseen of any,
 And, to the nightingale's complaining notes,
 Tune my distresses, and record ⁹ my woes.
 ' O thou, that dost inhabit in my breast,
 Leave not the mansion so long tenantless ;
 Lest, growing ruinous, the building fall,
 And leave no memory of what it was !
 Repair me with thy presence, Silvia ;
 Thou gentle nymph, cherish thy forlorn swain !—
 What hallowing, and what stir, is this to-day ?
 • These are my mates, that make their wills their law,
 Have some unhappy passenger in chace :
 They love me well ; yet I have much to do,

⁹ —record my woes.] To record anciently signified to sing. So in the Pilgrim, by B. and Fletcher :

“ — O sweet, sweet ! how the birds record too ! ”

Again, in a pastoral, by N. Breton, published in England's Helicon, 1614 :

“ Sweet philomel, the bird that hath the heavenly throat,

“ Doth now, alas ! not once afford recording of a note.”

Again, in another Dittie, by Tho. Watson, ibid :

“ Now birds record with harmonie.”

Sir John Hawkins informs me, that to record is a term still used by bird-fanciers, to express the first essays of a bird in singing.

STEEVENS.

' O thou, that dost inhabit in my breast,

Leave not the mansion so long tenantless ;

Lest, growing ruinous, the building fall,

And leave no memory of what it was !] It is hardly possible to point out four lines in any of the plays of Shakspeare, more remarkable for ease and elegance. STEEVENS.

210 TWO GENTLEMEN

To keep them from uncivil outrages:

Withdraw thee, Valentine ;• who's this comes here ?

[Val. steps aside.]

Enter Protheus, Silpia, and Julia.

Pro. Madam, this service have I done for you,
(Though you respect not aught your servant doth)
To hazard life, and rescue you from him,
That wou'd have forc'd your honour and your love.
Vouchsafe me for my meed ^a but one fair look;
A smaller boon than this I cannot beg,
And less than this, I am sure, you cannot give.

Val. How like a dream is this, I see, and hear !
Love, lend me patience to forbear a while. [Aside.]

Sil. O miserable, unhappy that I am !

Pro. Unhappy were you, madam, ere I came ;
But, by my coming, I have made you happy.

Sil. By thy approach thou mak'st me most unhappy.

Jul. And me, when he approacheth to your presence.
[Aside.]

Sil. Had I been seized by a hungry lion,
I would have been a breakfast to the beast,
Rather than have false Protheus rescue me.
Oh, heaven be judge, how I love Valentine,
Whose life's as tender to me as my soul ;
And full as much (for more there cannot be)
I do detest false perjur'd Protheus :
Therefore be gone, solicit me no more.

Pro. What dangerous action, stood it next to death,
Would I not undergo for one calm look ?

Oh, 'tis the curse in love, and still approv'd,
When women cannot love, where they're belov'd.

^a ——— my meed] i. e. reward. So in another play of our author :
“ ——— thanks to men

“ Of noble minds is honourable meed.” STEEVENS.

Sil. When Protheus cannot love, where he's belov'd.

Read over Julia's heart, thy first best love,
For whose dear sake thou didst then rend thy faith
Into a thousand oaths; and all those oaths
Descended into perjury, to love me.
Thou hast no faith left now, unless thou had'st two,
And that's far worse than none; better have none
Than plural faith, which is too much by one:
Thou counterfeit to thy true friend!

Pro. In love,
Who respects friend?

Sil. All men but Protheus.

Pro. Nay, if the gentle spirit of moving words
Can no way change you to a milder form,
I'll woo you like a soldier, at arms end;
And love you 'gainst the nature of love, force you.

Sil. Oh heaven!

Pro. I'll force thee yield to my desire.

Val. Ruffian, let go that rude uncivil touch;
Thou friend of an ill fashion!

Pro. Valentine!

Val. Thou common friend, that's without faith or love;

(For such is a friend now) treacherous man!
Thou hast beguil'd my hopes; nought but mine eye
Could have persuaded me: Now I dare not say,
I have one friend alive; thou would'st disprove me.
Who should be trusted, when one's own right hand
Is perjur'd to the bosom? Protheus,
I am sorry, I must never trust thee more,
But count the world a stranger for thy sake.

* The private wound is deepest: Oh time, most curst!

'Mongst all foes, that a friend should be the worst!

* The private wound, &c.] I have a little mended the measure.
The old edition, and all but sir T. Hanmer, read,

The private wound is deepest, oh time most accurst. JOHNSON.

Pro. My shame, and guilt confounds me.—
 Forgive me, Valentine : if hearty sorrow
 Be a sufficient ransom for offence,
 I tender it here ; I do as truly suffer,
 As e'er I did commit.

Val. Then I'am paid :
 And once again I do receive thee honest :—
 Who by repentance is not satisfy'd,
 Is nor of heaven, nor earth ; for these are pleas'd ;
 By penitence the Eternal's wrath's appeas'd :—
 And, that my love may appear plain and free,
 ' All, that was mine in Silvia, I give thee.

Jul. Oh me unhappy ! [Faints.]

Pro. Look to the boy.

Val. Why, boy ! why wag ! how now ? what is the matter ?

Look up ; speak.

Jul. O good sir, my master charg'd me
 To deliver a ring to madam Silvia ;
 Which, out of my neglect, was never done.

Pro. Where is that ring, boy ?

Jul. Here 'tis : this is it. [Gives a ring.]

' All, that was mine in Silvia, I give thee.] It is (I think) very odd to give up his mistress thus at once, without any reason alledged. " But our author probably followed the stories just as he found them in his novels as well as histories. POPE.

This passage either hath been much sophisticated, or is one great proof that the main parts of this play did not proceed from Shakespeare ; for it is impossible he could make Valentine act and speak so much out of character, or give to Silvia so unnatural a behaviour, as to take no notice of this strange concession, if it had been made. HAMMER.

Valentine, from seeing Silvia in the company of Proteus, might conceive she had escaped with him, from her father's court, for the purposes of love, though she could not foresee the violence which his villainy might offer, after he had seduced her under the pretence of an honest passion. If Valentine, however, be supposed to hear all that passed between them in this scene, I am afraid I have only to subscribe to the opinions of my predecessors.

STEVENS.

Pro.

Pro. How! let me see :

Why this is the ring I gave to Julia.

Jul. Oh, cry your mercy, sir, I have mistook;
This is the ring you sent to Silvia. [Shews another ring.]

Pro. But, how cam'st thou by this ring? at my depart,

I gave this unto Julia.

Jul. And Julia herself did give it me;
And Julia herself hath brought it hither.

Pro. How! Julia?

Jul. Behold her that gave aim to all thy oaths,
And entertain'd them deeply in her heart :

⁶ How oft hast thou with perjury cleft the root?

Oh Protheus, let this habit make thee blush!

Be thou ashamed, that I have took upon me

Such an immodest rayment; ⁷ if shame live

In a disguise of love :

It is the lesser blot, modesty finds,

• Women to change their shapes, than men their minds.

Pro. Than men their minds! 'tis true : oh heaven!
were man

But constant, he were perfect : that one error Fills him with faults; makes him run through all sins :

Inconstancy falls off, ere it begins :

What is in Silvia's face, but I may spy

More fresh in Julia's with a constant eye?

Val. Come, come, a hand from either :

Let me be blest to make this happy close;

• 'Twere pity two such friends should long be foes.

Pro. Bear witness, heaven,

I have my wish for ever.

Jul. And I mine.

⁶ How oft hast thou with perjury cleft the root?] Sir T. Hanmer reads, cleft the root on't. JOHNSON.

⁷ —if shame live] That is, if it be any shame to wear a disguise for the purposes of love. JOHNSON.

Enter Out-laws, with Duke and Thurio.

Out. A prize, a prize, a prize!

Val. Forbear, forbear, I say; it is my lord the duke.

Your grace is welcome to a man disgrac'd,
Banished Valentine.

Duke. Sir Valentine!

Thu. Yonder is Silvia; and Silvia's mine.

Val. Thurio, give back, or else embrace thy death;
Come not within⁸ the measure of my wrath:
Do not name Silvia thine; if once again,
⁹Milan shall not behold thee. Here she stands,
Take but possession of her with a touch;—
I dare thee but to breathe upon my love.—

Thu. Sir Valentine, I care not for her, I;
I hold him but a fool, that will endanger
His body for a girl that loves him not:
I claim her not, and therefore she is thine.

Duke. The more degenerate and base art thou,
To make such means for her as thou hast done,
And leave her on such slight conditions.—
Now, by the honour of my ancestry,
I do applaud thy spirit, Valentine,
And think thee worthy of an empress' love.
Know then, I here forget all former griefs,

⁸ —the measure—] The length of my sword, the reach of my anger. JOHNSON.

⁹ Milan shall not behold thee.—] All the editions, Verona shall not hold thee. But, whether through the mistake of the first editors, or the poet's own carelessness, this reading is absurdly faulty. For the threat here is to Thurio, who is a Milanese; and has no concern, as it appears, with Verona. Besides, the scene is betwixt the confines of Milan and Mantua, to which Silvia follows Valentine, having heard that he had retreated thither. And, upon these circumstances, I ventured to adjust the text, as I imagine the poet must have intended; i. e. Milan, thy country shall never see thee again: thou shalt never live to go back thither.

Cancel all grudge, repeal thee home again.
 Plead a new state ' in thy unrival'd merit,
 To which I thus subscribe,—fir Valentine,
 Thou art a gentleman, and well deriv'd;
 Take thou thy Silvia, for thou hast deserv'd her.

Val. I thank your grace; the gift hath made me happy.

I now beseech you, for your daughter's sake,
 To grant one boon that I shall ask of you.

Duke. I grant it, for thine own, whate'er it be.

Val. These banish'd men, that I have kept withal,
 Are men endu'd with worthy qualities;
 Forgive them what they have committed here,
 And let them be recall'd from their exile:
 They are reformed, civil, full of good,
 And fit for great employment, worthy lord.

Duke. Thou hast prevail'd: I pardon them, and thee;

• Dispose of them, as thou know'st their deserts.
 Come, let us go; we will ² include all jars
 With triumphs, mirth, and rare solemnity.

Val. And, as we walk along, I dare be bold
 With our discourse to make your grace to smile.
 What think you of this page, my lord?

Duke. I think the boy hath grace in him; he blushes.

Val. I warrant you, my lord; more grace than boy.

• Should not this begin a new sentence?

Plead is the same as plead thou. TYRWHITT.

• So I have printed it. STEEVENS.

² ———include all jars] Sir Tho. Hanmer reads conclude.

JOHNSON.

To include is to shut up, to conclude. So in Macbeth:

“ ———and shut up

“ In measureless content.”

Again, in Spenser's Faery Queen, b. iv. c. 9:

“ And for to shut up all in friendly love.” STEEVENS.

216 TWO GENTLEMEN, &c.

Duke. What mean you by that saying?

Val. Please you, I'll tell you as we pass along,
That you will wonder, what hath fortun'd.—
Come, Protheus; 'tis your penance, but to hear
The story of your loves discovered :
That done, our day of marriage shall be yours ;
One feast, one house, one mutual happiness.

[Exeunt omnes.]

^a In this play there is a strange mixture of knowledge and ignorance, of care and negligence. The versification is often excellent, the allusions are learned and just ; but the author conveys his heroes by sea from one inland town to another in the same country ; he places the emperor at Milan, and sends his young men to attend him, but never mentions him more ; he makes Protheus, after an interview with Silvia, say he has only seen her picture ; and, if we may credit the old copies, he has, by mistaking places, left his scenery inextricable. The reason of all this confusion seems to be, that he took his story from a novel, which he sometimes followed, and sometimes forsook, sometimes remembered, and sometimes forgot.

That this play is rightly attributed to Shakespeare, I have little doubt. If it be taken from him, to whom shall it be given ? This question may be asked of all the disputed plays, except Titus Andronicus ; and it will be found more credible, that Shakespeare might sometimes sink below his highest flights, than that any other should rise up to his lowest. JOHNSON.

M E R R Y

M E R R Y W I V E S

O F

W I N D S O R.

Persons Represented.

Sir John Falstaff.

Fenton.

Shallow, a country justice.

Slender, cousin to Shallow.

Mr. Page, } two gentlemen dwelling at Windsor.

Mr. Ford, }

Sir Hugh Evans, a Welch parson.

Dr. Caius, a French doctor.

Host of the Garter,

Bardolph,

Pistol.

Nym.

Robin, page to Falstaff.

William Page, a boy, son to Mr. Page.

Simple, servant to Slender.

Rugby, servant to Dr. Caius.

Mrs. Page.

Mrs. Ford.

Mrs. Ann Page, daughter to Mr. Page, in love with Fenton.

Mrs. Quickly, servant to Dr. Caius.

Servants to Page, Ford, &

SCENE, Windsor; and the parts adjacent.

MERRY WIVES

O F

WINDSOR.

ACT I. SCENE I.

• Before Page's house in Windsor. •

Enter Justice Shallow, Slender, and Sir Hugh Evans.

Shal. Sir Hugh¹, persuade me not : I will make² a Star-chamber matter of it : if he were twenty fir
John

¹ A few of the incidents in this comedy might have been taken from some old translation of Il Pecorone by Giovanni Fiorentino. I have lately met² with the same story in a very contemptible performance, intitled, The fortunate, the deceived, and the unfortunate Lovers. Of this book, as I am told, there are several impressions ; but that in which I read it, was published in 1632, quarto. A something similar story occurs in Piacevoli Notti di Siraparola. Nott. 4^a. Fav. 4^a.

² This comedy was first entered at Stationers' Hall, Jan. 18, 1601, by John B. by. STEEVENS.

³ This play should be read between K. Henry IV. and K. Henry V. JOHNSON.

The adventures of Falstaff in this play seem to have been taken from the story of the Lovers of Pisa, in an old piece, called "Tarleton's Newes out of Purgatorie." A late editor pretended to much knowledge of this sort ; and I am sorry that it proved to be only pretension.

Mr. Warton observes, in a note to the last Oxford edition, that the play was probably not written, as we now have it, before 1607 at the earliest. I agree with my very ingenious friend in this supposition, but yet the argument here produced for it may not be conclusive.

John Falstaffs, he shall not abuse Robert Shallow, esquire.

conclusive. Slender observes to master Page, that his greyhound was out-run on Cotswale; [Cotswold-Hills in Gloucestershire] and Mr. Warton thinks, that the games established there by Capt. Dover in the beginning of K. James's reign, are alluded to.—But perhaps, though the Captain be celebrated in the Annalia Dubrensis as the founder of them, he might be the reviver only, or some way contribute to make them more famous; for in the 2d part of Henry IV. 1600, justice Shallow reckons amongst the Swinge-bucklers, “Will Squeele, a Cotsole man.”

In the first edition of the imperfect play, Mr. Hugh Evans is called on the title-page, the Welsh Knight; and yet there are some persons who still affect to believe, that all our author's plays were originally published by himself. FARMER.

Mr. Farmer's opinion is well supported by “An eclogue on the noble assemblies reviewed on Cotswold Hills, by Mr. Robert Dover.” See Randolph's Poems, printed at Oxford, 4to. 1638, p. 114. The hills of Cotswold, in Gloucestershire, are mentioned in K. Rich. II. act II. sc. iii. and by Drayton, in his Polyolbion, song 14. STEEVENS.

² The Merry Wives of Windsor.] Queen Elizabeth was so well pleased with the admirable character of Falstaff in The Two Parts of Henry IV. that, as Mr. Rowe informs us, she commanded Shakespeare to continue it for one play more, and to shew him in love. To this command we owe The Merry Wives of Windsor: which, Mr. Gildon says, he was very well assured our author finished in a fortnight. But this must be meant only of the first imperfect sketch of this comedy; an old quarto edition which I have seen, printed in 1602, says, in the title-page—As it hath been divers times acted both before her majesty, and elsewhere. POPE. THEOBALD.

³ Sir Hugh,] This is the first, of sundry instances in our poet, where a parson is called sir. Upon which it may be observed, that anciently it was the common designation both of one in holy orders and a knight. Fuller, somewhere in his Church History says, that anciently there were in England more sirs than knights; and so lately as temp. W. and Mar. in a deposition in the Exchequer in a case of tithes, the witness speaking of the curate, whom he remembered, styles him, sir Gyles. Vide Gibson's View of the State of the Churches of Door, Home-Lacy, &c. page 36. SIR J. HAWKINS.

* —a Star-chamber matter of it:] Ben Jonson intimates, that the Star-chamber had a right to take cognizance of such matters. See The Magnetic Lady, act III. sc. iv:

“There is a court above, of the Star-chamber,

“To punish routs and riots.” STEEVENS.

Slender.

Slen. In the county of Gloster, justice of peace, and coram.

Shal. Ay, cousin Slender, and ⁵ custalorum.

Slen. Ay, and ratolorum too; and a gentleman born, master parson; who writes himself armigero; in any bill, warrant, quittance, or obligation, armigero.

Shal. Ay, that I do; and have done any time these three hundred years.

Slen. All his successors, gone before him, have don't; and all his ancestors, that come after him, may: they may give the dozen white luses in their coat.

Shal. It is an old coat.

Eva. The dozen white louses do become an old coat well; it agrees well, passant: it is a familiar beast to man, and signifies—love.

Shal. ⁶ The luce is the fresh fish; the salt fish is an old coat.

Slen.

⁵ custalorum.] This is, I suppose, intended for a corruption of Custos Rotulorum. The mistake was hardly designed by the author, who, though he gives Shallow folly enough, makes him rather pedantic than illiterate. If we read:

Shal. Ay, cousin Slender, and Custos Rotulorum.

It follows naturally:

Slen. Ay, and Ratolorum too. JOHNSON.

Ay, cousin Slender, and custalorum.]

I think with Dr. Johnson, that this blunder could scarcely be intended. Shallow, we know, had been bred to the law at Clement's Inn.—But I would rather read custos only; then Slender adds naturally, “Ay, and rotulorum too.” He had heard the words custos rotulorum, and supposes them to mean different offices.

FARMER.

⁶ The luce &c.] I see no consequence in this answer. Perhaps we may read, the salt fish is not an old coat. That is, the fresh fish is the coat of an ancient family, and the salt fish is the coat of a merchant grown rich by trading over the sea. JOHNSON.

Shakespeare, by hinting that the arms of the Shallows and the Lucys were the same, shews he could not forget his old friend sir Tho. Lucy, pointing at him under the character of justice Shallow. But to put the matter out of all doubt, Shakespeare has
here

Slender. I may quarter, coz.

Shallow. You may, by marrying.

Evans.

here given us a distinguishing mark, whereby it appears that sir Thomas was the very person represented by Shallow. To set blundering parson Evans right, Shallow tells him, the luce is not the louse, but the fresh fish, or pike, the salt fish (indeed) is an old coat. The plain English of which is (if I am not greatly mistaken) the family of the Charlcoatts had for their arms a salt fish originally; but when William, son of Walter de Charlcoatt, assumed the name of Lucy, in the time of Henry III. he took the arms of the Lucys. This is not at all improbable; for we find, when Maud Lucy bequeathed her estates to the Percys, it was upon condition they joined her arms with their own. Says Dugdale, "it is likely William de Charlcoatt took the name of Lucy to oblige his mother." And I say farther, it is likely he took the arms of the Lucoys at the same time. SMITH.

The luce is the fresh fish, the salt fish is an old coat.]

I am not satisfied with any thing that has been offered on this difficult passage. All that Mr. Smith tell us, is a mere gratis dictum. I cannot find that salt fish were ever really borne in heraldry. I fancy the latter part of the speech should be given to sir Hugh, who is at cross purposes with the Justice. Shallow had said just before, the coat is an old one; and now, that it is the luce, the fresh fish.—No, replies the parson, it cannot be old and fresh too—"the salt fish is an old coat." I give this with rather the more confidence, as a similar mistake has happened a little lower in the scene.—"Slie, I say!" cries out Corporal Nym, "Pauca, pauca: Slie, that's my humour." There can be no doubt, but pauca, pauca should be spoken by Evans.

Again, a little before this, the copies give us:

Slender. You'll not confess, you'll not confess.

Shallow. That he will not—'tis your fault, 'tis fault—'tis a good dog.

Surely it should be thus:

Shallow. You'll not confess, you'll not confess.

Slender. That he will not.

Shallow. 'Tis your fault, 'tis your fault, &c. FARMER.

This fugitive scrap of Latin, pauca, &c. is used in several old pieces, by characters, who have no more of literature about them, than Nym. So Skinke, in Look about you, 1600:

"But pauca Verba, Skinke."

Again, in Every Man in his Humour, where it is called the benchers phrase. STEEVENS.

Shakespeare seems to frolick here in his heraldry, with a design not to be easily understood. In Leland's Collectanea, vol. I. p. ii. p. 615. the arms of Geffrey de Lucy are "dé goules poudre a croifil dor

Eva. It is marring, indeed, if he quarter it.

Shal. Not a whit.

Eva.

dor a treis luz dor." Can the poet mean to quibble upon the word poudré, that is, powdred, which signifies salted; or strewed and sprinkled with any thing? In Measure for Measure, Lucio says—
"Ever your fresh whore and your powder'd bawd." TOLLET.

The luce is a pike or jack:

"Ful many a fair patrich hadde he in mewe,

"And many a breme, and many a luce in stewe."

Chaucer's Prologue of the Canterbury Tales, late edit. 351, 352.

In Ferne's Blazon of Genery, 1586, quarto, the arms of the Lucy family are represented as an instance, that "signs of the coat should something agree with the name. It is the coat of Geffray Lord Lucy. He did bear gules, three lucies hariant, argent."

Mr. William Oldys, (Norroy King at Arms, and well known from the share he had in compiling the Biographia Britannica) among the collections which he left for a Life of Shakespeare, observes, that—"there was a very aged gentleman living in the neighbourhood of Stratford, (where he died fifty years since) who had not only heard, from several old people in that town, of Shakespeare's transgression, but could remember the first stanza of that bitter ballad, which, repeating to one of his acquaintance, he preserved it in writing; and here it is, neither better nor worse, but faithfully transcribed from the copy which his relation very courteously communicated to me."

"A parlimente member, a justice of peace,

"At home a poor scare-crowe, at London an asse,

"If lowfie is Lucy, as some volke miscalle it,

"Then Lucy is lowfie whatever befall it:

"He thinks himself greate,

"Yet an asse in his state,

"We allowe by his ears but with asses to mate.

"If Lucy is lowfie, as some volke miscalle it,

"Sing lowfie Lucy, whatever befall it."

Contemptible as this performance must now appear, at the time when it was written it might have had sufficient power to irritate a vain, weak, and vindictive magistrate; especially as it was affixed to several of his park-gates, and consequently published among his neighbours.—It may be remarked likewise, that the jingle on which it turns, occurs in the first scene of the Merry Wives of Windsor.

I may add, that the veracity of the late Mr. Oldys has never yet been impeached; and it is not very probable that a ballad should

Eva. Yes, py'r-lady ; if he has a quarter of your coat, there is but three skirts for yourself, in my simple conjectures : but that is all one : If sir John Falstaff have committed disparagements unto you, I am of the church, and will be glad to do my benevolence, to make atonements and compromises between you.

Shal. ' The council shall hear it ; it is a riot.

Eva. It is not meet the council hear of a riot ; there is no fear of God in a riot : the council, look you, shall desire to hear the fear of God, and not to hear a riot ; take your vizaments in that ⁸.

Shal. Ha ! o' my life, if I were young again, the sword should end it.

Eva. It is better that friends is the sword, and end it : and there is also another device in my prain, which, peradventure, prings good discretions with it : There is Anne Page, ⁹ which is daughter to master George Page, which is pretty virginity.

should be forged, from which an undiscovered wag could derive no triumph over antiquarian credulity. STEEVENS.

⁷ The council shall hear it ; it is a riot.] He alludes to a statute made in the reign of K. Henry IV. (13, chap. 7.) by which it is enacted, " That the justices, three, or two of them, and the sheriff, shall certify before the king, and his counsellors, all the deeds and circumstances thereof (namely the riot) ; which certification should be of the like force as the presentment of twelve : upon which certificate the trespassers and offenders shall be put to answer, and they which be found guilty shall be punished, according to the discretion of the king and counsellors."

DR. GRAY.

⁸ Your vizaments in that.] Advisement is now an obsolete word. I meet with it in the ancient morality of Every Man :

" That I may amend me with good advysement."

Again : " I shall smite without any advysement."

Again : " To go with good advysements and delyberacyon."

It is often used by Spenser in his Faery Queen. So, b. ii. c. 9 :

" Perhaps my succour and advizement meete." STEEVENS.

⁹ ——— which is daughter to master Thomas Page,] The whole set of editions have negligently blundered one after another in Page's Christian name in this place ; though Mrs. Page calls him George afterwards in at least six several passages. THEOBALD.

Slon.

Sten. Mistress Anne Page? she has brown hair, and ¹ speaks small like a woman.

Eva. It is that very person for all the 'orld, as just as you will desire; and seven hundred pounds of monies, and gold, and silver, is her grandfire, upon his death's-bed, (God deliver to a joyful resurrection!) give, when she is able to overtake seventeen years old: it were a good motion, if we leave our pribbles and prabbles, and desire a marriage between master Abraham, and mistress Anne Page.

Sten. Did her grandfire leave her seven hundred pounds?

Eva. Ay, and her father is make her a petter perny.

Sten. I know the young gentlewoman; she has good gifts.

Eva. Seven hundred pounds, and possibilities, is good gifts.

Shal. Well, let us see honest master Page: Is Falstaff there?

Eva. Shall I tell you a lie? I do despise a liar, as I do despise one that is false; or, as I despise one that is not true. The knight, sir John is there; and, I beseech you, be ruled by your well-willers. I will peat the door [Knocks] for master Page. What, ho! Got pless your house here!

Enter Page.

Page. Who's there?

¹ speaks small like a woman.] This is from the folio of 1623, and is the true reading. He admires her for the sweetness of her voice. But the expression is highly humorous, as making her speaking small like a woman one of her marks of distinction; and the ambiguity of small, which signifies little as well as low, makes the expression still more pleasant. WARBURTON.

Thus Lear, speaking of Cordelia:

"—Her voice was ever soft,

"Gentle and low;—an excellent thing in woman."

STEEVENS.

Eva. Here is Got's plessing, and your friend, and justice Shallow: and here is young master Slender; that, peradventures, shall tell you another tale, if matters grow to your likings.

Page. I am glad to see your worships well: I thank you for my venison, master Shallow.

Shal. Master Page, I am glad to see you; Much good do it your good heart! I wish'd your venison better; it was ill kill'd:—How doth good mistress Page?—and I thank you always with my heart, la; with my heart.

Page. Sir, I thank you.

Shal. Sir, I thank you; by yea and no, I do.

Page. I am glad to see you, good master Slender.

Slen. How does your fallow greyhound, sir? I heard say, he was out-run on Cotswale.

Page.

² How does your fallow greyhound, sir? I heard say, he was out-run on Cotswale.] He means Cotswold, in Gloucestershire. In the beginning of the reign of James the First, by permission of the king, one Dover, a public-spirited attorney of Barton on the Heath, in Warwickshire, instituted on the hills of Cotswold an annual celebration of games, consisting of rural sports and exercises. These he constantly conducted in person, well mounted, and accoutred in a suit of his majesty's old cloaths; and they were frequented above forty years by the nobility and gentry for sixty miles round, till the grand rebellion abolished every liberal establishment. I have seen a very scarce book, entitled, "Annalia Dubrensis. Upon the yearly celebration of Mr. Robert Dover's Olympick games upon Cotswold hills, &c." Lond. 1636. 4to. There are recommendatory verses prefixed, written by Drayton, Jonson, Randolph, and many others, the most eminent wits of the times. The games, as appears by a curious frontispiece, were, chiefly, wrestling, leaping, pitching the bar, handling the pike, dancing of women, various kinds of hunting, and particularly courting the hare with greyhounds. Hence also we see the meaning of another passage, where Falstaff, or Shallow, calls a stout fellow a Cotswold-man. But from what is here said, an inference of another kind may be drawn, respecting the age of the play. A meager and imperfect sketch of this comedy was printed in 1602. Afterwards Shakespeare new-wrote it entirely. This allusion therefore to the Cotswold games, not founded till the reign of Page. It could not be judg'd, fir.

Slou. You'll not confess, you'll not confess.

Shal. That he will not ;—'tis your fault, 'tis your fault :—'Tis a good dog.

Page. A cur, fir.

Shal. Sir, he's a good dog, and a fair dog ; Can there be more said ? he is good, and fair.—Is fir John Falstaff here ?

Page. Sir, he is within ; and I would I could do a good office between you.

Eva. It is spoke as a christians ought to speak.

Shal. He hath wrong'd me, master Page.

Page. Sir, he doth in some sort confess it.

Shal. If it be confess'd, it is not redress'd ; is not that so, master Page ? He hath wrong'd me ;—indeed, he hath ;—at a word, he hath ;—believe me ;—Robert Shallow, Esquire, saith, he is wrong'd.

Page. Here comes fir John.

Enter Sir John Falstaff, Bardolph, Nym, and Pistol.

Fal. Now, master Shallow ; you'll complain of me to the king ?

Shal. Knight, you have beaten my men, kill'd my deer, and broke open my lodge.

of James the First, ascertains a period of time beyond which our author must have made the additions to his original rough draught, or, in other words, composed the present comedy. James the First came to the crown in the year 1603. And we will suppose that two or three more years at least must have passed before these games could have been effectually established. I would therefore, at the earliest, date this play about the year 1607. It is not generally known, at least it has not been observed by the modern editors, that the first edition of the Merry Wives in its present state, is in the valuable folio, printed 1623. From whence the quarto of the same play, dated 1630, was evidently copied. The two earlier quartos, 1602, and 1619, only exhibit this comedy as it was originally written : and are so far curious, as they contain Shakespeare's first conceptions in forming a drama, which is the most complete specimen of his comick powers. WARTON.

³ ——— and broke open my lodge.] This probably alludes to some real incident, at that time well known. JOHNSON.

Fal. But not kifs'd your keeper's daughter ?

Shal. Tut, a pin ! this shall be answer'd.

Fal. I will answer it strait;—I have done all this:—
That is now answer'd.

Shal. The council shall know this.

Fal. * 'Twere better for you, if 'twere known in council; you'll be laugh'd at.

Eva. Pauca verba, fir John; good worts.*

Fal. Good worts ! "good cabbage :—Slender, I broke your head; What matter have you against me ?

Slen. Marry, fir, I have matter in my head against you; and against your 'coney-catching rascals, Bardolph, Nym, and Pistol.

* The old copies read, 'Twere better for you, if 'twere known in council. Perhaps it is an abrupt speech, and must be read thus: 'Twere better for you—if 'twere known in council, you'll be laugh'd at. 'Twere better for you, is, I believe, a menace.

JOHNSON.

The modern editors arbitrarily read—if 'twere not known in council;—but I believe Falstaff quibbles between council and counsel. The latter signifies secrecy. So in Hamlet:

"The players cannot keep counsel, they'll tell all."

Falstaff's meaning seems to be—'twere better for you if it were known only in secrecy, i. e. among your friends. A more public complaint would subject you to ridicule.

Thus, in Chaucer's prologue to the Squieres Tale, v. 10305, late edit:

"But wete ye what ? in conseil be it seyde, "

"Me teweche fore I am unto hire teyde." STEEVENS.

* Good worts ! good cabbage :—] Worts was the ancient name of all the cabbage kind. So in B. and Fletcher's Valentinian:

"Planting of worts and onions, any thing." STEEVENS.

*—coney-catching rascals,—] A coney-catcher was, in the time of Elizabeth, a common name for a cheat or sharper. Green, one of the first among us who made a trade of writing pamphlets, published A Detection of the Frauds and Tricks of Coney-catchers and Couzeners. JOHNSON.

So in Decker's Satirimagist:

"Thou shalt not coney-satch me for five pounds."

STEEVENS.

Bar.

Bar. ' You Banbury cheefe !

Slen. Ay, it is no matter.

Pist. ' How now, Mephostophilus ?

Slen. Ay, it is no matter.

Nym. Slice, I say ! pauca, pauca ; sice ! that's my humour.

Slen. Where's Simple, my man ?—can you tell, cousin ?

Evan. Peace : I pray you ! Now let us understand : There is three umpires in this matter, as I understand : that is—master Page, fidelicet, master Page ; and there is myself, fidelicet, myself ; and the three party is, lastly and finally, mine host of the Garter.

*Page. We three, to hear it, and end it between them.

Eva. Fery goot : I will make a prief of it in my note-book ; and we will afterwards 'ork upon the cause, with as great discreetly as we can.

Fal. Pistol,—

' You Banbury cheefe !] This is said in allusion to the thin carcase of Slender. The same thought occurs in Jack Drums Entertainment, 1601 :—" Put off your cloaths, and you are like a Banbury cheefe—nothing but paring." So Heywood, in his collection of epigrams :

" I never saw Banbury cheefe thick enough,

" But I have oft seen Essex cheefe quick enough."

STEEVENS.

' How now, Mephostophilus ?] This is the name of a spirit or familiar, in the old story book of Sir John Faustus, or John Faust : to whom our author afterwards alludes, p. 279. That it was a cant phrase of abuse, appears from the old comedy cited above, called A pleasant Comedy of the Gentle Craft, Signat. H. 3. " Away you Islington whitepot, hence you hopper-arse, you barley-pudding full of maggots, you broiled carbonado, avaunt, avaunt, Mephostophilus." In the same vein, Bardolph here also calls Slender, " You Banbury cheefe." WARTON.

So in Decker's Satiramastrix :

" Thou must run of an errand for me, Mephostophilus."

Again, in the Muse's Looking Glass, 1638 :

"—We want not you to play Mephostophilus. A pretty natural vizard." STEEVENS.

Pist. He hears with ears.

Eva. The tevil and his tam! what phraze is this,
He hears with ear? Why, it is affectations.

Fal. Pistol, did you pick master Slender's purse?

Slen. Ay, by these gloves, did he, (or I would I might never come in mine own great chamber again else) of seven groats in mill-sixpences², and two Edward shovel-boards, that cost me two shilling and two pence a-piece of Yead Miller, by these gloves.

Fal. Is this true, Pistol?

Eva. No; it is false, if it is a pick-purse.

Pist. Ha, thou mountain-foreigner!—Sir John,
and master mine,
² I combat challenge of this latten bilboe.

Word

¹ —mill-sixpences,] It appears from a passage in Sir W. Davenant's News from Plimouth, that these mill'd-sixpences were used by way of counters to cast up money:

“—A few mill'd sixpences with which

“My purser casts accompt.” STEEVENS.

² —Edward shovel-boards,—] By this term, I believe, are meant brass castors, such as are shoveled on a board, with king Edward's face stamped upon them. JOHNSON.

One of these pieces of metal is mentioned in Middleton's comedy of The Roaring Girl, 1611:—“away slid I my man, like a shovel-board shilling,” &c. STEEVENS.

“Edward Shovel-boards,” were not brass castors, but the broad shillings of Edw. VI.

Taylor, the water-poet, in his Travel of Twelve-pence, makes him complain:

“——the unthrift every day

“With my face downwards do at shovell-board play;

“That had I had a board, you may suppose,

“They had worne it off, as they have done my nose.”

And in a note he tells us: “Edw. shillings for the most part are used at shovell-board,” FARMER.

² I combat challenge of this Latin bilboe:} Our modern editors have distinguished this word Latin in Italic characters, as if it was addressed to Sir Hugh, and meant to call him pedantic blade, on account of his being a schoolmaster, and teaching Latin. But I'll be bold to say, in this they do not take the poet's conceit. Pistol barely calls Sir Hugh mountain-foreigner, because he had interposed

' Word of denial in thy labra's here ;
Word of denial ; froth and scum, thou ly'st.

Slender.

posed in the dispute : but then immediately demands the combat of Slender, for having charged him with picking his pocket. The old quartos write it latten, as it should be, in the common characters : and as a proof that the author designed this should be addressed to Slender, Sir Hugh does not there interpose one word in the quarrel. But what then signifies — latten bilboe ? Why, Pistol, seeing Slender such a slim, puny wight, would intimate, that he is as thin as a plate of that compound metal, which is called latten : and which was, as we are told, the old orichalc. Monsieur Dacier, upon this verse in Horace's epistle de Arte Poetica, says, C'est une espece de cuivre de montagne, comme son nom mesme le temoigne ; c'est ce que nous appellons aujourd'hui du leton. " It is a sort of mountain-copper, as its very name imports, and which we at this time of day call latten." THEOBALD.

" Tibia non ut nunc orichalco vineta," &c.

After all this display of learning in Mr. Theobald's note, I believe our poet had a much more obvious meaning. Latten may signify no more than as thin as a lath. The word in some countries is still pronounced as if there was no b in it ; and Ray, in his Dict. of North Country Words, affirms it to be spelt lat in the north of England.

Falstaff threatens, in another play, to drive prince Henry out of his kingdom, with a dagger of lath. A latten bilboe means therefore, I believe, no more than a blade as thin as a lath — a vice's dagger.

Theobald, however, is right in his assertion that latten was a metal. So Turbervile, in his Book of Falconry, 1575 : " — you must set her a latten bason, or a vessel of stone or earth." Again, in Old Fortunatus, 1600 : " Whether it were lead or latten that hasp'd down those winking casements, I know not." Again, in the old metrical Romance of Syr Bevis of Hampton, b. l. no date :

" Windowes of latin were set with glasse."
Latten is still a common word for tin in the North. STEEVENS.

I believe Theobald has given the true sense of latten, though he is wrong in supposing, that the allusion is to Slender's thinness. It is rather to his softness or weakness. TYRWHITT.

' Word of denial in thy labra's here ;] I suppose it should rather be read :

Word of denial in my labra's hear ;
that is, bear the word of denial in my lips. Thou ly'st.

JOHNSON.

Slen. By these gloves, then 'twas he.

Nym. Be'avis'd, Sir, and pass good humours : I will say, ' marry trap, with you, if you run the ' nut-book's humour on me ; that is the very note of it.

Slen. By this hat, then he in the red face had it : for though I cannot remember what I did when you made me drunk, yet I am not altogether an ass.

Fal. What say you, ' Scarlet and John ?

Bard. Why, sir, for my part, I say, the gentleman had drunk himself out of his five sentences.

Eva. It is his five senses, fie, what the ignorance is !

Bard. And being sap⁷, sir, was, as they say, cashier'd ; and so conclusions pass'd the ' careires. •

Slen.

We often talk of giving the lie in a man's teeth, or in his throat. Pistol chooses to throw the word of denial in the lips of his adversary, and is supposed to point to them as he speaks. STEEVENS.

* — marry trap, —] When a man was caught in his own stratagem, I suppose the exclamation of insult was marry, trap !

JOHNSON.

• — nutbook's humour, —] Read, pass the nutbook's humour. Nutbook was a term of reproach in the vulgar way, and in cant strain. In The Second Part of Hen. IV. Dol Tearsheet says to the beadle, Nutbook, Nutbook, you lie. Probably it was a name given to a bailiff or catchpole, very odious to the common people.

HANMER.

Nutbook is the reading of the folio, and the third quarto. The second quarto reads, base humour.

If you run the Nutbook's humour on me, is in plain English, if you say I am a Thief. Enough is said on the subject of hooking moveables out at windows, in a note on K. Henry IV.

STEEVENS.

• 6 — Scarlet and John ?] The names of two of Robin Hood's companions ; but the humour consists in the allusion to Bardolph's red face ; concerning which, see The Second Part of Hen. IV.

WARBURTON.

• 7 And being sap, —] I know not the exact meaning of this cant word, neither have I met with it in any of our old dramatic pieces, which have often proved the best comments on Shakespeare's vulgarisms. STEEVENS.

• — careires, —] I believe this strange word is nothing but the French carriere ; and the expression means, that the common bounds of good behaviour were overpass'd. JOHNSON.

Slen. Ay, you spake in Latin then too; but 'tis no matter: I'll never be drunk whilst I live again, but in honest, civil, godly company, for this trick: if I be drunk, I'll be drunk with those that have the fear of God, and not with drunken knaves.

Eva. So Got 'udge me, that is a virtuous mind.

Fal. You hear all these matters deny'd, gentlemen; you hear it.

Enter mistress Anne Page with wine; mistress Ford and mistress Page following.

Page. Nay, daughter, carry the wine in; we'll drink within. [Exit Anne Page.]

Slen. O heaven! this is mistress Anne Page.

Page. How now, mistress Ford?

Fal. Mistress Ford, by my troth, you are very well met: by your leave, good mistress. [Kissing her.]

Page. Wife, bid these gentlemen welcome:—Come, we have a hot venison pasty to dinner; come, gentlemen, I hope we shall drink down all unkindness. [Exe. all but Shal. Slend. and Evans.]

Slen. I had rather than forty shillings, I had my book of songs and sonnets here:—

Enter Simple.

How now, Simple; where have you been; I must wait on myself, must I? You have not the book of riddles about you, have you?

— to pass the carriere was a military phrase. I find it in one of Sir John Smythe's Discourses, 1589, where, speaking of horses wounded, he says—"they, after the first shrink at the entering of the bullet, doo pass their carriere, as though they had verie little hurt." Again, in Harrington's translation of Ariosto, book xxxviii. stanza 35.

"To stop, to start, to pass carier, to bound."

STEEVENS.

Sim.

Sim. Book of riddles ! why, did you not lend it to Alice Shortcake ? upon Allhallowmas last, a fortnight afore Michaelmas ?

Shal. Come, coz ; come, coz ; we stay for you. A word with you, coz : marry, this, coz ; There is, as 'twere, a tender, a kind of tender, made afar off by fir Hugh here ;—Do you understand me ?

Slen. Ay, fir, you shall find me reasonable ; if it be so, I shall do that that is reason.

Shal. Nay, but understand me.

Slen. So I do, fir.

Eva. Give ear to his motions, master Slender : I will description the matter to you, if you be capacity of it.

Slen. Nay, I will do, as my cousin Shallow says : I pray you, pardon me ; he's a justice of peace in his country, simple though I stand here.

Eva. But that is not the question ; the question is concerning your marriage.

Shal. Ay, there's the point, fir.

Eva. Marry, is it ; the very point of it ; to mistress Anne Page.

Slen. Why, if it be so, I will marry her, upon any reasonable demands.

Eva. But can you affection the woman ? let us command to know that of your mouth, or of your lips ; for divers philosophers hold, that the lips is parcel

* — upon Allhallowmas last, a fortnight afore Michaelmas ?] Sure, Simple's a little out in his reckoning. Allhallowmas is almost five weeks after Michaelmas. But may it not be urged, it is designed Simple should appear thus ignorant, to keep up the character ? I think not. The simplest creatures (nay, even naturals) generally are very precise in the knowledge of festivals, and marking how the seasons run : and therefore I have ventured to suspect our poet wrote Martlemas, as the vulgar call it : which is near a fortnight after All-Saint's day, i. e. eleven days, both inclusive. THEOBALD.

This correction, thus seriously and wisely enforced, is received by fir Tho. Hanmer ; but probably Shakespeare intended a blunder. JOHNSON.

of the mouth ;—Therefore, precisely, can you carry your good-will to the maid ?

Shal. Cousin Abraham Slender, can you love her ?

Slen. I hope, sir,—I will do, as it shall become one that would do reason.

Eva. Nay, Got's lords and his ladies, you must speak possitable, if you can carry her your desires towards her.

Shal. That you must : Will you, upon good dowry, marry her ?

Slen. I will do a greater thing than that, upon your request, cousin, in any reason.

Shal. Nay, conceive me, conceive me, sweet coz ; what I do, is to pleasure you, coz : Can you love the maid ?

Slen. I will marry her, sir, at your request ; but if there be no great love in the beginning, yet heaven may decrease it upon better acquaintance, when we are marry'd, and have more occasion to know one another : I hope, upon familiarity will grow more contempt :

¹ — the lips is parcel of the mouth ;] Thus the old copies. The modern editors read — “ parcel of the mind.”

To be parcel of any thing is an expression that often occurs in the old plays,

So in Decker's Satirongstix :

“ And make damnation parcel of your oath.”

Again, in Tamburlaine, 1590 :

“ To make ~~it~~ parcel of my empery.”

Again, in Rowley's When you see me you know me, 1613 :

“ For as I tak't 'tis parcel of your oath.”

This passage, however, might have been designed as a ridicule on another, in John Lyly's Midds, 1592 :

“ Pet. What lips hath she ?

“ Li. Tush ! Lips are no part of the head, only made for a double-leaf door for the mouth.” STEEVENS.

² — I hope, upon familiarity will grow more content :—] Certainly, the editors in their sagacity have murdered a jest here. It is designed, no doubt, that Slender should say decrease, instead of increase ; and dissolved, dissolutely, instead of resolved and resolutely : but to make him say, on the present occasion, that upon familiarity will grow more content, instead of contempt, is disarming the sentiment contempt : but if you say, marry her, I will marry her, that I am freely dissolved, and dissolutely.

Eva. It is a fery discretion answer ; fave, the faul' is in the 'ort dissolutely : the 'ort is, according to our meaning, resolutely ;—his meaning is good.

Shal. Ay, I think my cousin meant well.

Sten. Ay, of else I would I might be hang'd, la,

Re-enter Anne Page.

Shal. Here comes fair mistress Anne :—Would I were young, for your sake, mistress Anne !

Anne. The dinner is on the table ; my father desires your worship's company.

Shal. I will wait on him, fair mistress Anne.

Eva. Od's plessed will ! I will not be absence at the grace. [Ex. Shal. and Evans.]

Anne. Will't please your worship to come in, sir ?

Sten. No, I thank you, forsooth, heartily ; I am very well.

Anne. The dinner attends you, sir.

Sten. I am not a hungry, I thank you, forsooth : —Go, firrah, for all you are my man, go, wait upon my cousin Shallow : [Exit Simple.] A justice of peace sometime may be beholden to his friend for a man : —I keep but three men and a boy yet, till my mother be dead : But what though ? yet I live like a poor gentleman born.

Anne. I may not go in without your worship : they will not sit, till you come.

Sten. I'faith, I'll eat nothing : I thank you as much as though I did.

Anne. I pray you, sir, walk in.

sentiment of all its salt and humour, and disappointing the audience of a reasonable cause for laughter. THEOBALD.

Theobald's conjecture may be supported by the same intentional blunder in Love's Labour Lost.

“ Sir, the contempts thereof are as touching me.”

STEEVENS.

Sten.

Slender. I had rather walk here, I thank you: I bruise'd my shin the other day with playing at sword and dagger with a master of fence, 'three venues for a dish of stew'd prunes; and, by my troth, I cannot abide the smell of hot meat since. Why do your dogs bark so? be there bears i' the town?

Anne. I think, there are, sir; I heard them talk'd of.

Slender. I love the sport well; but I shall as soon quarrel at it, as any man in England:—You are afraid, if you see the bear loose, are you not?

Anne. Ay, indeed, sir,

Slender. That's meat and drink to me now: I have seen Sackerson loose, twenty times; and have taken him by the chain: but, I warrant you, the women have so cry'd and shriek'd at it, 'that it pass'd:—but women, indeed, cannot abide 'em; they are very ill-favour'd rough things.

Re-enter Page.

Page. Come, gentle master Slender, come; we stay for you.

3 —three venues for a dish, &c.] i. e. three venues, French. Three different set-to's, bouts, a technical term. So in Beaumont and Fletcher's Philaster:—"thou wouldst be loth to play half a dozen venues at Waters with a good fellow for a broken head." So in Chapman's comedy, The Widow's Tears, 1612: "So there's venie for venie, I have given it him." So in The Two Maids of More-clacke, 1609: "This was a pass, 'twas fencer's play, and for the after veny, let me use my skill." So in The famous Hift. &c. of Capt. Tho. Stukely, 1605:—"for forfeits and venues given upon a wager at the ninth button of your doublet." So in our author's Love's Labour's Lost:

"——a quick venvow of wit." STEEVENS.

* —Sackerson—] Seckerfen is likewise the name of a bear in the old comedy of Sir Giles Goosecap. STEEVENS.

3 —that it pass'd:—] It pass'd, or this passes, was a way of speaking customary heretofore, to signify the excess, or extraordinary degree of any thing. The sentence completed would be, This passes all expression, or perhaps, This passes all things. We still use passing well, passing strange. WARBURTON.

Slender.

Slen. I'll eat nothing, I thank you, fir.

Page. ⁶ By cock and pye, you shall not choose;
fir : come, come.

Slen. Nay, pray you, lead the way.

Page. Come on, fir.

Slen. Mistress Anne, yourself shall go first.

Anne. Not I, fir ; pray you, keep on.

Slen. Truly, I will not go first ; truly-la : I will not do you that wrong.

Anne. I pray you, fir.

Slen. I'll rather be unmanherly, than troublesome :
you do yourself wrong, indeed-la. [Exeunt.

S C E N E II.

Enter Evans and Simple.

Eva. Go your ways, and ask of Doctor Caius' house, which is the way : and there dwells one mistress Quickly, which is in the manner of his nurse, or his dry nurse, or his cook, or his laundry, his washer, and his wringer.

Simp. Well, fir.

Eva. Nay, it is petter yet :—give her this letter ; for it is a 'oman that altogether's acquaintance ⁷ with mistress Anne Page ; and the letter is, to desire and require her to solicit your master's desires to mistress Anne Page : I pray you, be gone ; I will make an end of my dinner ; there's pippins and cheese to come. [Exeunt severally.

⁶ By cock and pye,—] See a note on act V. sc. i. Hen. IV. P. II. STEEVENS.

⁷ that altogether's acquaintance] Should not this be " that altogether's acquaintance," i. e. that is altogether acquainted ? The English, I apprehend, would still be bad enough for Evans.

TYRWHITT.

I have availed myself of this remark. STEEVENS.

S C E N E . III.*

The Garter inn.Enter Falstaff, Host, Bardolph, Nym, Pistol, and Robin.Fal. Mine host of the Garter,—Host. What says my bully-rook^s? speak scholarly, and wisely.Fal. Truly, mine host, I must turn away some of my followers.Host. Discard, bully Hercules; cashier: let them wag; trot, trot.Fal. I sit at ten pounds a week.Host. Thou 'rt an emperor, Cæsar, Keisar⁹, and Phœczar.. I will entertain Bardolph; he shall draw, he shall rap: said I well, bully Hector?Fal. Do so, good mine host.Host. I have spoke; let him follow: ' Let me see thee froth, and lime: I am at a word; follow.[Exit Host.Fal.

* —my⁹bully rock?] The spelling of this word is corrupted, and thereby its primitive meaning is lost. The old plays have generally bully-rook, which is right; and so it is exhibited by the folio editions of Shakespeare, as well as the 4to, 1619. The latter part of this compound title is taken from the rooks at the game of chess. STEEVENS.

⁹ —Keisar, —] The preface to Stowe's Chronicle observes, that the Germans use the K for C, pronouncing Keyfar for Cæsar, their general word for an emperor. TOLLET.

¹ —Let me see thee froth, and live:] —] This passage has passed through all the editions without suspicion of being corrupted; but the reading of the old quartos of 1602 and 1619, Let me see froth and lime, I take to be the true one. The Host calls for an immediate specimen of Bardolph's abilities as a tapster; and frothing beer and liming sack were tricks practised in the time of Shakespeare. The first was done by putting soap into the bottom of the tankard when they drew the beer; the other, by mixing lime with the sack (i. e. sherry) to make it sparkle in the glass.

Froth

Fal. Bardolph, follow him; a tapster is a good trade: An old cloak makes a new jerkin; a wither'd servingman, a fresh tapster: 'Go; adieu.

Bard. It is a life that I have desir'd: I will thrive.

[Exit Bard.

Pist. 'O base Gongarian wight! wilt thou the spigot wield?

Nym. He was gotten in drink: Is not the humour conceited? His mind is not heroic, and there's the humour of it.

Froth and live is sense, but a little forced; and to make it so we must suppose the Host could guess by his dexterity in frothing a pot to make it appear fuller than it was, how he would afterwards succeed in the world. Falstaff himself complains of lived sack.

STEEVENS.

"—a wither'd servingman, a fresh tapster:] This is not improbably a parody on the old proverb—"A broken apothecary, a new doctor." See Ray's Proverbs, 3d edit. p. 2. STEEVENS.

'O base Gongarian wight! &c.] This is a parody on a line taken from one of the old bombast plays, beginning:

"O base Gongarian, wilt thou the distaff wield?"

I had marked the passage down, but forgot to note the play.

The folio reads Hungarian.

Hungarian is likewise a cant term. So in the Merry Devil of Edmonton, 1626, the merry Host says, "I have knights and colonels in my house, and must tend the Hungarians."

Again: "Come ye Hungarian pilchers."

Again, in Westward Ho, 1607:

"Play you louzy Hungarians." STEEVENS.

The Hungarians, when infidels, over-ran Germany and France, and would have invaded England, if they could have come to it. See Stowe, in the year 930, and Holinshed's Invasions of Ireland, p. 56. Hence their name might become a proverb of baseness. Stowe's Chronicle, in the year 1492, and Leland's Collectanea, vol. i. p. 610, spell it Hungarian (which might be misprinted Gongarian) and this is right according to their own etymology. Hongyars, i. e. domus fure strenui defensores. TOLLET.

The word is Gongarian in the first edition, and should be continued, the better to fix the allusion. FARMER.

*—humour of it.] This speech is partly taken from the corrected copy, and partly from the slight sketch in 1602. I mention it, that those who do not find it in either of the common old editions, may not suspect it to be spurious. STEEVENS.

Fal.

Fal. I am glad, I am so acquit of this tinderbox ; his thefts were too open : his filching was like an unskilful finger, he kept not time :

Nym. The good humour is, to steal ^s at a minute's rest.

Pist. Convey, the wise it call ⁶ : Steal ! foh ; a fico for the phrase !

Fal. Well, firs, I am almost out at heels.

Pist. Why then, let kibes ensue.

Fal. There is no remedy ; I must cony-catch, I must shift.

Pist. ⁷ Young ravens must have food.

Fal. Which of you know Ford of this town ?

Pist. I ken the wight ; he is of substance good.

Fal. My honest lads, I will tell you what I am about.

Pist. Two yards, and more.

*5 ——— at a minute's rest.] Our author probably wrote :
at a minim's rest. LANGTON.

This conjecture seems confirmed by a passage in Romeo and Juliet : — “ rests his minim,” &c. It may however mean, that, like a skilful hatquebuzier, he takes a good aim, though he has rested his piece for a minute only.

So in Daniel's Civil Wars, &c. b. vi :

“ To pick up's rest to venture now for all.” STEEVENS

At a minute's rest.] A minim was anciently, as the term imports, the shortest note in music. Its measure was afterwards, as it is now, as long as while two may be moderately counted. In Romeo and Juliet, act II. sc. iv. Mercutio says of Tibalt, that in fighting he rests his minim, once, two, and the third in your bosom. A minute contains sixty seconds, and is a long time for an action supposed to be instantaneous. Nym means to say that the perfection of stealing is to do it in the shortest time possible.

SIR J. HAWKINS.

⁶ Convey, the wise it call :] So in the old morality of Hycke Scorne, bl. l. no date :

“ Syf, the horefones could not convey clene ;

“ For an they could have carried by craft as I can, &c.”

STEEVENS.

⁷ Young ravens must have food.] An adage. See Ray's Proverbs. STEEVENS.

Fal. No quips now, Pistol : Indeed, I am in the waist two yards about : but I am now ² about no waste ; I am about thrift. ' Briefly, I do mean to make love to Ford's wife ; I spy entertainment in her ; she discourses, she carves³, she gives the leer of invitation : I can construe the action of her familiar stile ; and the hardest voice of her behaviour, to be English'd rightly, is, I am sir John Falstaff's.

Pist. He hath study'd her will, and translated her will ; out of honesty into English.

Nym. ' The anchor is deep : Will that humour pass ?

Fal.

² — about no waste ; —] I find the same play on words in Heywood's Epigram, 1562 :

" Where am I least, husband ? quoth he, in the waist ;

" Which cometh of this, thou art vengeance strait lac'd.

" Where am I biggest, wife ? in the waste, quoth she,

" For all is waste in you, as far as I see."

And again, in The Wedding, a comedy, by Shirley, 1626 :

" He's a great man indeed ;

" Something given to the waist, for he lives within no
" reasonable compass." STEEVENS.

³ — she carves,] It should be remembered, that anciently the young of both sexes were instructed in carving, as a necessary accomplishment. In 1508, Wynkyn de Worde published " A Booke of Kerwinge." So in Love's Labour's Lost, Biron says of Beaut, the French courtier : " — He can carve too, and lisp."

STEEVENS.

² The anchor is deep : Will that humour pass ? I see not what relation the anchor has to translation. Perhaps we may read, the author is deep ; or perhaps the line is out of its place, and should be inserted lower after Falstaff has said,

Sail like my pinnace to those golden shores.

It may be observed, that in the tracts of that time anchor and author could hardly be distinguished. JOHNSON.

The anchor is deep :] Dr. Johnson very acutely proposes " the author is deep." He reads with the first copy, " he hath study'd her well."—And from this equivocal word, Nym catches the idea of deepness. But it is almost impossible to ascertain the diction of this whimsical character : and I meet with a phrase in Penner's Comptrol's Commonwealth, 1617, which perhaps may support the old reading, " Master Decker's Billman of London, hath set

Fal. Now, the report goes, she has all the rule of her husband's purse; she hath a legion of angels.

Pist. As many devils entertain; and, To her, boy, say I.

Nym. The humour rises; it is good: humour me the angels.

Fal. I have writ me here a letter to her: and here another to Page's wife; who even now gave me good eyes too, examin'd my parts with most judicious cyliads: sometimes the beam of her view gilded my foot, sometimes my portly belly.

Pist. Then did the sun on dung-hill shine.

Nym. I thank thee for that humour.

Fal.

set forth the vices of the time so lively, that it is impossible the anchor of any other man's braine can found the sea of a more deepe and dreadful mischeefe." FARMER.

—studied her will, and translated her will — is the reading of the first folio, 1623. The contested part of the passage may mean, His hopes are well founded. So in the Knight of the Burning Pestle, by B. and Fletcher:

"—Now my latest hope

"Forfake me not, but sling thy anchor out,

"And let it hold."

Translation is not used in its common acceptation, but means to explain, as one language is explained by another. So in Hamlet:

"—these profound heavens

"You must translate, 'tis fit we understand them."

Again, in Troilus and Cressida:

"Did in great Ilion thus translate him to me."

STEEVENS.

² As many devils entertain; &c.] The old quarto reads:

As many devils attend her! &c. STEEVENS.

I would read with the quarto—As many devils attend her! i. e. let as many devils attend her. MUSGRAVE.

³ —cyliads: —] This word is differently spelt in all the copies. I suppose we should write oëillades, French. STEEVENS.

⁴ —that humour.] What distinguishes the language of Nym from that of the other attendants on Falstaff, is the constant repetition of this phrase. In the time of Shakespeare such an affectation seems to have been sufficient to mark a character. In Sir Giles Goosecap, a play of which I have no earlier edition than that

Fal. O, she did 'so course-o'er my exteriors with such a greedy intention⁵, that the appetite of her eye did seem to scorch me up like a burning-glass! Here's another letter to her: she bears the purse too; ⁶ she is a region in Guiana, all gold and bounty. ⁷ I will be cheater to them both, and they shall be exchequers to me; they shall be my East and West Indies, and I will trade to them both. Go, bear thou this letter to mistress Page; and thou this to mistress Ford: we will thrive, lads, we will thrive.

Pist. Shall I sir Pandarus of Troy become,
And by my side wear steel? then, Lucifer take all!

Nym. I will run no base humour: here, take the humour letter; I will keep the haviour of reputation.

Fal. Hold, firrah, bear you these letters tightly⁸; of 1606, the same peculiarity is mentioned in the hero of the piece:

"—his only reason for every thing is, that we are all mortal; then hath he another pretty phrase too, and that is, he will tickle the vanity of every thing." STEEVENS.

⁵ —intention,] i. e. eagerness of desire. STEEVENS.

⁶ —she is a region in Guiana, all gold and bounty.] If the tradition be true (as I doubt not but it is) of this play being wrote at queen Elizabeth's command, this passage, perhaps, may furnish a probable conjecture that it could not appear till after the year 1598. The mention of Guiana, then so lately discovered to the English, was a very happy compliment to sir Walter Raleigh, who did not begin his expedition for South America till 1595, and returned from it in 1596, with an advantageous account of the great wealth of Guiana. Such an address of the poet was likely, I imagine, to have a proper impression on the people, when the intelligence of such a golden country was fresh in their minds, and gave them expectations of immense gain. THEOBALD.

⁷ —I will be cheater to them both, and they shall be exchequers to me;—] The same joke is intended here, as in The Second Part of Henry the Fourth, act II:

"—I will bar no honest man my house, nor no cheater."—By which is meant Esebeatur, an officer in the Exchequer, in no good repute with the common people. WAREBURY.

⁸ —tightly;] Thus the folio; the 4to. rightly. STEEVENS.

Sail

Sail like my pinnace⁹ to these golden shores.

• [To Robin.

Rogues, hence, avaunt! vanish like hail-stones, go;
Trudge, plod, away, o' the hoof; seek shelter, pack!
Falstaff will learn the humour of this age¹,
French thrift, you rogues; myself, and skirted page.

[Exit Falstaff and Boy.

Pist. ² Let vultures gripe thy guts! ³ for gourd, and fullam holds;

And high and low beguiles the rich and poor:

Tefter

⁹ — my pinnace] A pinnace seems anciently to have signified a small vessel, or sloop, attending on a larger.

So in Rowley's When you see me you know me, 1613:

" — was lately sent

" With three-score sail of ships and pinnaces."

Again, in Mulcaffer the Turk, 1610:

" Our life is but a failing to our death

" Thro' the world's ocean: it makes no matter then,

" Whether we put into the world's vast sea

" Shipp'd in a pinnace or an argosy."

At present it signifies only a man of war's boat. STEEVENS.

¹ — the humour of this age,] Thus the 4to, 1619: The folio reads—the honor of the age. STEEVENS.

² Let vultures gripe thy guts! —] This hemistich is a burlesque on a passage in Tamburlaine, or The Scythian Shepherd, of which play a more particular account is given in one of the notes to Henry IV. P. II. act II. sc. iv. STEEVENS.

³ — for gourd, and fullam holds;

And high and low beguiles the rich and poor:] Fullam is a cant term for false dice, high and low. Torriano, in his Italian dictionary, interprets Pisally false dice, high and low men, high fullams and low fullams. Jonson, in his Every Man out of his Humour, quibbles upon this cant term: "Who, be serve? He keeps high men and low men, he has a fair living at fullam."—As for gourd, or rather gord, it was another instrument of gaming, as appears from Beaumont and Fletcher's Scornful Lady: "— And thy dry bones can reach at nothing now, but GORDS or nine-pins." WARBURTON.

In the London Prodigal I find the following enumeration of false dice.—"I bequeath two bale of false dice, videlicet, high men and low men, fulloms, stop cater-traies, and other bones of function."

In Monsieur D'Olive, a comedy, by Chapman, 1606, the gord, the fullam, and the stop-cater tree, are mentioned.

Tester I'll have in pouch, when thou shalt lack,
Base Phrygian Turk!

Nym. I have operations in my head, which be humours of revenge.

Pist. Wilt thou revenge?

Nym. By welkin, and her star!

Pist. With wit, or steel?

Nym. With both the humours, I:

I will discuss the humour of this love to Ford.

Pist. And I to Page shall eke unfold,

How Falstaff, varlet vile,

His dove will prove, his gold will hold,

And his soft couch defile.

Nym. My humour shall not cool: I will incense Ford to deal with poison; I will possess him with yellowness, for the revolt of mien is dangerous: that is my true humour.

Pist.

Green, in his Art of Juggling, &c. 1612, says, "What should I say more of false dice, of fulloms, high men, lowe men, gourds, and brizled dice, graviars, demies, and contraries?"

Again, in The Bell-man of London, by Decker, 5th edit. 1640; among the false dice are enumerated, "a bale of fullams."—"A bale of gordes, with as many high-men as low-men for passage."

Again, in Soliman and Perseda:

Pist. "Nay, I use not to go without a pair of false dice;

"Here are tall men and little men."

Julio. "High men and low men, thou wouldst say."

Again, in Monsieur D'Olive, 1606:

"The gourd, the fulham, and the app-cater-tre."

Again, in Nobody and Somebody, 1598:

"Here fullams and gourds, here's tall-men and low-men."

STEEVENS.

* I will discuss the humour of this love to Ford.]

The very reverse of this happens. See act II. where Nym makes the discovery to Page, and not to Ford, as here promised; and Pistol, on the other hand, to Ford, and not to Page. Shakespeare is frequently guilty of these little forgetfulnesses.

STEEVENS.

⁵ —yellowness, —] Yellowness is jealousy. JOHNSON.

So, in Law Tricks, &c. 1608:

"If you have me you must not put on yellows."

Again,

Pist. Thou art the Mars of malecontents: I second thee; troop on. • [Exeunt.

S C E N E IV.

Dr. Caius's house. •

Enter Mrs. Quickly, Simple, and John Rugby.

Quick. What; John Rugby!—I pray thee, go to the casement, and see if you can see my master, master Doctor Caius, coming: if he do, i'faith, and find any body in the house, here will be an old abusing of God's patience, and the king's English.

Rug. I'll go watch. • [Exit Rugby. •

Quick. Go; and we'll have a posset for't soon at night, in faith, at the latter end of a sea-coal fire. An honest, willing, kind fellow, as ever servant shall come in house withal; and, I warrant you, no tell-tale, nor no breed-bate: his worst fault is, that he

Again, in The Arrangement of Paris, 1584:

“ — Flora well, perdie, •

“ Did paint her yellow for her jealousy.” STEEVENS. •
“ — the revolt of mien —] I suppose we may read, the revolt of men. • Sir T. Hamner reads, this revolt of mine. • Either may serve, for of the present text I can find no meaning.

• JOHNSON.

The revolt of mine is the old reading. Revolt of mien, is change of countenance, or of the effects he has just been ascribing to jealousy. STEEVENS.

This, Mr. Steevens truly observes to be the old reading, and it is authority enough for the revolt of mien in modern orthography. “ Know you that fellow that walketh there? says Eliot, 1593— he is an alchymist by his mine, and hath multiplied all to moonshine.” FARMER.

“ — at the latter end &c.] That is, when my master is in bed. JOHNSON.

“ — no breed bate:] Bate is an obsolete word, signifying strife, contention. See, in the Countess of Pembroke's Antonius, 1590:

“ Shall ever civil bate

“ Gnaw and devour our state?”

he is given to prayer; he is something peevish⁹ that way: but no body but has his fault;—but let that pass. Peter Simple, you say your name is?

Sim. Ay, for fault of a better.

Quic. And master Slender's your master?

Sim. Ay, forsooth.

Quic. Does he not wear a great round beard, like a glover's paring-knife?

Sim. No, forsooth: he hath but a little wee face, with a little yellow beard; a Cain-colour'd beard.

Quic.

Again, in Acolastus, a comedy, 1529:

"We shall not fall at bate, or stryve for this matter."

Stanyhurst, in his translation of Virgil, 1582, calls Erinnys a male bate. STEEVENS.

⁹ — peevish] Peevish is foolish. So in Cymbeline, act II. "—he's strange and peevish." STEEVENS.

¹ — a little wee face,] Wee, in the northern dialect, signifies very little. Thus, in the Scottish proverb that apologizes for a little woman's marriage with a big man: "—A wee mouse will creep under a mickle cornstack." COLLINS.

So in Heywood's Fair Maid of the West, coin. 1631: "He was nothing so tall as I, but a little wee man, and somewhat hutch-back'd."

Again, in The Wifdom of Doctor Dodypoll, 1600:

"Some two miles, and a wee bit, Sir."

Wee is derived from wenig. Dutch. On the authority of the 4to, 1619, we might be led to read wehey-face: "—Somewhat of a weakly man, and has as it were a wehey-colour'd beard." Macbeth calls one of the messengers Wehey-face. STEEVENS.

² — a Cain-colour'd beard.] Thus the latter editions. I have restored Cain from the old copies. Cain and Sidas, in the tapestries and pictures of old, were represented with yellow beards.

THEOBALD.

Theobald's conjecture may be countenanced by a parallel expression in an old play called Blurt Master Constable. or. The Spaniard's Night-Walk, 1602:

"—over all,

"A goodly, long, thick, Abraham-colour'd beard."

Again, in Soliman and Perseda, 1599, Baslisco says:

"—where is the eldest son of Triam,

"That Abraham-colour'd Trojan?"

I am not however certain, but that Abraham may be a corruption of Auburn.

Again,

Quic. A softly-sprighted man, is he not?

Sim. Ay, forsooth; but he is as tall a man of his hands, as any is between this and his head; he hath fought with a warrener.

Quic. How say you?—oh, I should remember him; Does he not hold up his head, as it were? and strut in his gait?

Sim. Yes, indeed, does he.

Quic. Well, heaven send Anne Page no worse fortune! Tell master parson Evans, I will do what I can for your master: Anne is a good girl, and I wish—

Re-enter Rugby.

Rug. Out, alas! here comes my master.

Again, in The Spanish Tragedy, 1605:

“And let their beards be of Judas his own colour.”

Again, in A Christian turn'd Turk, 1612:

“That's he in the Judas beard.”

In an age, when but a small part of the nation could read, ideas were frequently borrowed from representations in painting or tapestry. A cane-colour'd beard however, might signify a beard of the colour of cane, i. e. a sickly yellow; for straw-coloured beards are mentioned in the Mid-summer's Night Dream. STEEVENS.

The new edition of Leland's Collectanea, vol. v. p. 295, asserts, that painters constantly represented Judas the traitor with a red head. Dr. Plot's Oxfordshire, p. 153, says the same. This conceit is thought to have arisen in England, from our ancient grudge to the red-haired Danes. TOLLET.

See my quotation, in K. Hen. VIII. act V. sc. ii. STEEVENS.

“—as tall a man of his hands, —”] Perhaps this is an allusion to the jocky measure, so many hands high, used by grooms when speaking of horses. Tall, in our author's time, signified not only height of stature, but stoutness of body. The ambiguity of the phrase seems intended. PERCY.

Whatever be the origin of this phrase, it is very ancient, being used by Gower:

“A worthie knight was of his bonde,

“There was none suche in all the londe.”

De Confessione Amantis. lib. v. fol. 118. b.

STEEVENS.

Quic.

Quic. We shall all be shent *: Run in here, good young man; 'go into this closet. [Shuts Simple in the closet.] He will not stay long.—What, John Rugby! John, what, John, I say!—Go, John, go enquire for my master; I doubt, he be not well, that he comes not home :—and down, down, a-down-a *, &c. [Sings.

Enter Doctor Caius *.

Caius. Vat is you sing? I do not like dese toys; Pray you, go and vetch me in my closet ? un boitier verd; a box, a green-a box; 'Do intend vat I speak? a green-a box.

Quick. Ay, forfooth, I'll fetch it you.
I am glad he went not in himself: if he had found the young man, he would have been horn-mad. [Aside.

Caius. Fe, fe, fe, fe! ma foi, il fait fort chaud. Je m'en vai à la Cour,—la grande affaire.

Qui.

* ——— we shall be shent :] i. e. Scolded, roughly treated. So in the old Interlude of Nature, bl. l. no date :

" ——— I can tell thee one thyng,

" " In fayth you wyll be shent." STEEVENS.

* ——— and down, down, a-down-a, &c.] To deceive her master, she sings as if at her work. SIR J. HAWKINS.

* Enter Doctor Caius.] It has been thought strange, that our author should take the name of Caius for his Frenchman in this comedy; but Shakespeare was little acquainted with literary history; and without doubt, from this unusual name, supposed him to have been a foreign quack. Add to this, that the doctor was handed down as a kind of Rosicrucian: Mr. Ames had in MS. one of the "Secret Writings of Dr. Caius." FARMER.

* ——— un boitier verd; ———] Boitier in French signifies a case of surgeon's instruments. DR. GRAY.

I believe it rather means a box of salve, or case to hold simples, for which Caius professes to seek. The same word, somewhat curtailed, is used by Chaucer, in the Pardoner's Prologue, v. 12241:

" And every boist full of thy letuacie."

Again, in the Skyner's Play, in the Chester Collection of Mysteries. MS. Harl. p. 149: Mary Magdalen says:

" To balme his bodye that is so blyghte,

" Boyste here have I brought," STEEVENS.

Quic. Is it this, Sir.

Caius. Ouy; mettez le au mon pocket; Dépêchez, quickly:—Vere is dat knave Rugby?

Quic. What, John Rugby! John!

Rug. Here, Sir.

Caius. You are John Rugby, and you are Jack Rugby: Come, take-à your rapier, and come after my hecl to de court.

Rug. 'Tis ready, Sir, here in the porch.

Caius. By my trot, I tarry too long:—Od's me!
Qu'ay j'oublie? dere is some simples in my closet,
dat I vill not for the varld I shall leave behind.

Quic. Ah me! he'll find the young man there, and be mad.

Caius. O diable, diable! vat is in my closet?—Villaine, Larron! Rugby, my rapier.

[Pulls Simple out of the closet.]

Quic. Good master, be content.

Caius. Verefore shall I be content-a?

Quic. The young man is an honest man.

Caius. Vat shall de honest man do in my closet?
dere is no honest man dat shall come in my closet.

Quic. I beseech you, be not so flegmatic; hear the truth of it. He came of an errand to me from parson Hugh.

Caius. Vell.

Sim. Ay, forsooth, to desire her to—

Quic. Peace, I pray you.

Caius. Peace-a your tongue:—Speak-a your tale.

Sim. To desire this honest gentlewoman, your maid, to speak a good word to mistress Anne Page for my master in the way of marriage.

Quic. This is all, indeed-la; but I'll never put my finger in the fire, and need not.

Caius. Sir Hugh send-a you?—Rugby, bailliez me some paper: Tarry you a little while.

Quic. I am glad he is so quiet: if he had been thoroughly moved, you should have heard him so loud,
and

and so melancholy;—But notwithstanding, man, I'll do for your master what good I can: and the very yea and the no is, the French Doctor, my master,—I may call him my master, look you, for I keep his house; and I wash, wring, brew, bake, scour, dress meat and drink, make the beds, and do all myself.

Sim. 'Tis a great charge, to come under one body's hand.

Quic. Are you avis'd o' that? you shall find it a great charge: And to be up early, and down late;—but notwithstanding, (to tell you in your ear; I would have no words of it) my master himself is in love with mistress Anne Page: but, notwithstanding that,—I know Anne's mind,—that's, neither here nor there.

Caius. You jack'nape; give-a dis letter to Sir Hugh; by gar, it is a shallenge: I vill cut his throat in de park; and I vill teach a scurvy jack-a-nape priest to meddle or make:—you may be gone; it is not good you tarry here:—by gar, I will cut all his two stones; by gar, he shall not have a stone to throw at his dog. [Exit Simple.]

Quic. Alas, he speaks but for his friend.

Caius. It is no matter-a for dat:—do you not tell-a me dat I shall have Anne Page for myself?—by gar, I vill kill de jack priest; and I have appointed mine host of de Jarterre to measure our weapon;—by gar, I vill myself have Anne Page.

Quic. Sir, the maid loves you, and all shall be well: we must give folks leave to prate: What, the goujere!

Caius. Rugby, come to the court vit me;—By

* —What the goujere!] So in K. Lear:

"The goujeers shall devour them."

The goujere; i. e. morbis Gallicus. See Hanmer's note, K. Lear, act V. sc. iii. STEEVENS.

gar, if I have not Anne Page, I shall turn your head out of door:—Follow my heels, Rugby.

[Ex. Caius and Rugby.]

Quic. You shall have An fools-head of your own. No, I know Anne's mind for that: never a woman in Windsor knows more of Anne's mind than I do; nor can do more than I do with her, I thank heaven.

Fent. [Within.] Who's within there, ho?

Quic. Who's there, I trow? come near the house, I pray you.

[Enter Mr. Fenton.]

Fent. How now, good woman; how dost thou?

Quic. The better that it pleases your good worship to ask.

Fent. What news? how does pretty mistress Anne?

Quic. In truth, Sir, and she is pretty, and honest, and gentle; and one that is your friend, I can tell you that by the way, I praise heaven for it.

Fent. Shall I do any good, thinkest thou? shall I not lose my suit?

Quic. Troth; fir, all is in his hands above: but notwithstanding, master Fenton, I'll be sworn on a book, she loves you:—Have not your worship a wart about your eye?

Fent. Yes, marry, have I; what of that?

Quic. Well, thereby hangs a tale;—good faith, it is such another Nan;—but I detest, an honest maid as ever broke bread:—We had an hour's talk of that wart;—I shall never laugh but in that maid's company!—But, indeed, she is given too much to allicholly and musing: But for you—Well—go to.

Fent. Well, I shall see her to-day: Hold, there's money for thee; let me have thy voice in my behalf: if thou seest her before me, commend me—

Quic. Will I? ay, faith, that we will: and I will tell tell your worship more of the wart, the next time we have confidence ; and of other wooers.

Fent. Well, farewell ; I am in great haste now.

[Exit.

Quic. Farewell to your worship.—Truly, an honest gentleman ; but Anne loves him not ; I know Anne's mind as well as another does :—Out upon't ! what have I forgot ?

[Exit.

ACT II. SCENE I.

Before Page's house.

Enter Mistress Page with a letter.

Mistress Page. What, have I 'scap'd love-letters in the holy-day-time of my beauty, and am I now a subject for them ? Let me see :

Ask me no reason why I love you ; for ' though love use reason

⁹ ——— though love use reason for his precisian, he admits him not for his counsellor :—] This is obscure ; but the meaning is, though love permit reason to tell what is fit to be done, he seldom follows its advice.—By precisian, is meant one who pretends to a more than ordinary degree of virtue and sanctity. On which account they gave this name to the puritans of that time. So Osborne—“Conform their mode, words, and looks to these PRECISIANS.” And Maine, in his City Match :

“ ——— I did commend

“ A great PRECISIAN to her for her woman.

WARBURTON.

——— precisian, ———] Of this word I do not see any meaning that is very apposite to the present intention. Perhaps Falstaff said, Though love use reason as his physician, he admits him not for his counsellor. This will be plain sense. Ask not the reason of my love ; the business of reason is not to assist love, but to cure it. There may however be this meaning in the present reading. Though love, when he would submit to regulation, may use reason

as reason for his precisian, he admits him not for his counsellor: You are not young, no more am I; go so then, there's sympathy: you are merry, so am I; Ha! ha! then there's more sympathy: you love sack, and so do I; Would you desire better sympathy? let it suffice thee, mistress Page, (at the least, if the love of a soldier can suffice) that I love thee. I will not say, pity me, 'tis not a soldier-like phrase; but I joy, love me. By me,

Thine own true knight,
By day or night,
Or any kind of light,
With all his might,
For thee to fight.

John Falstaff.

What

as his precisian, or director in nice cases, yet when he is only eager to attain his end, he takes not reason for his counsellor.

JOHNSON.

Dr. Johnson wishes to read physician; and this conjecture becomes almost a certainty from a line in our author's 147th sonnet,

"My reason the physician to my love, &c." FARMER.

The character of a precisian seems to have been very generally ridiculed in the time of Shakspeare. So in the Malcontent, 1604: "You must take her in the right vein then; as, when the sign is in pisces, a fishmonger's wife is very sociable: in cances, a precisian's wife is very flexible."

Again, Dr. Faustus, 1604:

"I will set my countenance like a precisian?"

Again, in Arden of Feversham, 1633:

"How now, Will! become a precisian?"

Again, in Ben Jonson's Case is alter'd, 1609:

"It is precisianism to alter that,

"With austere judgment, which is given by nature."

STEEVENS.

If physician be the right reading, the meaning may be this: A lover uncertain as yet of success, never takes reason for his counsellor, but when desperate, applies to him as his physician.

MUSGRAVE.

Thine own true knight,
By day or night.

This

What a Herod of Jewry is this?—O wicked, wicked world!—one that is well nigh worn to pieces with age, to shew himself a young gallant! What an unweigh'd behaviour² has this Flemish drunkard pick'd (with the devil's name) out of my conversation, that he dares in this manner assay me? Why, he hath not been thrice in my company!—What should I say to him?—³ I was then frugal of my mirth:—heaven forgive me!—Why, I'll exhibit⁴ a bill in the

This expression, which is ludicrously employed by Falstaff, anciently meant, at all times.

So, in the third book of Gower, De Confessione Amantis:

“The sonne cleped was Machayre,

“The daughter eke Canace hight,

“By daie bothe and eke by night.”

Loud and still, was another phrase of the same meaning.

STEEVENS.

² What an unweigh'd behaviour &c.] Thus the folio and 4to, 1630. It has been suggested to me, that we should read, one.

STEEVENS.

³ ——— I was then frugal of my mirth:] By breaking this speech into exclamations, the text may stand; but I once thought it must be read, If I was not then frugal of my mirth.

JOHNSON.

⁴ ——— a bill in the parliament for the putting down of men. —] What, Mrs Page! put down the whole species, unius ob noxam, for a single offender's trespass? Don't be so unreasonable in your anger. But 'tis a false charge against you. I am persuaded, a short monosyllable is dropped out, which, once restored, would qualify the matter. We must necessarily read ——— for the putting down of fat men. Mrs. Ford says in the very ensuing scene, I shall think the worse of fat men, as long as I have an eye, &c. And in the old quartos, Mrs. Page, so soon as she had read the letter, says, Well, I shall trust fat men the worse, while I live, for his sake: and he is called the fat knight, the greasy knight, by the women, throughout the play. THEOBALD.

——— I'll exhibit a bill in parliament for putting down of men.] Mr. Theobald says, we must necessarily read ——— for putting down of fat men. But how is the matter mended? or the thought made less ridiculous? Shakespeare wrote ——— for the putting down of MUM, i. e. the fattening liquor so called. So Fletcher in his Wild Goose Chase: “What a cold I have over my stomach, would I had some the parliament for the putting down of men. How shall I be reveng'd on him? for reveng'd I will be, as sure as his guts are made of puddings.

MUM.”

Enter Mistress Ford.

Mrs. Ford. Mistress Page! trust me, I was going to your house.

Mrs. Page. And, trust me, I was coming to you. You look very ill.

Mrs. Ford. Nay, I'll ne'er believe that; I have to shew to the contrary.

Mrs. Page. Faith, but you do, in my mind.

Mrs. Ford. Well, I do then; yet, I say, I could shew you to the contrary: O, mistress Page, give me some counsel!

Mrs. Page. What's the matter, woman?

Mrs. Ford. O woman, if it were not for one trifling respect, I could come to such honour!

NUM." This is truly humorous, and agrees with the character she had just before given him, of Flemish dyekhard. But the greatest confirmation of this conjecture is the allusion the words, in question, bear to a matter then publicly transacting. The Merry Wives of Windsor appears to have been wrote in 1601, or very shortly after. And we are informed by Sir Simon D'Ewes' Journal, that no home affair made more noise in and out of parliament at that time, than the suppression and regulation of taverns, inns, ale-houses, strong liquors, and the drinkers of them. In the parliament held 1597, a bill was brought into both houses, "For suppressing the multitude of malsters," &c. Another, "To restrain the excessive making of malt, and disorderly brewing of strong beer." Another, "For regulating of inns, taverns," &c. In the next parliament, held 1601, was a bill, "For the suppressing of the multitude of ale-houses and tipling-houses." Another, "Against excessive and common drunkenness;" and several others of the same nature. Some of which, after much canvassing, were thrown out, and others passed into acts. WARBURTON.

I do not see that any alteration is necessary; if it were, either of the foregoing conjectures might serve the turn. But surely Mrs. Ford may naturally enough, in the first heat of her anger, rail at the sex for the fault of one. JOHNSON.

Mrs. Page. Hang the trifle, woman; take the honour: What is it?—dispense with trifles;—what is it?

Mrs. Ford. If I would but go to hell for an eternal moment, or so, I could be knighted.

Mrs. Page. What?—thou liest!—Sir Alice Ford!
—These

* What?—thou liest!—Sir Alice Ford!—These knights will HACK, and so thou shouldst not alter the article of thy gentry.] The unintelligible nonsense of this speech is hardly to be matched. The change of a single letter has occasioned it, which is thus easily removed. Read and point—These knights will LACK, and so thou shouldst not alter the article of thy gentry. The other had said, I could be knighted, meaning, I could have a knight for my lover; her companion took it in the other sense, of conferring the title, and says, What?—thou liest!—Sir Alice Ford!—These knights will lack a title [i.e. risk the punishment of degradation] rather than not make a whore of thee. For we are to observe that—and so thou shouldst not, is a mode of speech, amongst the writers of that time, equivalent to—rather than thou shouldst not. WARBURTON.

Upon this passage the learned editor has tried his strength, in my opinion, with more spirit than success.

I read thus—These knights we'll back, and so thou shouldst not alter the article of thy gentry. The punishment of a recreant or undeserving knight, was to back off his spurs: the meaning therefore is; it is not worth the while of a gentlewoman to be made a knight, for we'll degrade all these knights in a little time, by the usual form of backing off their spurs, and thou, if thou art knighted, shalt be hacked with the rest. JOHNSON.

Hartmer says, to back, means to turn hackney, or prostitute. I suppose he means—These knights will degrade themselves, so that she will acquire no honour by being connected with them. Perhaps the passage has been hitherto entirely misunderstood. To back, is an expression used in the ridiculous scene between Quickly, Evans, and the Boy; and signifies, to do mischief. The sense of this passage may therefore be, these knights are a riotous, dissolute sort of people, and on that account thou shouldst not wish to be of the number.

It is not, however, impossible that Shakespeare meant by—these knights will back—these knights will soon become hackney'd characters.—So many knights were made about the time this play was amplified (for the passage is neither in the copy 1602, nor 1616) that such a stroke of satire might not have been unjustly thrown in. In Hans Beer Pot's Invisible Comedy, 1618, is a long piece of ridicule on the same occurrence:

“ ’Twas strange to see what knighthood once would do:

“ Stir great men up to lead a martial life——

“ To

—These knights will hack; and so thou shouldst not alter the article of thy gentry.

Mrs. Ford. We burn day-light⁶:—here, read, read;—perceive how I might be knighted.—I shall think the worse of fat men, as long as I have an eye to make difference of men's liking: And yet he would not swear; prais'd women's modesty; and gave such orderly and well-behaved reproof to all uncomeliness, that I would have sworn his disposition would have gone to the truth of his words: but they do no more adhere, and keep place together, than the hundredth psalm to the tune of *Green Sleeves*⁷. What tempest, I trow,

—“To gain this honour and this dignity——

“But now, alas! 'tis grown ridiculous;

“Since bought with money, sold for basest prize,

“That some refuse it who are counted wise.” STEEVENS.

⁶ We burn day-light:—] i.e. we have more proof than we want. The same proverbial phrase occurs in the Spanish Tragedy:

—Hier. “Light me your torches.”

Pedra. “Then we burn day-light.”

So in Romeo and Juliet, Mercutio uses the same expression, and then explains it:

“We waste our lights in vain like lamps by day.”

STEEVENS.

⁷ —Green Sleeves.] This song was entered on the books of the Stationers' Company, in September 1580: “Licenced unto Richard Jones, a newe northern dittye of the lady Greene Sleeves.” Again, “Licenced unto Edward White, a ballad, beinge the Lady Greene Sleeves, answered to Jenkyn hir friend.” Again, in the same month and year: “Green Sleeves moralized to the Scripture, &c.” Again, to Edward White:

“Green Sleeves and countenance,

“In countenance is Green Sleeves.”

Again, “A New Northern Song of Green Sleeves, beginning,

“The bonniest lass in all the land.”

Again, in February 1580: “A Reprehension against Greene Shewes, by W. Elderton.” From a passage in the Loyal Subject, by B. and Fletcher, it should seem that the original was a wanton ditty:

“And set our credits to the tune of Greene Sleeves.”

But whatever the ballad was, it seems to have been very popular. August 1581, was entered at Stationers' Hall, “A new Ballad, entitled:

I trow, threw this whale, with so many tuns of oil in his belly, ashore at Windsor? How shall I be reveng'd on him? I think, the best way were to entertain him with hope, 'till the wicked fire of lust have melted him in his own grease.—Did you ever hear the like?

Mrs. Page. Letter for letter; but that the name of Page and Ford differs!—To thy great comfort in this mystery of ill opinions, here's the twin-brother of thy letter: but let thine inherit first; for, I protest, mine never shall. I warrant, he hath a thousand of these letters, writ with blank space for different names, (sure more) and these are of the second edition: He will print them out of doubt; for he cares not what he puts into the press, when he would put us two. I had rather be a giantess, and lie under mount Pelion. Well, I will find you twenty lascivious turtles, ere one chaste man.

Mrs. Ford. Why, this is the very same; the very hand, the very words: What doth he think of us?

Mrs. Page. Nay, I know not: It makes me almost ready to wrangle with mine own honesty. I'll entertain myself like one that I am not acquainted withal; for, sure, unless he knew some strain in “ Green sleeves is worn away,

“ Yellow sleeves come to decay,

“ Black sleeves I hold in despite,

“ But white sleeves is my delight.”

Mention of the same tune is made again in the fourth act of this play. STEEVENS.

— press, —] Press is used ambiguously, for a press to print, and a press to squeeze. JOHNSON.

— some strain in me, —] Thus the old copies. The modern editors read, “ some stain in me,” but, I think, unnecessarily. A similar expression occurs in The Winter's Tale:

“ With what encounter so uncurrent, have I

“ Strain'd to appear thus?”

And again in Timon:

“ — a noble nature

“ May catch a wretch.” STEEVENS.

me, that I know not myself, he would never have boarded me in this fury.

Mrs. Ford. Boarding, call you it? I'll be sure to keep him above deck.

Mrs. Page. So will I; if he come under my hatches, I'll never to sea again. "Let's be reveng'd on him: let's appoint him a meeting; give him a show of comfort in his suit; and lead him on with a fine baited delay, till he hath pawn'd his horses to mine Host of the Garter."

Mrs. Ford. Nay, I will consent to act any villainy against him, that may not sully the chariness of our honesty. Oh, that my husband saw this letter! it would give eternal food to his jealousy.

Mrs. Page. Why, look, where he comes; and my good man too: he's as far from jealousy, as I am from giving him cause; and that, I hope, is an unmeasurable distance.

Mrs. Ford. You are the happier woman.

Mrs. Page. Let's consult together against this greasy knight: Come hither. [They retire.]

Enter Ford with Pistol, Page with Nym.

Ford. Well, I hope, it be not so.

Pist. Hope is a curtail-dog in some affairs: Sir John affects thy wife.

Ford.

[—the chariness of our honesty.] i.e. the caution which ought to attend on it. STEEVENS.

"Oh, that my husband saw this letter!" Surely Mrs. Ford does not wish to excite the jealousy, of which she complains. I think we should read—Oh, if my husband, &c. and thus the copy, 1619: "Oh lord, if my husband should see the letter! i' faith, this would even give edge to his jealousy." STEEVENS.

[—curtail-dog—] That is, a dog that misses his game. The tail is counted necessary to the agility of a greyhound; and one method of disqualifying a dog, according to the forest laws, is to cut his tail, or make him a curtail. JOHNSON.

This allusion is common to the old writers. So in Mucedorus:

"I will not be made a curtail for no man's pleasure."

Ford. Why, Sir, my wife is not young.

Pist. He wooes both high and low, both rich and poor,

Both young and old, one with another, Ford;
He loves thy gally-mawfry; Ford, perpend.

Ford. Love my wife?

Pist. With liver burning hot: Prevent, or go thou,
Like Sir Actæon he, with Ring-wood at thy heels:—
O, odious is the name!

Ford. What name, Sir?

Pist. The horn, I say: Farewel.

Take heed; have open eye; for thieves do foot by night:

Take heed, ere summer comes, or cuckoo-birds do sing.—

7 Away, fir corporal Nym.—

Believe

A curtail-dog was the dog of an unqualify'd person, whole tail, by the laws of the forest, was cut off. So, in the Unknown Shepherd's complaint, in England's Helicon, 1614:

"My curtail-dog, that wont to have plaide," &c.

STEEVENS.

—gally-mawfry;] i. e. A medley. So in the Winter's Tale: "They have a dance, which the wenches say is a gally-mawfry of gambols." Pistol ludicrously uses it for a woman. Thus, in A Woman never vex'd, 1632:

"Let us show ourselves gallants or gally-mawfries."

STEEVENS.

—Ford, perpend.] This is perhaps a ridicule on a passage in the old comedy of Cambyfes:

"My sapient words I say perpend."

Again:

"My queen perpend what I pronounce."

Shakespeare has put the same word into the mouth of Polonius.

STEEVENS.

—cuckoo-birds do sing. —] Such is the reading of the folio, and the quarto 1630. The quartos 1602, and 1619 read—when cuckoo-birds appear. The modern editors—when cuckoo-birds sing. For this last reading I find no authority.

STEEVENS

7 Away, fir corporal Nym.—

Believe

Believe it, Page; he speaks sense. [Exit Pistol.]

Ford. I will be patient; I will find out this.

Nym. [Speaking to Page.] And this is true; I like not the humour of lying. He hath wrong'd me in some humours: I should have borne the humour'd letter to her; but 'I have a sword, and it shall bite upon my necessity. He loves your wife; there's the short and the long. My name is corporal Nym; I speak, and I avouch. 'Tis true:—my name is Nym, and Falstaff loves your wife.—Adieu! I love not the humour of bread and cheese; and there's the humour of it. Adieu, [Exit Nym.]

Believe it, Page; he speaks sense.] Nym, I believe, is out of place, and we should read thus:

Away, fir corporal.

Nym. Believe it, Page; he speaks sense. JOHNSON.

Perhaps Dr. Johnson is mistaken in his conjecture. He seems not to have been aware of the manner in which the author meant this scene should be represented. Ford and Pistol, Page and Nym, enter in pairs, each pair in separate conversation; and while Pistol is informing Ford of Falstaff's design upon his wife, Nym is, during that time, talking aside to Page, and giving information of the like plot against him.—When Pistol has finished, he calls out to Nym to come away; but seeing that he and Page are still in close debate, he goes off alone, first assuring Page, he may depend on the truth of Nym's story. Believe it, Page. Nym then proceeds to tell the remainder of his tale out aloud. And this is true &c.—A little further on in this scene, Ford says to Page, You heard what this knave (i. e. Pistol) told me. Page replies, Yes, and you heard what the other (i. e. Nym) told me. STEEVENS.

I have a sword, and it shall bite upon my necessity.—He loves your wife; &c.] This absurd passage may be pointed into sense. I have a sword, and it shall bite—upon my necessity, he loves your wife, &c.—Having said his sword should bite, he stops short, as was fitting: for he meant that it should bite upon the highway. And then turns to the subject of his conference, and swears, by his necessity, that Falstaff loved his wife.

WARBURTON.

I do not see the difficulty of this passage: no phrase is more common than—you may, upon a need, thus. Nym, to gain credit, says, that he is above the mean office of carrying love-letters; he has nobler means of living; he has a sword, and upon his necessity, that is, when his need drives him to unlawful expedients, his sword shall bite. JOHNSON.

Page. ⁹ The humour of it, quoth a'! here's a fellow frights humpour out of its wits.

Ford. I will seek out Falstaff.

Page. I never heard such a drawling, affecting rogue.

Ford. If I do find it, well.

Page. ¹ I will not believe such a Cataian, though
the

⁹ The humour of it, —] The following epigram, taken from an old collection without date, but apparently printed before the year 1600, will best account for Nym's frequent repetition of the word humour. Epig. 27.

Aske HUMORS what a feather he doth weare,

It is his humour (by the Lord) he'll sweare.

Or what he doth with such a horse-taile locke;

Or why upon a whore he spends his stocke?

He hath a humour doth determine so.

Why in the stop-throte fashion he doth goe,

With scarfe about his necke, hat without band?

It is his humour. Sweet sir, understand

What cause his purse is so extreame distrest

That oftentimes is scarcely penny-blest?

Only a humour. If you question why

His tongue is pe'er unfurnish'd with a lye?

It is his humour, too he doth protest.

Or why with sergeants he is so oppress,

That like to ghosts they haunt him ev'rie day?

A rascal humour doth not love to pay.

Object why bootes and spurres are still in season?

His humour answers: humour is his reason.

If you perceive his wits in wetting shrunke,

It cometh of a humour to be drunke.

When you behold his lookes pale, thin, and poore,

Th' occasion is, his humour and a whoore.

And every thing that he doth undertake,

It is a veine, for senceless humour's sake. STEEVENS.

¹ I will not believe such a Cataian, —] Mr. Theobald has here a pleasant note, as usual. "This is a piece of satire that did not want its force at the time of this play's appearing; though the history on which it is grounded is become obsolete." And then tells a long story of Martin Frobisher attempting the north-west passage, and bringing home a black stone, as he thought, full of gold ore: that it proved not so, and that therefore Cataians and Frobishers became by-words for vain boasters. — The whole is an idle dream. All the mystery of the term Cataian, for a liar, is only the priest o' the town commended him for a true man.

Ford.

only this. China was anciently called Cataia or Cathay, by the first adventurers that travelled thither; such as M. Paulo, and our Mandeville, who told such incredible wonders of this new discovered empire (in which they have not been outdone even by the Jesuits themselves, who followed them) that a notorious liar was usually called a Cataian. WARBURTON.

Mr. Theobald and Dr. Warburton have both told their stories with confidence, I am afraid, very disproportionate to any evidence that can be produced. That Cataian was a word of hatred or contempt is plain, but that it signified a boaster or a liar has not been proved. Sir Toby, in Twelfth Night, says of the Lady Olivia to her maid, "thy lady's a Cataian;" but there is no reason to think he means to call her liar. Besides, Page intends to give Ford a reason why Pistol should not be credited. He therefore does not say, I would not believe such a liar: for that he is a liar is yet to be made probable: but he says, I would not believe such a Cataian on any testimony of his veracity. That is, "This fellow has such an odd appearance, is so unlike a man civilized, and ~~though~~ the duties of life, that I cannot credit him." To be a foreigner was always in England, and I suppose every where else, a reason of dislike. So Pistol calls Sir Hugh in the first act, a mountain foreigner; that is, a fellow uneducated, and of gross behaviour; and again in his anger calls Bardolph, Hungarian night.

JOHNSON.

I believe that neither of the commentators is in the right, but am far from professing, with any great degree of confidence, that I am happier in my own explanation. It is remarkable, that in Shakespeare, this expression — a true man is always put in opposition (as it is in this instance) to — a thief. So in Hen. IV. Part I.

"—now the thieves have bound the true men."

The Chinese (anciently called Cataians) are said to be the most dextrous of all the nimble-finger'd tribe; and to this hour they deserve the same character. Pistol was known at Windsor to have had a hand in picking Slender's pocket, and therefore might be called a Cataian with propriety, if my explanation be admitted.

That by a Cataian some kind of *sharp*er was meant, I infer from the following passage in Love and Honour, a play by Sir W. Davenant, 1649:

"Hang him, bold Cataian, he indites finely,
"And will live as well by sending short epistles,
"Or by the sad whisper at your gamester's ear,
"When the great By is drawn,
"As any discreet gallant of them all."

From

Ford. 'Twas a good sensible fellow : Well.

Page. How now, Meg ?

Mrs. Page. Whither go you, George ?—Hark you.

Mrs. Ford. How now, sweet Frank ? why art thou melancholy ?

Ford. I melancholy ! I am not melancholy.—Get you home, go.

Mrs. Ford. Faith, thou hast some crotchets in thy head now.—Will you go, mistress Page ?

Mrs. Page. Have with you.—You'll come to dinner, George ?—Look, who comes yonder : she shall be our messenger to this paltry knight.

[Aside to Mrs. Ford.

Enter Mistress Quickly.

Mrs. Ford. Trust me, I thought on her : she'll fit it.

From the use Sir Toby Belch makes of the word, little can be inferred with any certainty. Sir Toby is drunk, calls Malvolio by the name of an old song, and talks, in short, nonsense. Cathania is mentioned in the Tamer Tamed, of B. and Fletcher :

“ I'll wish you in the Indies, or Cathania.”

The tricks of the Gataians are hinted at in one of the old bl. letter histories of that country ; and again, in a dramatic performance, called the Pedler's Prophecy, 1595 :

“ ——— in the east part of Inde,

“ Through seas and floods, they work all thievish.”

Mr. Malone observes, that in a book of Shakespeare's age, entitled, A brief Description of the whole World, “ — the people of China are (said to be) very politick and crafty, and in respect thereof contemning the wits of others ; using a proverb, That all other nations do see but with one eye, but they with two.”

Again, in the Treasury of Ancient and Modern Time, 1613, the Cathaians are described in the same manner : “ For myself, I condemn this custom as savage and brutish, and hold the Cathaians to be a very gross people, albeit they both say and believe, that the whole world beside them, doth see but with one eye, and they directly with both.” STEEVENS.

“ 'Twas a good sensible fellow :] This, and the two preceding speeches of Ford, are spoken to himself, and have no connection with the sentiments of Page, who is likewise making his comment on what had passed, without attention to Ford. STEEVENS.

Mrs.

Mrs. Page. You are come to see my daughter Anne?

Quic. Ay, forsooth ; And, I pray, how does good mistress Anne?

Mrs. Page. Go in with us, and see ; we have an hour's talk with you.

[Ex. Mrs. Page, Mrs. Ford, and Mrs. Quickly.]

Page. How now, master Ford?

Ford. You heard what this knave told me ; did you not?

Page. Yes ; And you heard what the other told me?

Ford. Do you think there is truth in them?

Page. Hang 'em, slaves ! I do not think the knight would offer it : but these, that accuse him in his intent towards our wives, are a yoke of his discarded men ; very rogues, now they be out of service.

Ford. Were they his men?

Page. Marry, were they.

Ford. I like it never the better for that.—Does he lie at the Garter?

Page. Ay, marry, does he. If he should intend his voyage towards my wife, I would turn her loose to him ; and what he gets more of her than sharp words, let it lie on my head.

Ford. I do not misdoubt my wife ; but I would be loth to turn them together : A man may be too confident : I would have nothing lie on my head : I cannot be thus satisfied.

Page. Look, where my ranting host of the Garter comes : there is either liquor in his pate, or money in his purse, when he looks so merrily.—How, now, mine host?

• • Very rogues, now they be out of service.] A rogue is a wanderer or vagabond, and, in its consequential signification, a cheat.

JOHNSON.

Enter

Enter Host, and Shallow.

Host. How, now, bully-rook? thou'rt a gentleman: cavalero-justice⁴, I say.

Shal. I follow, mine host, I follow.—Good even, and twenty, good master Page! Master Page, will you go with us? we have sport in hand.

Host. Tell him, cavalero-justice; tell him, bully-rook?

Shal. Sir, there is a fray to be fought, between sir Hugh the Welch priest, and Caius the French doctor.

Ford. Good mine host o' the Garter, a word with you.

Host. What say'st thou, bully-rook?

[They go a little aside.]

Shal. [To Page] Will you go with us to behold it? My merry host hath had the measuring of their weapons; and, I think, he hath appointed them contrary places: for, believe, me, I hear, the parson is no jester. Hark, I will tell you what our sport shall be.

Host. Hast thou no suit against my knight, my guest-cavalier?

Ford. None, I protest: but I'll give you a pottle of burnt sack to give me recourse to him, and tell him, my name is Brook, only for a jest.

Host. My hand, bully: thou shalt have egrefs and ⁴ —cavalero-justice,] So in The Stately Moral of three Ladies of London, 1590:

“Then know, Castilian cavaleros, this.”

There is a book printed in 1599, called, A Countercuffe given to Martin Junior; by the venturous, hardie, and renowned Pasquid of Englande, CAVALIERO. STEEVENS.

⁵ —and tell him, my name is Brook;—] Thus both the old quartos; and thus most certainly the poet wrote. We need no better evidence than the pun that Falstaff anon makes on the name, when Brook sends him some burnt sack.

Such Brooks are welcome to me, that overflow with such liquor. The players, in their editions, altered the name to Broom.

THEOBALD.

regrets ; said I well ⁶ ? and thy name shall be Brook :
It is a merry knight.—⁷ Will you go an-heirs ?

Shal. Have with you, mine host,

Page. I have heard, the Frenchman hath good skill in his rapier.

Shal. Tut, sir, I could have told you more : In these times you stand off distance, your passes, stoccado's, and I know not what : 'tis the heart, master Page ; 'tis here, 'tis here. I have seen the time, with my ⁸ long sword, I would have made you four tall fellows ⁹ skip like rats.

Host.

⁶ —said I well ?] The learned editor of the Canterbury Tales of Chaucer, in 4 vols 8vo, 1775, observes, that this phrase is given to the host in the Pardoner's Prologue :

“ Said I not wel ? I cannot speke in terme :” v. 12246.
and adds, “it may be sufficient with the other circumstances of general resemblance, to make us believe, that Shakspeare, when he drew that character, had not forgotten his Chaucer.” The same gentleman has since informed me, that the passage is not found in any of the ancient printed editions, but only in the MSS.

STEEVENS.

⁷ —Will you go AN-HEIRS ?] This nonsense is spoken to Shallow. We should read, Will you go on, HERES ? i. e. Will you go on, master ? Heris, an old Scotch word for master.

WARBURTON.

The merry Host has already saluted them separately by titles of distinction ; he therefore probably now addresses them collectively by a general one—Will you go on, heroes ? or, as probably —Will you go on, hearts ? He calls Dr. Caius Heart of Elder ; and adds, in a subsequent scene of this play, Farewell, my hearts.
Again, in the Mid-summer's Night Dream, Bottom says, “—Where are these hearts ?” My brave hearts, or my bold hearts, is a common word of encouragement. A heart of gold expresses the more soft and amiable qualities, the Mores aurei of Horace ; and a heart of oak it a frequent encomium of rugged honesty. Han-mer reads—Mynbeers. STEEVENS.

⁸ Will you go an-heirs ?] Perhaps we should read, Will you go and bear us ? So in the next page—“ I had rather bear them scold than fight.” MALONE.

⁹ —my long sword,—] Before the introduction of ra-piers, the swords in use were of an enormous length, and sometimes raised with both hands. Shallow, with an old man's vanity, censures the innovation by which lighter weapons were introduced,

Hof. Here, boys, here, here! shall we wag?

Page. Have with you:—I had rather hear them scold than fight. • [Exeunt Hof., Shallow, and Page.

Ford. Though Page be a secure fool, and stand so

roduced, tells what he could once have done with his long sword, and ridicules the terms and rules of the rapier. JOHNSON.

The two-handed sword is mentioned in the ancient Interlude of Nature, bl. l. no date:

“Somtyme he serveth me at borde,

“Somtyme he bereth my two-hand sword.”

See a note to the First Part of K. Hen. IV. act II. STEEVENS.

Carleton, in his Thankful Remembrance of God's Mercy, 1625, speaking of the treachery of one Rowland York, in betraying the town of Deventer to the Spaniards in 1587, says; “he was a Londoner, famous among the cutters in his time, for bringing in a new kind of fight—to run the point of a rapier into a man's body. This manner of fight he brought first into England, with great admiration of his audaciousness: when in England before that time, the use was, with little bucklers, and with broad swords, to strike and not to thrust; and it was accounted unmanly to strike under the girdle.” MALONE.

• ——— tall fellows ———] The older quartos read—tall fencers. See note 5. p. 272. STEEVENS.

• ——— and stand so firmly on his wife's frailty, ———] No, surely; Page stood tightly to the opinion of her honesty, and would not entertain a thought of her being frail. I have therefore ventured to substitute a word correspondent to the sense required; and one, which our poet frequently uses to signify conjugal faith.

THEOBALD.

——— stand so firmly on his wife's frailty, ———] Thus all the copies. But Mr. Theobald has no conception how any man could stand firmly on his wife's frailty. And why? Because he had no conception how he could stand upon it, without knowing what it was. But if I tell a stranger, that the bridge he is about to cross is rotten, and he believes it not, but will go on, may I not say, when I see him upon it, that he stands firmly on a rotten plank? Yet he has changed frailty for fealty, and the Oxford editor has followed him. But they took the phrase, to stand firmly on, to signify to insist upon; whereas it signifies to rest upon, which the character of a secure fool, given to him, shews. So that the common reading has an elegance that would be lost in the alteration.

WARBURTON.

To stand on any thing, does signify to insist on it. So in Heywood's Rape of Lucrece, 1630: “All captains, and stand so firmly on his wife's frailty, 'yet I cannot put off my opinion so easily: She was in his company at Page's house; and, what they made there, I know not. Well, I will look further into't: and I have a disguise to sound Falstaff: If I find her honest, I lose not my labour; if she be otherwise, 'tis labour well bestow'd.

[Exit.

S C E N E II.

The Garter inn.

Enter Falstaff and Pistol.

Fal. I will not lend thee a penny.

Pist. Why, then the world's mine oyster², which I with sword will open.— I will retort the sum in equipage.

stand upon the honesty of your wives." Again, in Warner's Albion's England, 1602., book 6. chap. 30:

"For stoutly on their honesties doe wylie harlots stand."

The jealous Ford is the speaker, and all chastity in women appears to him as frailty. He supposes Page therefore to insist on that virtue as steady, which he himself suspects to be without foundation. STEEVENS.

² — the world's mine oyster, &c.] Dr. Gray supposes Shakespeare to allude to an old proverb, " — — The mayor of Northampton opens oysters with his dagger." — i. e. to keep them at a sufficient distance from his nose, that town being fourscore miles from the sea. STEEVENS.

³ — I will retort the sum in equipage.] This is added from the old quarto of 1619, and means, I will pay you again in stolen goods. WARBURTON.

I rather believe he means, that he will pay him by waiting on him for nothing. So in Love's Pilgrimage, by B. and Fletcher:

"And boy, be you my guide,

"For I will make a full descent in equipage."

That equipage ever meant stolen goods, I am yet to learn.

STEEVENS

Dr. Warburton may be right; for I find equipage was one of the cant words of the time. In Davies' Papers Complaint, (a poem which has erroneously been ascribed to Donne) we have several of them:

"Embellish, blandishment, and equipage."

Which words, he tells us in the margin, overmuch savour of witless affectation. FARMER.

Fal.

Fal. Not a penny. I have been content, fir, you should lay my countenance to pawn: I have grated upon my good friends for three reprieves for you and your coach-fellow, Nym; or else you had look'd through the grate, like a geminy of baboons. I am damn'd in hell, for swearing to gentlemen my friends, you were good soldiers, and tall fellows: and when mistress Bridget⁶ lost the handle of her fan, I took't upon mine honour, thou hadst it not.

Pist.

* — your coach-fellow, Nym; —] Thus the old copies. Coach-fellow has an obvious meaning, but the modern editors read, couch-fellow. The following passage from B. Jonson's Cynthia's Revels, may justify the reading I have chosen: — 'Tis the swaggering coach-horse Anaides, that draws with him there." Again, in Monsieur D'Olve, 1606: "Are you he my Page here makes choice of to be his fellow coach-horse?" Again, in Every Woman in her humour, 1609:

"For wit, ye may be coach'd together."

Again, in 10th B. of Chapman's Translation of Homer:

"—their chariot horie, as they coach-fellows were."

STEEVENS.

5 — and tall fellows. —] A tall fellow, in the time of our author, meant, a stout, bold, or courageous person. In A Discourse on Usury, by Dr. Wilson, 1584, he says, "Here in England, he that can rob a man by the high-way, is called a tall fellow." Lord Bacon says, "that bishop Fox caused his castle of Norham to be fortified, and manned it likewise with a very great number of tall soldiers." In The Love of David and Bethsabe, 1599, Joab enters in triumph; and says—"Well done, tall soldiers," &c. So B. Jonson, in Every Man out of his Humour:

"Is he so tall a man?"

So likewise in Soliman and Perseda:

"Is this little desperate fellow gone?"

"Doubtless he is a very tall fellow." STEEVENS.

6 — lost the handle of her fan, —] It should be remembered, that fans, in our author's time, were more costly than they are at present, as well as of a different construction. They consisted of ostrich feathers, (or others of equal length and flexibility) which were stuck into handles. The richer sort of these were composed of gold, silver, or ivory of curious workmanship. One of them is mentioned in The Flaire, Com. 1610: "—she hath a fan with a short silver handle, about the length of a barber's syringe." Again, in Love and Honour, by sir W. Davenant, 1649: "All your plate, Pist. Didst thou not share? hadst thou not fifteen pence?

plate, Vasco, is the silver handle of your old prisoner's fan."

In the frontispiece to a play, called Englishmen for my Money, or A pleasant Comedy of a Woman will have her Will, 1616, is a portrait of a lady with one of these fans, which, after all, may prove the best commentary on the passage. The three other specimens are taken from the Habiti Antichi et Moderni di tutto il Mondo, published at Venice, 1598, from the drawings of Titian, and Cesare Vecelli, his brother. This fashion was perhaps imported from Italy, together with many others in the reign of king Henry VIII. if not in that of king Richard II.

STEEVENS.

Thus also Marston, in the Scourge of Villainie, lib. iii. sat. 8:

— Another he

"Her silver-handled fan would gladly be."

And in other places. And Bishop Hall, in his Satires, published 1597, lib. v. sat. 4:

"Whiles one piece pays her idle waiting-manne,

"Or boys a hood, or silver-handled fanne."

In the Sidney papers, published by Collins, a fan is presented to queen Elizabeth for a new year's gift, the handle of which was studded with diamonds. WARTON.

It appears from Marston's Satires, that the sum of 40*l.* was sometimes given for a fan in the time of queen Elizabeth.

MALONE.

Fal. Reason, you rogue, reason : Think't thou, I'll endanger my soul gratis ? At a word, hang no more about me, I am no gibbet for you :—go.—' A short knife and a thong,—to your manor of 'Pickt-hatch, go.—

' —A short knife and a thong:—] So Lear : " When cut-purses come not to thongs." WAREBURY.

Part of the employment given by Drayton, in The Mooncalf, to the Baboon, seems the same with this recommended by Falstaff :

" He like a gypsy oftentimes would go,
 " All kinds of gibberish be hath learn'd to know ;
 " And with a stick, a short string, and a noose,
 " Would show the people tricks at fast and loose."

Theobald has throng instead of thong. The latter seems right.

LANGTON.

Greene, in his Life of Ned Browne, 1592, says : " I had no other fence but my short knife, and a paite of purse strings."

STEEVENS.

See a note on Anthony and Cleopatra, that explains the trick of fast and loose. SIR J. HAWKINS.

' —Pickt-hatch, —] A noted place for thieves and pick-pockets. THEOBALD.

Pickt-hatch is frequently mentioned by contemporary writers. So, in B. Jonson's Every Man in his Humour :

" From the Bordello it might come as well,

" The Spital, or Pickt-hatch."

Again, in Woman's a Weather-cock, 1612 :

" Scratch faces, like a wild cat of Pickt-hatch."

Again, in Randolph's Mus's Looking-glass, 1638 :

" —the lordship of Turnbull to

" Which with my Pickt-hatch, Grange, and Shore-ditch farm &c."

Pickt-hatch was in Turnbull-street :

" —your whore doth live

" In Pickt-hatch, Turnbull-street."

Amends for Ladies, a Comedy by N. Field, 1639.

The derivation of the word Pickt-hatch may perhaps be discovered from the following passage in Cupid's Whirligig, 1630 :
 " —Set some pickes upon your hatch, and I pray, profess to keep a bawdy-house." Perhaps the unseasonable and obsequious interruptions of the gallants of that age, might render such a precaution necessary. So in Pericles P. of Tyre, 1609 : " —If in our youths we could pick up some pretty estate, 'twere not amiss to keep our door hatch'd, &c." STEEVENS.

This

go.—You'll not bear a letter for me, you rogue!—you stand upon your honour!—Why, thou unconfinable baseness, it is as much as I can do, to keep the terms of my honour precise. I, I, I myself sometimes leaving the fear of heaven on the left hand, and hiding mine honour in my necessity, am fain to shuffle, to hedge, and to lurch; and yet you, rogue, will ensconce your rags, your cat-a-mountain looks, your red-lattice phrases, and your bold-bearing oaths, under

This was a cant name of some part of the town noted for bawdy-houses; as appears from the following passage in Marston's Scourge for Villainie, lib. iii. sat. 11 :

“ — Looke, who you doth go ?

“ The meager lecher lewd Luxurio.—

“ No newe edition of drabbes come out,

“ But seene and allow'd by Luxurio's snout.

“ Did ever any man ere hear him talke

“ But of Pick-batch, or of some Shoreditch balke,

“ Aretine's filth &c.”

Sir T. H. says, that this was “ a noted harbour for thieves and pickpockets,” who certainly were proper companions for a man of Pistol's profession. But Falstaff here more immediately means to ridicule another of his friend's vices; and there is some humour in calling Pistol's favourite brothel, his major of Pickt-batch. Marston has another allusion to Pickt-batch or Pick-batch, which confirms this illustration :

“ — His old cynicke dad

“ Hath forc't them cleane forsake his Pickt-batch drab.”

Lib. i. sat. 3.

WARTON.

“ — ensconce your rags, &c.] A sconce is a petty fortification. To ensconce, therefore, is to protect as with a fort. The word occurs again in K. Hen. IV. Part I. STEEVENS.

“ — red-lattice phrases, —] Your ale-house conversation.”

JOHNSON.

Red lattice at the doors and windows, were formerly the external denotements of an ale-house. So, in A Fine Companion, one of Shackerley Marmion's plays: — “ A waterman's widow the sign of the red lattice in Southwark.” Again, in Arden of Feversham, 1592 :

“ — his sign pulled down, and his lattice borne away.”

Again, in the Miseries of enforced Marriage, 1607 :

“ — 'tis treason to the red lattice, enemy to the sign-post.”

Hence the present chequers. Perhaps the reader will express some under the shelter of your honour ! You will not do it, you ?

Pist. I do relent ; What wouldst thou more of man ?

Enter Robin.

Rob. Sir, here's a woman would speak with you.

Fal. Let her approach.

Enter Mistress Quickly.

Quic. Give your worship good-morrow.

Fol. Good-morrow, good wife.

Quic. Not so, an't please your worship.

Fal. Good maid, then.

Quic. I'll be sworn ; as my mother was ; the first hour I was born.

Fal. I do believe the swearer : What with me ?

Quic. Shall I vouchsafe your worship a word or two ?

Fal. Two thousand, fair woman ; and I'll vouchsafe thee the hearing.

Quic. There, is one mistress Ford, sir ;—I pray, come a little nearer this ways :—I myself dwell with master doctor Caius.

Fal. Well, on : Mistress Ford, you say,——

Quic. Your worship says very true : I pray your worship, come a little nearer this ways.

Fal. I warrant thee, nobody hears ;—mine own people, mine own people.

surprize, when he is told that shops, with the sign of the chequers, were common among the Romans. See a view of the left-hand street of Pompeii, (No. 9) presented by Sir William Hamilton (together with several others, equally curious,) to the Antiquary Society. STEEVENS.

² —your bold-beating oaths,——] We should read, bold-beating oaths, i. e. out-facing. WARBURTON.

A beating oath, is, I think, right ; so we now say, in low language, a thwacking or swinging thing. JOHNSON.

We might read——bull-baiting. STEEVENS.

Quic.

Quic. Are they so? Heaven bleſs them, and make them his ſervants!

Fal. Well: miſtreſs Ford;—what of her?

Quic. Why, ſir, ſhe's a good creature. Lord, lord! your worſhip's a wanton: Well, heaven forgive you, and all of us, I pray!

Fal. Miſtreſs Ford;—come, miſtreſs Ford,—

Quic. Marry, this is the ſhort and the long of it; you have brought her into ſuch a 'canaries, as 'tis wonderful. The beſt courtier of them all, when the court lay at Windſor, could never have brought her to ſuch a canary. Yet there has been knights, and lords, and gentlemen, with their coaches; I warrant you, coach after coach, letter after letter, gift after gift; ſinelling ſo ſweetly, (all muſk) and ſo ruſſing, I warrant you, in ſilk and gold; and in ſuch alligant terms; and in ſuch wine and ſugar of the beſt, and the faireſt, that would have won any woman's heart; and, I warrant you, they could never get an eye-wink of her.—I had myſelf twenty angels given me this morning: but I defy all angels, (in any ſuch fort as they ſay) but in the way of honeſty:—and, I warrant you, they could never get her ſo much as ſip on a cup with the proudeſt of them all: and yet there has been earls, nay, which is more, penſioners; but, I warrant you, all is one with her.

Fal.

³ —canaries, —] This is the name of a brisk light dance, and is therefore properly enough uſed in low language for any hurry or perturbation. JOHNSON.

So, Naſh, in Pierce Pennyleſs his Supplication, 1595, ſays: "A merchant's wife jets it as gingerly, as if ſhe were dancing the canaries:" and our author, in All's well, &c. "Make you dance canary." Again, in Decker's honeſt Whore, 1635: "At a place where your health danced the canaries." It is highly probable, however, that canaries is only a miſtake of Mrs. Quickly's for quandaries; and yet the Clown, in, As you like it, ſays, "we that are true lovers run into ſtrange capers." STEEVENS.

⁴ —earls, nay, which is more, penſioners; —] This may be illuſtrated by a paſſage in Gervafe Holles's Life of the Firſt Earl of Clare.

Fal. But what says she to me? be brief, my good she Mercury.

Quic. Marry, she hath receiv'd your letter; for the which she thanks you a thousand times: and she gives you to notify, that her husband will be absence from his house between ten and eleven.

Fal. Ten and eleven.

Quic. Ay, forsooth; and then you may come and see the picture, she says, that you wot of⁵;—master Ford, her husband, will be from home. Alas! the sweet woman leads an ill life with him; he's a very jealousy man; she leads a very⁶ frampold life with him, good heart.

Fal.

Clare. Biog. Brit. Art. HOLLES. "I have heard the earl of Clare say, that when he was pensioner to the queen, he did not know a worse man of the whole band than himself; and that all the world knew he had then an inheritance of 4000 l. a year."

TYRWHITT.

Barrett, in his Alvearie, or Quadruple Dictionary, 1580, says, that a pensioner was "a gentleman about his prince alwaie redie, with his speare." STEEVENS.

⁵ —you wot of;—] To wot is to know. Obsolete. So in K. Henry VIII. "—wot you what I found?" STEEVENS.

⁶ —frampold—] This word I have never seen elsewhere, except in Dr. Hacket's Life of Archbishop Williams, where a frampul man signifies a peevish troublesome fellow. JOHNSON.

In The Roaring Girl, a comedy, 1611; I meet with a word, which, though differently spelt, appears to be the same.

Lax. "Coachman.

Coach. "Anon, sir!

Lax. "Are we fitted with good phrampell jades?"

Ray, among his South and East country words, says, that frampald, or frampard, signifies fretful, peevish, cross, forward. As forward (he adds) comes from from, so may frampard.

Nash, in his Praise of the Red Herring, 1599, speaking of Leander, says: "the churlish frampold waves gave him his belly full of fish-broth."

So, in The Inner Temple Masque, by Middleton, 1619:—" 'tis so frampole, the puritans will never yield to it." So, in The Blind Beggar of Bethnal Green, by John Day: "I think the fellow's frampell," &c. So, in B. and Fletcher's Wit at several Weapons:

"Is Pompey crown so malapent, so frampel?"

Again,

Fal. Ten and eleven : Woman, commend me to her ; I will not fail her.

Quic. Why, you say well : But I have another messenger to your worship : Mistress Page has her hearty commendations to you too ;—and let me tell you in your ear, she's as fartuous a civil modest wife, and one (I tell you) that will not miss you morning nor evening prayer, as any is in Windsor, whoc'er be the other : and she bade me tell your worship, that her husband is seldom from home ; but, she hopes, there will come a time. I never knew a woman so dote upon a man ; surely, I think you have charms, la ; yes, in truth.

Fal. Not I, I assure thee ; setting the attraction of my good parts aside, I have no other charms :

Quic. Blessing on your heart for't !

Fal. But, I pray thee, tell me this : has Ford's wife, and Page's wife, acquainted each other how they love me ?

Quic. That were a jest, indeed !—they have not so little grace, I hope :—that were a trick, indeed ! But mistress Page would desire you ⁷ to send her your little page, of all loves ; her husband has a marvellous infection to the little page : and, truly, master Page is

Again, in Ben Jonson's Talk of a Tub :

“ ——— I pray thee grow not frampul now.”

Again, in The Isle of Gulls, 1633 :

“ Are you so frampall, you know not your own daughter ?”

STEEVENS.

⁷ ——— to send her your little page, of all loves : ———] Of all loves, is an adjuration only, and signifies no more, than if she had said, desires you to send him by all means.

It is used in Decker's Honest Whore, Part I. 1635 :—“ conjuring his wife, of all loves, to prepare cheer fitting,” &c. Again, in the old translation of Plautus's Menachmi, 1595 :—“ — Desire him, of all love, to come over quickly.” Again, in Asolastus, a comedy, 1529 : “ I pray thee, for all loves, be thou my mynde sens I am thyne.” Again, in Holinshed's Chronicle, p. 1064 : “ Mrs. Arden desired him of all loves, to come backe againe.”

STEEVENS.

an honest man. Never a wife in Windsor leads a better life than she does ; do what she will, say what she will, take all, pay all, go to bed when she list, rise when she list, all is as she will ; and, truly, she deserves it ; for if there be a kind woman in Windsor, she is one. You must send her your page ; no remedy.

Fal. Why, I will.

Quic. Nay, but do so then : and, look you, he may come and go between you both ; and, in any case, have a nay-word*, that you may know one another's mind, and the boy never need to understand any thing ; for 'tis not good that children should know any wickedness : old folks, you know, have discretion, as they say, and know the world.

Fal. Fare thee well : commend me to them both : there's my purse ; I am yet thy debtor.—Boy, go along with this woman.—This news distracts me !

[Exeunt Quickly and Robin.]

Pist. ° This pink is one of Cupid's carriers :—
Clap on more sails ; pursue ; up with your fights ;
Give fire ; she is my prize, or ocean whelm them all !

[Exit Pistol.]

Fal.

* — A nay-word, —] i. e. a watch-word. So in a subsequent scene : “ — We have a nay-word to know one another, &c.”
STEEVENS.

° In former editions,

This PUNK is one of Cupid's carriers :

Clap on more sails ; pursue ; up with your fights ;

Give fire ; she is my prize, —] This punk is one of Cupid's carriers, is a plausible reading, yet absurd on examination. For are not all punks Cupid's carriers ? Shakespeare certainly wrote :

This PINK is one of Cupid's carriers :

And then the sense is proper, and the metaphor, which is all the way taken from the marine, entire. A pink is a vessel of the small craft, employed as a carrier (and so called) for merchants. Fletcher uses the word in his Tamer Tamed :

“ This

Fal. Say'st thou so, old Jack? go thy ways; I'll make more of thy old body than I have done. Will they yet look after thee? Wilt thou, after the expence of so much money, be now a gainer? Good body, I thank thee: Let them say, 'tis grossly done, so it be fairly done, no matter.

" This PINK, this painted foist, this cockle-boat,

" To hang her fights out, and defy me, friends!

" A well known man of war."——

As to the word fights, both in the text and in the quotation, it was then, and, for ought I know, may be now, a common sea-term. Sir Richard Hawkins, in his voyages, p. 66, says: "For once we cleared her deck, and had we been able to have spared but a dozen men, doubtless we had done with her what we would; for she had no close FIGHTS," i. e. if I understand it right, no small arms. So that by fights is meant any manner of defence, either small arms or cannon. So, Dryden, in his tragedy of Amboyna:

" Up with your FIGHTS,

" And your nettings prepare, &c."

But, not considering this, I led the Oxford editor into a silly conjecture, which he has done me the honour of putting into his text, which is indeed a proper place for it:

" Up with YOND FRIGAT." WARBURTON.

So, in The Ladies Privilege, 1640: "These gentlemen know better to cut a caper than a cable, or board a pink in the Bordells, than a pinnace at sea." A small salmon is called a salmon-pink.

STEEVENS.

The quotation from Dryden might at least have raised a suspicion that fights were neither small arms, nor cannon. Fights and nettings are properly joined. Fights, I find, are cloths hung round the ship to conceal the men from the enemy, and close-fights are bulk-heads, or any other shelter that the fabrick of a ship affords.

JOHNSON.

So, in Heywood and Rowley's comedy, called Fortune by Land and Sea:—"display'd their ensigns, up with all their fights, their matches in their cocks," &c. So, in the Christian turned Turk, 1612: "Lace the netting, and let down the fights, make ready the shot, &c." Again, in the Fair Maid of the West, 1615:

" Then now up with your fights, and let your ensigns,

" Blest with St. George's cross, play with the winds."

Again, in B. and Fletcher's Valentinian:

" — while I were able to endure a tempest,

" And bear my fights out bravely, till my tackle

" Whistled i' th' wind"——

Enter

Enter Bardolph.

Bard. Sir John, there's one master Brook below would fain speak with you, and be acquainted with you; and hath sent your worship a morning's draught of sack.

Fal. Brook, is his name?

Bard. Ay, fir.

Fal. Call him in; [Exit Bardolph.] Such Brooks are welcome to me, that o'erflow such liquor. Ah! ha! mistress Ford and mistress Page, have I encompass'd you? 'go to; via!

Re-enter Bardolph, with Ford disguis'd.

Ford. Bless you, fir.

Fal. And you, fir: Would you speak with me?

Ford. I make bold, to press with so little preparation upon you.

Fal. You're welcome; What's your will? Give us leave, drawer. [Exit Bardolph.]

Ford. Sir, I am a gentleman that have spent much; my name is Brook.

Fal. Good master Brook, I desire more acquaintance of you.

Ford. Good fir John, I sue for yours: 'not to charge you; for I must let you understand, I think myself in better plight for a lender than you are: the

' — go to; via!'] This cant phrase of exultation is common in the old plays. So, in Blurt Master Constable:

"Via for fate! Fortune, lo! this is all." STEEVENS.

Markham uses this word as one of the vocal helps necessary for reviving a horse's spirits in galloping large rings, when he grows slothful. Hence this cant phrase (perhaps from the Italian, via) may be used on other occasions to quicken or pluck up courage.

TOLLET.

' — not to charge you; —'] That is, not with a purpose of putting you to expence, or being burthensome, JOHNSON.

which

which hath something embolden'd me to this unseason'd intrusion ; for they say, if money go before, all ways do lie open.

Fal. Money is a good soldier, sir, and will on.

Ford. Troth, and I have a bag of money here troubles me : if you will help me to bear it, sir John, take all, or half, for easing me of the carriage.

Fal. Sir, I know not how I may deserve to be your porter.

Ford. I will tell you, sir, if you will give me the hearing.

Fal. Speak, good master Brook ; I shall be glad to be your servant.

Ford. Sir, I hear you are a scholar,—I will be brief with you ;—and you have been a man long known to me, though I had never so good means, as desire, to make myself acquainted with you. I shall discover a thing to you, wherein I must very much lay open mine own imperfection : but, good sir John, as you have one eye upon my follies, as you hear them unfolded, turn another into the register of your own ; that I may pass with a reproof the easier, sith³ you yourself know, how easy it is to be such an offender.

Fal. Very well, sir ; proceed.

Ford. There is a gentlewoman in this town, her husband's name is Ford.

Fal. Well, sir.

Ford. I have long lov'd her, and I protest to you, bestow'd much on her ; follow'd her with a doting observance ; engross'd opportunities to meet her ; see'd every slight occasion, that could but niggardly give me sight of her ; not only bought many presents to give her, but have given largely to many, to know what she would have given : briefly, I have pursued her, as love hath pursued me ; which hath been, on the wing of all occasions. But whatsoever I have merited, either in my mind, or in my means, need⁴, I am sure, I have received none; unless experience be a jewel; that I have purchas'd at an infinite rate; and that hath taught me to say this:

³ —sith—] i. e. Since. STEEVENS.

*Love like a shadow flies, when substance love pursues;
Pursuing that that flies, and flying what pursues.*

Fal. Have you receiv'd no promise of satisfaction at her hands?

Ford. Never.

Fal. Have you importun'd her to such a purpose?

Ford. Never.

Fal. Of what quality was your love then?

Ford. Like a fair house, built upon another man's ground; so that I have lost my edifice, by mistaking the place where I erected it.

Fal. To what purpose have you unfolded this to me?

Ford. When I have told you that, I have told you all. Some say, that, though she appear honest to me, yet, in other places, she enlargeth her mirth so far, that there is shrewd construction made of her. Now, sir John, here is the heart of my purpose: You are a gentleman of excellent breeding, admirable discourse, of great admittance⁵, authentic in your place and person, generally allow'd⁶ for your many war-like, court-like, and learned preparations.

Fal. O sir!

Ford. Believe it, for you know it:—There is money; spend it, spend it; spend more; spend all I have; only give me so much of your time in exchange of it,

⁴ ——— need, ———] i. e. reward. So Spenser:

“A rosy garland was the victor's need.” STEEVENS.

⁵ ——— of great admittance, ———] i. e. admitted into all, or the greatest companies. STEEVENS.

⁶ ——— generally allowed ———] Allowed is approved. So in K. Lear:

“——— if your sweet sway

“Allow obedience, &c.” STEEVENS.

as to lay an amiable siege to the honesty of this Ford's wife : use your art of wooing, win her to consent to you ; if any man may, you may as soon as any.

Fal. Would it apply well to the vehemence of your affection, that I should win what you would enjoy ? methinks, you prescribe to yourself very preposterously.

Ford. O, understand my drift ! she dwells so securely on the excellency of her honour, that the folly of my soul dares not present itself ; she is too bright to be look'd against. Now, could I come to her with any detection in my hand, my desires had ^{an} instance and argument to commend themselves ; I could drive her then from the ward of her purity^s, her reputation, her marriage vow, and a thousand other her defences, which now are too too strongly embattled against me : What say you to't, fir John ?

Fal. Master Brook, I will first make bold with your money ; next, give me your hand ; and last, as I am a gentleman, you shall, if you will, enjoy Ford's wife.

Ford. O good fir !

Fal. Master Brook, I say you shall.

Ford. Want no money, fir John ; you shall want none.

Fal. Want no mistress Ford, master Brook, you shall want none. I shall be with her (I may tell you) by her own appointment ; even as you came in to me, her assistant, or go-between, parted from me : I say, I shall be with her between ten and eleven ; for at that time the jealous rascally knave, her husband, will be forth. Come you to me at night ; you shall know how I speed.

Ford. I am blest in your acquaintance. Do you know Ford, fir ?

— ¹ — instance and argument—] Instance is example. JOHNSON.

² — the ward of her purity,—] i. e. The defence of it. STEEVENS.

Fal. Hang him, poor cuckoldly knave! I know him not:—yet I wrong him to call him poor; they say, the jealous wittily knave hath masses of money; for the which, his wife seems to me well-favour'd. I will use her as the key of the cuckoldly rogue's coffer; and there's my harvest-home.

Ford. I would you knew Ford, sir; that you might avoid him, if you saw him.

Fal. Hang him, mechanical salt-butter rogue! I will stare him out of his wits; I will awe him with my cudgel; it shall hang like a meteor o'er the cuckold's horns: master Brook, thou shalt know, I will predominate over the peasant; and thou shalt lye with his wife.—Come to me soon at night:—Ford's a knave, and I will aggravate his stile; thou, master Brook, shalt know him for knave and cuckold:—come to me soon at night. [Exit.

Ford. What a damn'd Epicurean rascal is this!—My heart is ready to crack with impatience.—Who says, this is improvident jealousy? my wife hath sent to him, the hour is fix'd, the match is made: Would any man have thought this?—See the hell of having a false woman! my bed shall be abus'd, my coffers ransack'd, my reputation gnawn at; and I shall not only receive this villainous wrong, but stand under the adoption of abominable terms, and by him that does me this wrong. Terms! names!—Amaimon! sounds well; —and I will aggravate his stile:—] Stile is a phrase from the herald's office. Falstaff means, that he will add more titles to those he already enjoys. So, in Heywood's Golden Age, 1611:

“I will create lord of a greater style.”

Again, in Spenser's Faery Queen, b. v. c. 2.

“As to abandon that which doth contain

“Your honour's stile, that is, your warlike shield.”

STEEVENS.

—Amaimon—Barbasen,—] The reader who is curious to know any particulars concerning these demons, may find them in Reginald Scott's Inventarie of the Names, Shapes, Powers, Government, and Effects of Devils and Spirits, of their several Seigneries well; Lucifer, well; Barbasen, well; yet they are devils' additions, the names of fiends: but cuckold! wittol! cuckold! the devil himself hath not such a name. Page is an ass, a secure ass; he will trust his wife, he will not be jealous: I will rather trust a Fleming with my butter, parson Hugh the Welchman with my cheese, an Irishman with my aqua vite bottle, or a thief to walk my ambling gelding, than my wife with herself: then she plots, then she ruminates, then she devises; and what they think in their hearts they may effect, they will break their hearts but they will effect. Heaven be prais'd for my jealousy!—Eleven o'clock the hour;—I will prevent this, detect my wife, be reveng'd on Falstaff, and laugh at Page: I will about it;—better three hours too soon, than a minute too late. Fie, fie, fie! cuckold! cuckold! cuckold!

[Exit.]

ories and Degrees, a strange Discourse worth the reading, p. 377. &c. From hence it appears that Amaimon was king of the East, and Barbatos a great count or earle. STEEVENS.

² —An Irishman with my aqua vite bottle,——] Heywood, in his Challenge for Beauty, 1636, mentions the love of aqua vite as characteristic of the Irish:

“The Briton he metheglin quaffs,

“The Irish, aqua vite.”

By aqua vite, was, I believe understood, not brandy, but usquebaugh, for which the Irish have been long celebrated. So, in Marston's Male content, 1504:

“The Dutchman for a drunkard,

“The Dane for golden locks

“The Irishman for usquebaugh,

“The Frenchman for——” MALONE.

Eleven o'clock—] Ford should rather have said ten o'clock: the time was between ten and eleven; and his impatient suspicion was not likely to stay beyond the time. JOHNSON.

SCENE

SCENE III.

Windfor park.Enter Caius and Rugby.Caius. Jack Rugby !Rug. Sir.Caius. Vat is de clock, Jack ?Rug. 'Tis past the hour, fir, that fir Hugh promis'd to meet.Caius. By gar, he has save his soul, dat he is no come ; he has pray his Pible vell, dat he is no come : by gar, Jack Rugby, he is dead already, if he be come.Rug. He is wise, fir ; he knew, your worship would kill him, if he came.Caius. By gar, de herring is no dead, so as I vill kill him. Take your rapier, Jack ; I vill tell you how I vill kill him.Rug. Alas, fir, I cannot fence.Caius. Villan-a, take your rapier.Rug. Forbear ; here's company.Enter Host, Shallow, Slender, and Page.Host. 'Bless thee, bully doctor.Shal. 'Save you, master doctor Caius.Page. Now, good master doctor !Slen. Give you good-morrow, fir.Caius. Vat be all you, one, two, tree, four, come for ?Host. To see thee fight, to see thee-foin⁴, to see thee

⁴ ——— to see the foin, ———] To foin, I believe, was the ancient term for making a thrust in fencing, or tilting. So in The wife Woman of Hogsdon, 1638 :

“ I had my wards, and foins, and quarter blows.”

Again,

thou traverse, to see thee here, to see thee there; as for thou pass the punts, my flock, my reverie, my distance, thy mantle, is he dead, my Remondino?
he dead, my Francisco? he, bully! What say'st Moulapais? my Gales? my heart of elder? he is he dead, bully? Stale? is he dead?

Cains. By gar, he is 'or coward Jack, priest of the world; he is not shew his face.

Hob. Thou art a Castilian king, Urinal! Hector of Greece, my boy!

Cains.

in the Devil's Chamber, 1667:

Should I pass my dwelling

Should I pass the time upon me thus,

Here will I take him."

Spenser, in his Fairy Queen, often uses the word foin. So in
h. ii. c. 8:

"And strook and foin'd and foin'd outrageously."

Again, in Holmes: p. 813: "Full six foins with handspears, &c." STEEVENS.

thy foin, — } Stale is a corruption of Aradia, from which language the technical terms that follow, are likewise adopted. STEEVENS.

— my heart of elder? — } It should be remember'd, to make this joke rell, that the elder tree has no heart. I suppose this expression was made use of in opposition to the common one, heart of oak. STEEVENS.

— bully Stale? — } The reason why Cains is called bully Stale, and afterwards Cains, must be sufficiently obvious to every reader, and especially to those whose credulity and weakness have enrolled them among the patients of the greatest German empiric, who calls himself Doktor Alexander Mayerbach.

STEEVENS.

— Castilian — } Sir T. Hanmer reads Castilian, as used corruptedly for Cour de lion, in 1608.

Castilian and Eliphan, like Canaan, appear in our author's time to have been cant terms. I have met with them in more than one of the old comedies. So, in a description of the Armad introduced in the Stately Manual of the Three Ladies of London, 1590:

"To carry as it were a careless regard"

"Of these Castilians, and their accustomed bravado."

Again:—"To parly with the proud Castilian."

I suppose Castilian was the cant term for Stale in general.

STEEVENS.

"Thou art a Castilian king, Urinal!" quoth mine host to Dr.
Cains. I believe this was a popular hur upon the Spaniards, who were

Caius. I pray you bear witness that me have stay six or seven, two, tree hours for him, and he is no come.

Shal. He is the wiser man, master doctor : he is a curer of souls, and you a curer of bodies ; if you should fight, you go against the hair⁹ of your professions : is it not true, master Page ?

Page. Master Shallow, you have yourself been a great fighter, though now a man of peace.

Shal. Body-kins, master Page, though I now be old, and of the peace, if I see a sword out, my finger itches to make one : though we are justices, and doctors, and churchmen, master Page, we have some salt of our youth in us ; we are the sons of women, master Page.

Page. 'Tis true, master Shallow.

Shal. It will be found so, master Page. Master doctor Caius, I am come to fetch you home. I am sworn of the peace : you have shew'd yourself a wise physician, and Sir Hugh hath shewn himself a wise were held in great contempt after the business of the Armada. Thus we have a Treatise Paraneetical, wherein is showed the right way to resist the Castilian king : and a sonnet, prefixed to Lea's Answer to the Untruths published in Spain, in glorie of their supposed Victory achieved against our English Navie, begins :

"Thou fond Castilian king!" and so in other places.

FARMER.

Mr. Farmer's observation is just. Don Philip the Second, affected the title of King of Spain, but the realms of Spain would not agree to it, and only styled him King of Cajun, and Leon, &c. and so he wrote himself. His cruelty and ambitious views upon other states, rendered him universally detested. The Castilians, Castilian became opprobrious. I have extracted this note from an old pamphlet, called The Spanish Pilgrims, which I have reason to suppose is the same discourse with the Treatise Paraneetical, mentioned by Dr. Farmer. TOLLET.

— against the hair &c.] This phrase is proverbial, and is taken from stroking the hair of animals a contrary way to that in which it grows. — We now say against the grain. STEVENS.

and

and patient churchman : you must go with me, master doctor.

Host. Pardon, guest justice :—A word, monsieur mock-water.

Caius. Mock-vater ! vat is dat ?

Host. Mock-water, in our English tongue, is valour, bully.

Caius. By gar, then I have as much mock-vater as de Englishman :—Scurvy-jack-dog-priest ! by gar, me vill cut his ears.

Host. He will clapper-claw thee tightly, bully.

Caius. Clapper-de-claw ! vat is dat ?

Host. That is, he will make thee amends.

Caius. By gar, me do look, he shall clapper-de-claw me ; for, by gar, me vill have it.

Host. And I will provoke him to't, or let him wag.

Caius. Me tank you for dat.

Host. And moreover, bully,—But first, master guest, and master Page, and eke cavalero Slender, go you through the town to Frogmore. [Aside to them.]

Page. Sir Hugh is there, is he ?

Host. He is there : see what humour he is in ; and I will bring the doctor about the fields : will it do well ?

Shal. We will do it.

All. Adieu, good master doctor.

[Exeunt Page, Shallow, and Slender.]

—mock-water.] The host means, I believe, to reflect on the inspection of urine, which made a considerable part of practical physic in that time ; yet I do not well see the meaning of mock-water. JOHNSON.

Perhaps by mock-water is meant—counterfeit. The water of a gein is a technical term. So in Timon, act i. sc. i. “—here is a water, look you.” Mock-water may therefore signify a thing of a counterfeit lustre. To mock, however, in Antony and Cleopatra, undoubtedly signifies to play with. Shakespeare may therefore chuse to represent Caius as one to whom a wrinal was a play-thing.

STEVENS.

Caius. By gar, me vill kill de priest; for he speak for a jack-an-ape to Anne Page.

Hof. Let him die; but, first, sheath thy impatience; throw cold water on thy choler: go about the fields with me through Frogmore; I will bring thee where mistress Anne Page is, at a farm-house a feasting; and thou shalt woo her: ² Cry'd game, said I well?

Caius.

² In old editions,

— I will bring thee where Anne Page is, at a farm-house a feasting; and thou shalt woo her: CRY'D GAME, said I well? [Mr. Theobald alters this nonsense to try'd game; that is, to possession of a worse complexion. Shakespeare wrote and pointed thus, CRY AIM, said I well? i. e. consent to it, approve of it. Have not I made a good proposal? for to cry aim signifies to consent to, or approve of any thing. So again in this play: And to what violent proceedings all my neighbours shall CRY AIM, i. e. approve them. And again, in King John, act II. sc. ii:

“It ill becomes this presence to CRY AIM

“To these ill-tuned repetitions.”

i. e. to approve of, or encourage them. The phrase was taken, originally, from archery. When any one had challenged another to shoot at the butts, (the perpetual diversion, as well as exercise, of that time) the standers-by used to say one to the other, Cry aim, i. e. accept the challenge. Thus Beaumont and Fletcher, in The Fair Maid of the Inn, act V. make the Duke say:

“— must I cry AIME

“To this unheard of insolence?”

i. e. encourage it, and agree to the request of the duel, which one of his subjects had insolently demanded against the other. — But here it is remarkable, that the senseless editors, not knowing what to make of the phrase, Cry aim, read it thus:

“— must I cry AI-ME,” as if it was a note of interjection. So again, Massinger, in his Guardian:

“I will CRY AIM, and in another room

“Determining of my vengeance”

And again, in his Rengado:

“— to play the pander

“To the viceroy's loose embraces, and CRY AIM,

“While he by force or flattery”

But the Oxford editor transforms it to Cock o' the Game; and his improvements of Shakespeare's language abound with these modern elegancies of speech, such as myabeers, dull-baitings, &c.

WARBURTON.

Dr.

Caius. By gar, me, tank you for dat : by gar, I love you ; and I shall procure a you de good guest /

Dr. Warburton is right in his explanation of cry aim, and in supposing, that the phrase was taken from archery ; but is certainly wrong in the particular practice which he assigns for the original of it. It seems to have been the office of the aim-crier, to give notice to the archer when he was within a proper distance of his mark, or in a direct line with it, and to point out why he failed to strike it. So, in All's lost by Lust, 1633 :

“ He gives me aim, I am three bows too short ;

“ I’ll come up nearer next time.”

Again, in Vittoria Corombona, 1612 :

“ I’ll give aim to you,

“ And tell how near you shoot.”

Again, in the Spanish Gipsie, by Rowley and Middleton, 1653 :

“ Though I am no great mark in respect of a huge butt, yet I can tell you, great bobbers have shot at me, and shot golden arrows ; but I myself gave aim thus :—wide, four bows ; short, three and a half, &c.” Again, in Green’s Tu Quoque : (no date)

“ We’ll stand by, and give aim, and holo if you hit the clout.”

Again, in Jarvis Markham’s English Arcadia, 1607 : “ Thou smiling aim-crier at princes’ fall.” Again, ibid. “—while her own creatures, like aim-criers, beheld her mischance with nothing but lip-pity.” In Ames’s Typographical Antiquities, p. 402, a book is mentioned, called “Ayme for Finishe Archers, or an Alphabetical Table of the name of every Mark in the same Fields, with their true Distances, both by the Map and the Dimension of the Line, &c. 1594.” Shakespeare uses the phrase again in the Two Gentlemen of Verona, scene the last, where it undoubtedly means to encourage :

“ Behold her that gave aim to all thy vows.”

So, in The Passions, by W. Smith, 1615 :

“ Shame to us all if we give aim to that.”

So, in the Remenger’s Tragedy, 1608 :

“ A mother to give aim to her own daughter !”

The original and literal meaning of this expression, may be ascertained from some of the foregoing examples, and its figurative one from the rest ; for as Dr. Warburton observes, it can mean nothing in these later instances, but to consent to, approve, or encourage. — It is not, however, the reading of Shakespeare in the passage before us, and therefore, we must strive to produce some sense from the words which we find there—cry’d game.

We yet say, in colloquial language, that such a one is—game—or game to the back. There is surely no need of blaming Theobald’s emendation with such severity. Cry’d game, might mean, de earl, de knight, de lords, de gentlemen, my patients.

Host. For the which, I will be thy adversary toward Anne Page; said I well?

Caius. By gar, 'tis good; vell said.

Host. Let us wag then.

Caius. Come at my heels. Jack Ruobv. Al Exeunt.

ACT III. SCENE I.

Frogmore.

Enter Evans and Simple.

Eva. I pray you now, good master Slender's serving-man, and friend Simple by your name, which way have you looked for master Caius, that calls himself Doctor of Physick?

in those days—a profess'd buck, one who was as well known by the report of his gallantry, as he could have been by proclamation. Thus, in Troilus and Cressida:

“Oh whose bright crest, fame, with her loud’st O yes,

“Cries, this is he.”

Again, in All’s well that ends well, act II. sc. i:

“—— find what you seek,

“That fame may cry you loud.”

Again, in Ford’s Lover’s Melancholy, 1629:

“A gull, an arrant gull by proclamation

Again, in King Lear: “—— A proclaim’d prize.” Again, in Troilus and Cressida:

“Thou art proclaim’d a fool, I think.”

Cock of the game, however, is not, as Dr. Warburton pronounces it, a modern elegance of speech, for it is found in Warner’s Albions England, 1602: b. xii. c. 74. “This cock of game, and (as might seeme) this hen of that same feather.” Again, in the Martial Maid, by B. and Fletcher:

“Oh craven chicken of a cock o’ th’ game.”

And in many other places. STEEVE.

Simp. Marry, fir, ' the Pitty-wary, the Park-ward, every way ; old Windfor way, and every way but the town way.

Eva. I most feheemently desire you, you will also look that way.

Sim. I will, fir.

Eva. 'Pless my soul ! how full of cholers I am, and trempling of mind !—I shall be glad, if he have deceiv'd me : how melancholies I am !—I will knog his urinals about his knave's costard, when I have good opportunities for the 'ork :—'pless my soul !

[Sings.

 By shallow rivers, to whose falls
Melodious birds sing madrigals ;
There will we make our beds of roses,
And a thousand vragrant posies.*

By shallow—

'Mercy

⁵ —the Pitty-wary, —] The old editions read, the Pittic-ward, the modern editors the Pitty-wary. There is now no place that answers to either name at Windsor. The author might possibly have written the City-ward, i. e. towards London. Petty-ward might, however, signify some small district in the town which is now forgotten. STEEVENS.

⁴ By shallow rivers, &c.] This is part of a beautiful little poem of the author's ; which poem, and the answer to it, the reader will not be displeased to find here.

The Passionate Shepherd to his Love.

Come live with me, and be my love,
And we will all the pleasures prove
That hills and vallies, Dale and field,
And all the craggy mountains yield.
There will we sit upon the rocks,
And see the shepherds feed their flocks,
By shallow rivers, by whose falls
Melodious birds sing madrigals :
There will I make thee beds of roses
With a thousand fragrant posies,
A cap of flowers, and a kirtle
Imbroider'd all with leaves of myrtle ;

'Mercy on me! I have a great dispositions to cry.

Melodious birds sing madrigals; —

When as I sat in Babylon —

And a thousand vagrant posies.

By shallow —

Simp.

A gown made of the finest wool,
Which from our pretty lambs we pull;
Fair lined slippers for the cold,
With buckles of the purest gold;
A belt of straw, and ivy buds,
With coral clasps, and amber studs:
And if these pleasures may thee move,
Come live with me, and be my love.
Thy silver dishes for thy meat,
As precious as the gods do eat,
Shall on an ivory table be
Prepar'd each day for thee and me.
The shepherd swains shall dance and sing,
For thy delight each May morning:
If these delights thy mind may move*,
Then live with me, and be my love.

The Nymph's Reply to the Shepherd.

If that the world and love were young,
And truth in every shepherd's tongue,
These pretty pleasures might me move
To live with thee, and be thy love.
But time drives flocks from field to fold,
When rivers rage, and rocks grow cold,
And Philomel becometh dumb,
And all complain of cares to come:
The flowers do fade, and wanton fields
To wayward winter reckoning yields:
A honey tongue, a heart of gall,
Is fancy's spring, but sorrow's fall.
Thy gowns, thy shoes, thy beds of roses,
Thy cap, thy kirtle, and thy posies,
Soon break, soon wither, soon forgotten,
In folly ripe, in reason rotten.
Thy belt of straw, and ivy buds,
Thy coral clasps, and amber studs

All

* The conclusion of this and the following poem, seem to have furnished Milton with the hint for the last lines both of his Adieu and Penseroso.

Simp. Yonder he is coming, this way, sir Hugh.

Eva. He's welcome:—

By shallow rivers, to whose falls—

Heaven prosper the right!—What weapons is he?

Simp. No weapons, sir: There comes my master, master Shallow, and another gentleman from Frogmore, over the stile; this way.

Eva.

All these in me no means can move
To come to thee, and be thy love.
What should we talk of dainties then,
Of better meat than's fit for men?
These are but vain? that's only good
Which God hath bless'd, and sent for food.
But could youth last, and love still breed,
Had joys no date, and age no need;
Then these delights my mind might move
To live with thee, and be thy love.

These two poems, which Dr. Warburton gives to Shakespeare, are, by writers nearer that time, disposed of, one to Marlow, the other to Raleigh. They are read in different copies with great variations. JOHNSON.

In England's Helicon, a collection of live-verses printed in Shakespeare's life-time, viz. in 1600, the first of them is given to Marlow, the second to a person unknown; and Dr. Percy, in the first volume of his Reliques of Ancient English Poetry, observes, that there is good reason to believe that (not Shakespeare, but) Christopher Marlow wrote the song, and sir Walter Raleigh the Nymph's Reply: for so we are positively assured by Isaac Walton, a writer of some credit, who has inserted them both in his Compleat Angler, under the character of "That smooth song which was made by Kit Marlow, now at least fifty years ago; and an answer to it, which was made by sir Walter Raleigh in his younger days Old fashioned poetry, but choicely good." See the Reliques, &c. vol. I. p. 218, 221, third edit.

In Shakespeare's sonnets, printed by Jaggard, 1599, this poem is attributed to Shakespeare. Mr. Malone, however, observes, that "What seems to ascertain it to be Marlowe's, is, that one of the lines is found (and not as a quotation) in a play of his—The Jew of Malta; which, though not printed till 1633, must have been written before 1593, as he died in that year."

"Thou in those groves, by Dis above,

"Shalt live with me, and be my love." STEEVENS.

Eva. Pray you, give me my gown; or else keep it in your arms.

Enter Page, Shallow, and Slender.

Shal. How now, master parson? Good-morrow, good fir Hugh. Keep a gamester from the dite, and a good student from his book, and it is wonderful.

Slen. Ah sweet Anne Page!

Page. Save you, good fir Hugh!

Eva. 'Plefs you from his mercy fake, all of you!

Shal. What! the sword and the word! do you study them both, master parson?

The tune to which the former was sung, I have lately discovered in a MS. as old as Shakespeare's time, and it is as follows:

Come live with me and be my love, and we will all the plea-sures prove that hills and val-lies, dale and field, and all the crag-gy moun-tains yield.

Sir J. HAWKINS.

Page.

Page. And youthful still, in your doublet and hose, this raw rheumatick day?

Eva. There is reasons and causes for it.

Page. We are come to you, to do a good office, master parson.

Eva. Fery well: What is it?

Page. Yonder is a most reverend gentleman, who belike, having receiv'd wrong by some person, is at most odds with his own gravity and patience, that ever you saw.

Shal. I have liv'd fourscore years, and upward; I never heard a man of his place, gravity, and learning, so wide of his own respect.

Eva. What is he?

Page. I think you know him; master doctor Caius, the renowned French physician.

Eva. Got's will, and his passion o' my heart! I had as lief you would tell me of a mess of porridge.

Page. Why?

Eva. He has no more knowledge in Hibocrates and Galen,—and he is a knave, besides; a cowardly knave, as you would desires to be acquainted withal.

Page. I warrant you, he's the man should fight with him.

Shen. O, sweet Anne Page!

Enter Host, Caius, and Rugby.

Shal. It appears so, by his weapons:—Keep them asunder;—here comes doctor Caius.

Page. Nay, good master parson, keep in your weapon.

Shal. So do you, good master doctor.

Host. Disarm them, and let them question; let them keep their limbs whole, and hack our English.

Caius. I pray you, let-a me speak a word vit your ear: Verefore will you not meet-a me?

Eva. Pray you, use your patience: In good time.

Caius.

Caius. By gar, you are de coward, de Jack dog, John ape.

Eva. Pray you, let us not be laughing-stogs to other men's humours; I desire you in friendship, and will one way or other make you amends:—I will knog your urinals about your knave's cogs-combs, for missing your meetings and appointments.

Caius. Diable!—Jack Rugby,—mine Host de Jar-terre, have I not stay for him, to kill him? have I not, at de place I did appoint?

Eva. As I am a christians foul, now, look you, this is the place appointed; I'll be judgment by mine host of the Garter.

Host. Peace; I say, Gallia and Gaul, French and Welch's, foul-curer and body-curer.

Caius. Ay, dat is very good! excellent!

Host. Peace, I say; hear mine host of the Garter. Am I politick? am I subtle? am I a Machiavel? Shall I lose my doctor? no; he gives me the potions, and the motions. Shall I lose my parson? my priest? my sir Hugh? no; he gives me the pro-verbs and the no-verbs.—Give me thy hand, terrestrial; so:—Give me thy hand, celestial; so.—Boys of art, I have deceiv'd you both; I have directed you to wrong places: your hearts are mighty, your skins are whole, and let burnt sack be the issue.—Come, lay their swords to pawn:—Follow me, lad of peace; follow, follow, follow.

Shal. Trust me, a mad host.—Follow, gentlemen, follow.

Slen. O, sweet Anne Page!

[Exeunt Shal. Slen. Page, and Host.]

^s Peace, I say, Gallia and Gaul, French and Welch,—} Sir Thomas Hanmer reads Gallia and Wallia: but it is objected that Wallia is not easily corrupted into Gaul. Possibly the word was written Guallia. FARMER.

Thus, in K. Hen. VI. Gualtier for Walter. STEEVENS.

Caius..

Caius. Ha ! do I perceive dat ? have you make-a de sot of us ? ha, ha !

Eva. This is well ; he has made us his vlouting-rog.—I desire you, that we may be friends ; and let us knog our prains together, to be revenge on this same ° scald, scurvy, cogging companion, the host of the Garter.

Caius. By gar, vit all my heart ; he promise to bring me vère is Annie Page : by gar, he deceive me too.

Eva. Well, I will smite his noddles ;—Pray you follow.

S C E N E II.

The street in Windsor.

Enter Mistress Page and Robin.

Mrs. Page. Nay, keep your way, little gallant ; you were wont to be a follower, but now you are a leader : Whether had you rather lead mine eyes, or eye your master's heels ?

Rob. I had rather, forsooth, go before you like a man, than follow him like a dwarf.

Mrs. Page. O, you are a flattering boy ; now, I see, you'll be a courtier.

Enter Ford.

Ford. Well met, mistress Page : Whither go you ?

Mrs. Page. Truly, sir, to see your wife ; Is she at home ?

Ford. Ay ; and as idle as she may hang together, ° — scall, scurvy, —] Scall was an old word of reproach, as scab was afterwards.

Chaucer imprecates on his scrivener :

“ Under thy longe lockes mayest thou have the scalle.”

JOHNSON.

for

for want of company: I think, if your husbands were dead, you two would marry.

Mrs. Page. Be sure of that, — two other husbands.

Ford. Where had you this pretty weather-cock?

Mrs. Page. I cannot tell what the dickens his name is my husband had him of: What do you call your knight's name, firrah?

Rob. Sir John Falstaff.

Ford. Sir John Falstaff!

Mrs. Page. He, he; I can never hit on's name. There is such a league between my good man and he! — Is your wife at home, indeed?

Ford. Indeed, she is.

Mrs. Page. By your leave, sir; — I am sick, 'till I see her.

[Exeunt Mrs. Page and Robin.]

Ford. Has Page any brains? hath he any eyes? hath he any thinking? sure they sleep; he hath no use of them. Why, this boy will carry a letter twenty miles, as easy as a cannon will shoot point-blank twelve score. He pieces-out his wife's inclination; he gives her folly motion, and advantage: and now she's going to my wife, and Falstaff's boy with her. A man may hear this shower sing in the wind! — and Falstaff's boy with her! — Good plots! — they are laid; and our revolted wives share damnation together. Well; I will take him, then torture my wife, pluck the borrow'd veil of modesty from the so seeming mistress Page, divulge Page himself for a secure and wilful Actæon; and to these violent proceedings all my neighbours shall cry aim*. The clock gives me my cue, and my assurance bids me search; there I shall

* — so seeming mistress Page, —] seeming is specious. So, in K. Lear:

"If ought within that little seeming substance."

STEEVENS.

* — shall cry aim.] i. e. shall encourage. The phrase is taken from archery: See a note on the first scene of this act, and another in As You Like It, act II. sc. i. STEEVENS.

find Falstaff: I shall be rather prais'd for this, than mock'd; for it is as positive as the earth is firm, that Falstaff is there: I will go.

Enter Page, Shallow, Slender, Host, Evans, and Caius.

Shal. Page, &c. Well met, master Ford.

Ford. Trust me, a good knot: I have good cheer at home; and, I pray you, all go with me.

Shal. I must excuse myself, master Ford.

Slen. And so must I, sir; we have appointed to dine with mistress Anne, and I would not break with her for more money than I'll speak of.

Shal. ⁹ We have linger'd about a match between Anne Page and my cousin Slender, and this day we shall have our answer.

Slen. I hope, I have your good will, father Page.

Page. You have, master Slender; I stand wholly for you:—but my wife, master doctor, is for you altogether.

Caius. Ay, by gar; and de maid is love-a me; my nursh-a Quickly tell me so much.

Host. What say you to young master Fenton? he capers, he dances, he has eyes of youth, he writes verses, he speaks holy-day², he smells April and May:

⁹ We have linger'd —] They have not linger'd very long: The match was proposed by Sir Hugh but the day before.

JOHNSON.

Shallow represents the affair as having been long in hand, that he may better excuse himself and Slender from accepting Ford's invitation on the day when it was to be concluded. STEEVENS.

² —he writes verses, he speaks holy-day, —] i. e. in an high-flown, fustian style. It was called a holy-day style, from the old custom of acting their farces of the mysteries and moralties, which were turgid and bombast, on holy-days. So, in Much Ado about Nothing — “I cannot woo in festival terms.” And again, in The Merchant of Venice — “thou spend'st such high-day wit in praising him.” WARBURTON.

² —he speaks holy-day, —] So in K. Hen. IV. P. I. “With many holiday and lady terms.” STEEVENS.

he

he will carry't, he will carry't; 'tis in his buttons; he will carry't.

Page. Not by my consent, I promise you. The gentleman is of no having: he kept company with the wild prince and Poins; he is of too high a region, he knows too much. No, he shall not knit a knot in his fortunes with the finger of my substance: if he take her, let him take her simply; the wealth I have waits on my consent, and my consent goes not that way.

Ford. I beseech you, heartily, some of you go home with me to dinner: besides your cheer, you shall have sport; I will shew you a monster.—Master doctor, 3 ———'tis in his buttons; —] Alluding to an ancient custom among the country fellows, of trying whether they should succeed with their mistresses, by carrying the batchelor's buttons (a plant of the Lycnis kind, whose flowers resemble a coat button in form) in their pockets. And they judged of their good or bad success, by their growing, or their not growing there. SMITH.

Greene mentions these batchelor's buttons, in his Quip for an upstart Courtier: — "I saw the batchelor's buttons, whose virtue is, to make wanton maidens weep, when they have worn them forty weeks under their aprons, &c."

The same expression occurs in Heywood's Fair Maid of the West, 1631:

"He wears batchelor's buttons, does he not?"

Again, in The Constant Maid, by Shirley, 1640:

"I am a batchelor,

"I pray let me be one of your buttons still then."

Again, in A Fair Quarrel, by Middleton and Rowley, 1617:

"I'll wear my batchelor's buttons still."

Again, in A Woman never Vex'd, com. by Rowley, 1632:

"Go, go and rest on Venus' violets; shew her

"A dozen of batchelor's buttons, boy."

Again, in Westward Hoe, 1606: "Here's my husband, and no batchelor's buttons are at his doublet." STEEVENS.

4 — of no having: —] Having is the same as estate or fortune. JOHNSON.

So, in Macbeth:

"Of noble having, and of royal hope." STEEVENS.

you shall go;—so shall you, master Page;—and you, Sir Hugh.

Shal. Well, fare you well:—we shall have the freer wooing at master Page's.

Caius. Go home, John Rugby; I come anon.

Hof. Farewell, my hearts: I will to my honest knight Falstaff, and drink canary with him.

Ford. [Aside.] I think, I shall drink in pipe-wine first with him; I'll make him dance. Will you go, gentles?

All. Have with you, to see this monster. [Exeunt.]

S C E N E III.

Ford's house.

Enter Mrs. Ford, Mrs. Page, and servants with a basket.

Mrs. Ford. What, John! what, Robert!

Mrs. Page. Quickly, quickly; is the buck-basket—

Mrs. Ford. I warrant:—What, Robin, I say.

Mrs. Page. Come, come, come.

Mrs. Ford. Here, set it down.

Mrs. Page. Give your men the charge; we must be brief.

Hof. Farewell, my hearts: I will to my honest knight Falstaff, and drink canary with him.

Ford. [Aside.] I think, I shall drink in pipe-wine first with him: I'll make him dance. —] To drink in pipe-wine, is a phrase which I cannot understand. May we not suppose that Shakespeare rather wrote? I think I shall drink horn-pipe wine first with him: I'll make him dance.

Canary is the name of a dance, as well as of a wine. Ford lays hold of both senses; but, for an obvious reason, makes the dance a horn-pipe. It has been already remarked, that Shakespeare has frequent allusions to a cuckold's horns. TYRWHITT.

Pipe is known to be a vessel of wine, now containing two hog-heads. Pipe wine is therefore wine, not from the bottle, but the pipe; and the text consists in the ambiguity of the word, which signifies both a cask of wine, and a musical instrument.

JOHNSON.

Mrs. Ford. Marry, as I told you before, John, and Robert, be ready here hard by in the brew-house; and when I suddenly call on you, come forth, and (without any pause, or staggering) take this basket on your shoulders⁶: that done, trudge with it in all haste, and carry it among the whittlers in Datchet mead, and there empty it in the muddy ditch, close by the Thames side.

Mrs. Page. You will do it?

Mrs. Ford. I have told them over and over; they lack no direction: Be gone, and come when you are call'd.

[Exeunt Servants.]

Mrs. Page. Here comes little Robin.

Enter Robin,

Mrs. Ford. How now, my cyas-musket? what news with you?

Rob.

-take this basket on your shoulders:—] It is not improbable, but that Shakespear, in the character of Falstaff, might have aimed some strokes at the compulgence and intemperance of Ben Jonson. Mr. Oldys, in his MS. additions to Langbaine's account of English dramatic poets, introduces the following story of Ben, which was found in a memorandum book, written in the time of the civil wars, by Mr. Oldisworth, who was secretary to Philip, earl of Pembroke.

“Mr. Camden recommended him to Sir Walter Raleigh, who trusted him with the care and instruction of his eldest son, Walter, a gay spark, who could not brook Ben's rigorous treatment; but perceiving one foible in his disposition, made use of that to throw off the yoke of his government. This was an unlucky habit that Ben had contracted, through his love of jovial company, of being overtaken with liquor, which Sir Walter of all vices did most abominate, and hath most exclaimed against. One day when Ben had taken a plentiful dose, and was fallen into a sound sleep, young Raleigh got a great basket and a couple of men, who laid Ben in it, and then with a pole carried him between their shoulders to Sir Walter, telling him, that their young master had sent home his tutor.” STEEVENS.

⁷ How now, my cyas-musket?—] Fas is a young unfledg'd hawk; I suppose from the Italian Niesfo, which originally signified any young bird taken from the nest unfledg'd, afterwards a young

Rob. My master sir John is come in at your back-door, mistress Ford; and requests your company.

Mrs. Page. You little Jack-a-lent^s; have you been true to us?

Rob. Ay, I'll be sworn: My master knows not of your being here; and hath threaten'd to put me into everlasting liberty, if I tell you of it; for, he swears, he'll turn me away.

Mrs. Page. Thou'rt a good boy; this secrecy of thine shall be a tailor to thee, and shall make thee a new doublet and hose.—I'll go hide me.

Mrs. Ford. Do so:—Go tell thy master, I am alone. Mistress Page, remember you your cue. [Exit Robin.] young hawk. The French, from hence, took their niais, and used it in both those significations; to which they added a third, metaphorically a stupid fellow; un garçon fort niais, un niais. Musket signifies a sparrow hawk, or the smallest species of hawks. This too is from the Italian Musibetto, a small hawk, as appears from the original signification of the word, namely, a troublesome stinging fly. So that the humour of calling the little page an eyas-musket is very intelligible. WARBURTON.

So, in Greene's Card of Fancy, 1608: "—no hawk so haggard but will stoop to the lure: no nieffe so ramage but will be reclaimed to the lures." Eyas-musket is the same as infant Lilliputian. Again, in Spenser's Fairy Queen, b. i. c. —

" ——— youthful gay

" Like eyas-hauke, up mounts into the skies,

" His newly budded pinions to essay."

In the Booke of Hawking, &c. commonly called the Book of St. Albans, bl. l. no date, is the following derivation of the word; but whether true or erroneous, is not for me to determine: "An hauke is called an eyesse from her eyas. For an hauke that is brought up under a buslarde or puttock, as many ben, have watry eyen, &c." STEEVENS.

^s —Jack-a-lent, —] A Jack o' lent was a puppet thrown at in Lent, like shrove-cocks. So, in The Wickedest goes to the Wall, 1618:

" A mere anatomy, a Jack of Lent."

Again, in the Four Prentices of London, 1632:

" Now you old Jack of Lent, six weeks and upwards."

Again, in Greene's Tu Quoque, 1599: "—for if a boy that is throwing at his Jack o' Lent, chance to hit me on the shins, &c." See a note on the last scene of this comedy. STEEVENS.

Mrs. Page. I warrant thee; if I do not act it, hiss me.

[Exit Mrs. Page.]

Mrs. Ford. Go to then;—we'll use this unwholesome humidity, this gross watry pumpion;—we teach him to know turtles from jays².

Enter Falstaff.

Fal. Have I caught thee, my heavenly jewel¹? Why, now let me die, for I have liv'd long enough²; this is the period of my ambition: O this blessed hour!

Mrs. Ford. O sweet sir John!

Fal. Mistress Ford; I cannot cog, I cannot prate, mistress Ford. Now shall I sin in my wish: I would thy husband were dead; I'll speak it before the best lord, I would make thee my lady.

Mrs. Ford. I your lady, sir John! alas, I should be a pitiful lady.

Fal. Let the court of France show me such another; I see how thine eye would emulate the diamond: Thou hast the right arch'd bent³ of the brow, that becomes the ship-tire, the tire-valiant, or any tire of Venetian admittance.

Mrs.

¹ —from jays.] So, in Cymbeline:

“ ——— some jay of Italy;

“ Whose mother was her painting, &c.” STEEVENS.

² Have I caught my heavenly jewel?] This is the first line of the second song in Sidney's Asiropbel and Stella. TOLLET.

³ —Why, now let me die; for I have lived long enough; —] This sentiment, which is of sacred origin, is here indecently introduced. It appears again, with somewhat less of profaneness, in the Winter's Tale, act IV. and in Othello, act II. STEEVENS.

⁴ —arch'd bent —] Thus the quartos 1602, and 1619. The folio reads—arch'd beauty. STEEVENS.

⁵ —that becomes the ship tire, the tire-valiant, or any Venetian attire.] The old quarto reads, tire-wellet, and the old folio reads, or any tire of Venetian admittance. So that the true reading of the whole is this, that becomes the ship-tire, the tire-valiant, or any tire of Venetian admittance. The speaker tells his mistress, she had a face that would become all the head-dresses in fashion. The ship-tire was an open head-dress, with a kind of scarf depending from behind. Its name of ship-tire was, I presume, from its giving Mrs. Ford. A plain kerchief, sir John : my brows become nothing else ; nor that well neither.

Fal.

ing the wearer some resemblance of a ship (as Shakespeare says) in all her trim : with all her pennants out, and flags and streamers flying. Thus Milton, in Samson Agonistes, paints Dalila :

“ But who is this, what thing of sea or land ?

“ Female of sex it seems,

“ That so bedeck’d, ornate, and gay,

“ Comes this way sailing

“ Like a stately ship

“ Of Tarsus, bound for the isles

“ Of Javan or Gadier,

“ With all her bravery on, and tackle trim,

“ Sails fill’d, and streamers waving,

“ Courted by all the winds that hold them play.”

This was an image familiar with the poets of that time. Thus Beaumont and Fletcher, in their play of What without Money : —

“ She spreads fattens as the king’s ships do canvas every where, she may space her misen, &c.” This will direct us to reform the following word of tire-valiant, which I suspect to be corrupt, valiant being a very incongruous epithet for a woman’s head-dress. I suppose Shakespeare wrote tire-voilant. As the ship-tire was an open head-dress, so the tire-voilant was a close one ; in which the head and breast were covered as with a veil. And these were, in fact, the two different head-dresses then in fashion, as we may see by the pictures of that time. One of which was so open, that the whole neck, breasts, and shoulders, were opened to view : the other, so securely inclosed in kerchiefs, &c. that nothing could be seen above the eyes, or below the chin.

——— or any Venetian attire.] This is a wrong reading, as appears from the impropriety of the word attire here used for a woman’s head-dress : whereas it signifies the dress of any part. We should read therefore, or any ’tire of Venetian admittance. For the word attire, reduced by the aphæresis, to ’tire, takes a new signification, and means only the head dress. Hence tire-woman, for a dresser of the head. As to the meaning of the latter part of the sentence, this may be seen by a paraphrase of the whole speech. — Your face is so good, says the speaker, that it would become any head-dress worn at court, either the open or the close, or indeed any rich and fashionable one worth adorning with Venetian point, or which will admit to be adorned. [Of Venetian admittance.] The fashionable lace, at that time, was Venetian point.

WARBURTON.

This note is plausible, except in the explanation of Venetian

Fal. Thou art a traitor^s to say so : thou would'st make an absolute courtier ; and the firm fixture of thy foot would give an excellent motion to thy gait, in a semi-circled farthingale. I see what thou wert, if fortune thy foe were not ; nature is thy friend : Come, thou canst not hide it.

Mrs. Ford. Believe me, there's no such thing in me.

Fal. What made me love thee ? let that persuade thee, there's something extraordinary in thee. Come, I cannot cog, and say, thou art this and that, like a many of these lipping haw-thorn buds, that come like women in men's apparel, and smell like Bucklers-bury⁶ in simple-time ; I cannot : but I love thee ; none but thee ; and thou deservest it.

Mrs. Ford. Do not betray me, sir ; I fear, you love mistress Page.

Fal. Thou might'st as well say, I love to walk by the Counter-gate ; which is as hateful to me as the reek of a lime-kiln.

admittance : but I am afraid this whole system of dress is unsupported by evidence. JOHNSON.

———of Venetian admittance.] i. e. of a fashion received from Venice. So, in Westward Hoe, 1606, by Decker and Webster : “ ——— now she's in that Italian head-tire you sent her.” Dr. Warburton might have found the same reading in the quarto, 1630. Instead of tire-valiant, I would read tire-volant. Stubbs, who describes most minutely every article of female-dress, has mentioned none of these terms, but speaks of vails depending from the top of the head, and flying behind in loose folds. The word volant was in use before the age of Shakespeare. I find it in Wilsford Holme's Fall and evil Successes of Rebellion, 1537 :

“ high volant in any thing divine.”

Tire wellet, in the old 4to, may be printed, as Mr. Tollet observes, by mistake, for tire-velvet. We know that velvet-hoods were worn in the age of Shakespeare. STEEVENS.

^s ——— a traitor ———] i. e. to thy own merit. STEEVENS.

⁶ ——— like Bucklers-bury, &c.] Bucklers-bury, in the time of Shakespeare, was chiefly inhabited by druggists, who sold all kind of herbs, green as well as dry. STEEVENS.

Mrs.

Mrs. Ford. Well, heaven knows how I love you; and you shall one day find it.

Fal. Keep in that mind; I'll deserve it.

Mrs. Ford. Nay, I must tell you, so you do; or else I could not be in that mind.

Rob. [Within.] Mistress Ford, mistress Ford! here's mistress Page at the door, sweating, and blowing, and looking wildly, and would needs speak with you presently.

Fal. She shall not see me; I will ensconce me behind the arras.

Mrs. Ford. Pray you, do so; she's a very tattling woman. — [Falstaff hides himself.]

Enter Mistress Page.

What's the matter? how now?

Mrs. Page. O mistress Ford, what have you done? you're sham'd, you are overthrown, you are undone for ever.

Mrs. Ford. What's the matter, good mistress Page?

Mrs. Page. O well-a-day, mistress Ford! having an honest man to your husband, to give him such cause of suspicion!

Mrs. Ford. What cause of suspicion?

Mrs. Page. What cause of suspicion? — Out upon you! — how am I mistook in you?

Mrs. Ford. Why, alas! what's the matter?

Mrs. Page. Your husband's coming hither, woman, with all the officers in Windsor, to search for a gentleman, that, he says, is here now in the house, by your consent, to take an ill advantage of his absence: You are undone.

Mrs. Ford. Speak louder? — [Aside.] 'Tis not so, I hope.

⁷ Speak louder —] i. e. that Falstaff who is retired may hear. This passage is only found in the two elder quartos. STEEVENS.

Mrs. Page. Pray heaven it be not so, that you have such a man here; but 'tis most certain your husband's coming with half Windsor at his heels, to search for such a one. I come before to tell you: If you know yourself clear, why I am glad of it: but if you have a friend here, convey, convey him out. Be not amaz'd; call all your senses to you; defend your reputation, or bid farewell to your good life for ever.

Mrs. Ford. What shall I do?—There is a gentleman, my dear friend; and I fear not mine own shame, so much as his peril: I had rather than a thousand pound, he were out of the house.

Mrs. Page. For shame, never stand you had rather, and you had rather; your husband's here at hand, be-think you of some conveyance: in the house you cannot hide him.—Oh, how have you deceived me!—Look, here is a basket; if he be of any reasonable stature, he may creep in here; and throw foul linen upon him, as if it were going to buckling: Or, it is whiting-time, send him by your two men to Datchet mead.

Mrs. Ford. He's too big to go in there: What shall I do?

Re-enter Falstaff.

Fal. Let me see't, let me see't! O let me see't! I'll in, I'll in;—follow your friend's counsel;—I'll in.

Mrs. Page. What! sir John Falstaff? Are these your letters, knight?

Fal. I love thee,—help me away: let me creep in here; I'll never—

[He goes into the basket, they cover him with foul linen.]

Mrs. Page. Help to cover your master, boy: Call your men, mistress Ford:—You dissembling knight!

Mrs. Ford. What, John, Robert, John! Go take up these clothes here, quickly; Where's the cowl-staff?

staff? look, ^s how you drumble : carry them to the laundress in Datchet mead ; quickly, come.

Enter Ford, Page, Caius, and Sir Hugh Evans.

Ford. Pray you, come near : if I suspect without cause, why then make sport at me, then let me be your jest, I deserve it.—How now? whither bear you this?

Serv. To the laundress, forsooth.

Mrs. Ford. Why, what have you to do whither they bear it? you were best meddle with buck-washing.

Ford. Buck? I would I could wash myself of the buck! Buck, buck, buck? Ay, buck; I warrant you, buck; and of the feason too, it shall appear. [Exeunt Servants with the basket.] Gentlemen, I have dream'd to-night; I'll tell you my dream. Here, here, here be my keys: ascend my chambers, search, seek, find out: I'll warrant we'll unkennel the fox;—Let me stop this way first:—⁹ So, now uncape.

⁸ —how you drumble:—] The reverend Mr. Lambe, the editor of the ancient metrical history of the Battle of Flodden, observes, that —look how you drumble, means —how confused you; and that in the North, drumbl'd ale is muddy, disturbed ale. Thus, a Scottish proverb in Ray's collection:

“It is good fishing in drumbling waters.”

Again, in Have with you to Saffron Walden, or Gabriel Harvey's Hunt is up, this word, occurs: “—gray-beard drumbling over a discourse.” Again: “—your fly in a box is but a drumble-bee in comparison of it.” Again; “—this drumbling course.”

STEEVENS.

⁹ —So now uncape.] So the folio of 1623 reads, and rightly. It is a term in fox-hunting, which signifies to dig out the fox when earth'd. And here is as much as to say, take out the foul linen under which the adulterer lies hid. The Oxford editor reads uncouple, out of pure love to an emendation. WARBURTON.

• Dr. Warburton seems to have forgot that the linen was already carried away. The allusion in the foregoing sentence is to the stopping every hole at which a fox could enter, before they uncap or turn him out of the bag in which he was brought. I suppose every one has heard of a bag-fox. STEEVENS.

Page. Good master Ford, be contented : you wrong yourself too much. .

Ford. True, master Page.—Up, gentlemen ; you shall see sport anon : follow me, gentlemen. [Exit.

Eva. This is fery fantastical humours, and jealousies.

Caius. By gar, 'tis no de fashion of Francé : it is not jealous in France.

Page. Nay, follow him, gentlemen ; see the issue of his search. [Exeunt.

Mrs. Page. Is there not a double excellency in this ?

Mrs. Ford. I know not which pleases me better, that my husband is deceiv'd, for Sir John.

Mrs. Page. What a taking was he in, when your husband ask'd who was in the basket !

Mrs. Ford. I am half afraid, he will have need of washing ; so throwing him into the water will do him a benefit.

Mrs. Page. Hang him, dishonest rascal ! I would, all of the same strain were in the same distress.

Mrs. Ford. I think, my husband hath some special suspicion of Falstaff's being here ; for I never saw him so gross in his jealousy till now. . .

Mrs. Page. I will lay a plot to try that : And we will yet have more tricks with Falstaff : his dissolute disease will scarce obey this medicine.

Mrs. Ford. Shall we send that foolish carrion, mistress Quickly, to him, and excuse his throwing into the water ; and give him another hope, to betray him to another punishment ?

Mrs. Page. We'll do it ; let him be sent for to-morrow eight o'clock, to have amends.

Re-enter Ford, Page, and the rest at a distance.

Ford. I cannot find him : may be the knave brag'd of that he could not compass.

Mrs.

Mrs. Page. Heard you that?

Mrs. Ford. I, I; peace:— You use me well, master Ford, do you?

Ford. Ay, I do so.

Mrs. Ford. Heaven make you better than your thoughts!

Ford. Amen.

Mrs. Page. You do yourself mighty wrong, master Ford.

Ford. Ay, ay; I must bear it.

Eva. If there be any pody in the house, and in the chambers, and in the coffers, and in the pressies, heaven forgive my sins at the day of judgment!

Caius. By gar, nor I too; dere is no bodies.

Page. Fie, fie, master Ford! are you not ashamed? what spirit, what devil suggests this imagination? I would not have your distemper in this kind, for the wealth of Windsor Castle.

Ford. 'Tis my fault, master Page: I suffer for it.

Eva. You suffer for a pad conscience: your wife is as honest a 'omans, as I will desires among five thousand, and five hundred too.

By gar, I see 'tis an honest woman.

Ford. Well;—I promis'd you a dinner:—Come, come, walk in the park: I pray you, pardon me; I will hereafter make known to you, why I have done this. Come, wife; come, mistress Page; I pray you pardon me; pray heartily, pardon me.

Page. Let's go in, gentlemen; but, trust me, we'll mock him. I do invite you to-morrow morning to my house to breakfast; after, we'll abirding together; I have a fine hawk for the bush: shall it be so?

• Ford. Any thing.

• Eva. If there is one, I shall make two in the company.

Caius. If there be one or two, I shall make-a de turd.

Eva.

Eva. In your teeth¹:—for shame.

Ford. Pray you go, master Page.

Eva. I pray you now, remembrance to-morrow on the lousy knave, mine host.

Caius. Dat is good; by gar, vit all my heart.

Eva. A lousy knave; to have his gibes, and his mockeries. [Exeunt.

S C E N E IV.

Page's house.

Enter Fenton and Mistress Anne Page.

Fent. I see, I cannot get thy father's love;
Therefore no more turn me to him, sweet Nan.

Anne. Alas! how then?

Fent. Why, thou must be thyself.
He doth object, I am too great of birth;
And that, my state being gall'd with my expence,
I seek to heal it only by his wealth:
Besides these, other bars he lays before me,
My riots past, my wild societies;
And tells me, 'tis a thing impossible
I should love thee, but as a property.

Anne. May be, he tells you true.

Fent. No, heaven so speed me in my time to come!
Albeit, I will confess, thy² father's wealth

Was

¹ In your teeth:—] This dirty restoration was made by Mr. Theobald. Evans's application of the doctor's words, is not in the folio. STEEVENS.

² — father's wealth] Some light may be giver to those who shall endeavour to calculate the increase of English wealth, by observing, that Latymer, in the time of Edward VI. mentions it as a proof of his father's prosperity, That though but a yeoman, he gave his daughters five pounds each for her portion. At the latter end of Elizabeth, seven hundred pounds were such a temptation to courtship,

Was the first motive that I woo'd thee, Anne :
 Yet, wooing thee, I found thee of more value
 Than stamps in gold, or sums in sealed bags ;
 And 'tis the very riches of thyself
 That now I aim at.

Anne. Gentle master Fenton,
 Yet seek my father's love ; still seek it, fir :
³ If opportunity and humblest suit
 Cannot attain it, why then,——Hark you hither.
 [Fenton and Mistress Anne go apart.]

Enter Shallow, Slender, and Mrs. Quickly.

Shal. Break their talk, mistress Quickly ; my kinsman shall speak for himself.

Slen. I'll make a shaft or a bolt on't : 'tis but venturing.

Shal. Be not dismay'd.

Slen. No, she shall not dismay me : I care not for that,——but that I am afraid.

Quic. Mark ye ; master Slender would speak a word with you.

Anne. I come to him.—This is my father's choice.
 O what a world of vile ill-favour'd faults
 Look handsome in three hundred pounds a year !

[Aside.]
Quic. And how does good master Fenton ? Pray you, a word with you.

Shal. She's coming ; to her, coz. O boy, thou hadst a father !

courtship, as made all other motives suspected. Congreve makes twelve thousand pounds more than a counterbalance to the affectation of Belinda. No poet would now fly his favourite character at less than fifty thousand. JOHNSON.

³ If opportunity and humblest suit] Dr. Thirlby imagines, that our author with more propriety wrote :

If importunity and humblest suit.

I have not ventur'd to disturb the text, because it may mean, "If the frequent opportunities you find of soliciting my father, and your obsequiousness to him, cannot get him over to your party, &c." THEOBALD.

Slen.

Slen. I had a father, mistress Anne;—my uncle can tell you good jests of him:—Pray you, uncle, tell mistress Anne the jest, how my father stole two geese out of a pen, good uncle.

Shal. Mistress Anne, my cousin loves you.

Slen. Ay, that I do; as well as I love any woman in Gloucestershire.

Shal. He will maintain you like a gentlewoman.

Slen. Ay, that I will, * come cut and long-tail, under the degree of a 'squire.

Shal. He will make you a hundred and fifty pounds jointure.

Annc. Good master Shallow, let him woo for himself.

Shal. Marry, I thank you for it; I thank you for that—good comfort. She calls you, coz: I'll leave you.

Annc. Now, master Slender.

Slen. Now, good mistress Anne.

Anne. What is your will?

Slen. My will? od's heartlings, that's a pretty jest, indeed! I ne'er made my will yet, I thank heaven; I am not such a sickly creature, I give heaven praise.

Anne. I mean, master Slender, what would you with me?

Slen. Truly, for mine own part, I would little or nothing with you: Your father, and my uncle, have

* —come cut and long tail,—] i. e. come poor, or rich, to offer himself as my rival. The following is the origin of the phrase. According to the forest laws, the dog of a man, who had no right to the privilege of chase, was obliged to cut, or law his dog, amongst other modes of disabling him, by depriving him of his tail. A dog so cut was called a cut, or cut-tail, and by contraction cur. Cut and long-tail therefore signified the dog of a clown, and the dog of a gentleman. STEEVENS.

—come cut and long tail,—] I can see no meaning in this phrase. Slender promises to make his mistress a gentlewoman, and probably means to say, he will deck her in a gown of the court cut, and with a long train or tail. In the comedy of Eastward Hoe, is this passage: "The one must be ladyfied forsooth, and be attired just to the court cut and long taylor;" which seems to justify our reading——Court cut and long tail. SIR J. HAWKINS.

made motions: if it be my luck, so; if not, happy man be his dole! They can tell you how things go, better than I can: You may ask your father; here he comes.

Enter Page, and Mistress Page.

Page. Now, master Slender:—Love him, daughter Anne:—

Why how now! what does master Fenton here? You wrong me, sir, thus still to haunt my house: I told you, sir, my daughter is dispos'd of.

Fent. Nay, master Page, be not impatient.

Mrs. Page. Good master Fenton, come not to my child.

Page. She is no match for you.

Fent. Sir, will you hear me?

Page. No, good master Fenton.

Come, master Shallow;—come, son Slender; in:—Knowing my mind, you wrong me, master Fenton.

[Exeunt Page, Shallow, and Slender.]

Quic. Speak to mistress Page.

Fent. Good mistress Page, for that I love your daughter

In such a righteous fashion as I do,
Perforce, against all checks, rebukes, and manners,
I must advance the colours of my love,
And not retire: Let me have your good will.

Anne. Good mother, do not marry me to yon' fool.

Mrs. Page. I mean it not; I seek you a better husband.

Quic. That's my master, master doctor.

Anne. Alas, I had rather be set quick i' the earth,
And bowl'd to death with turnips.

Mrs.

—happy man be his dole!] A proverbial expression. See Ray's collection, p. 116. edit. 1757. STEVENS.

⁶ Anne. Alas, I had rather be set quick i' the earth,
And bowl'd to death with turnips.] Can we think the speaker would thus ridicule her own imprecation? We may be sure
the

Mrs. Page. Come, trouble not yourself: Good master Fenton,

I will not be your friend nor enemy:

My daughter will I question how she loves you,

And as I find her, so am I affected;

'Till then, farewell, sir:—She must needs go in;

Her father will be angry. [Exe. Mrs. Page and Anne.]

Fent. Farewell, gentle mistress; farewell; Nan.

Quic. This is my doing now;—Nay, said I, will you cast away your child on a fool, and a physician? Look on master Fenton:—this is my doing.

Fent. I thank thee; and I pray thee, once to-night give my sweet Nan this ring! There's for thy pains.

[Exit.]

the last line should be given to the procuress, Quickly, who would mock the young woman's aversion for her master the doctor.

WAT BURTON.

—be set quick i' the earth,
And bow'd to death with turnips.]

This is a common proverb in the southern counties. I find almost the same expression in Ben Jonson's Bartholomew Fair: "Would I had been set in the ground, all but the head of me, and had my brains bow'd at." COLLINS.

⁷ —fool, and a physician? I should read fool or a physician, meaning Slender and Caius. JOHNSON.

Sir Tho. Hamner reads according to Dr. Johnson's conjecture. This may be right.—Or my Dame Quickly may allude to the proverb, a man of forty is either a fool or a physician; but she asserts her master to be both. FARMER.

So, in Microcosmus, a masque by Nabbes, 1637:

"Choler. Phlegm's a fool.

"Melan. Or a physician."

Again, in a Maidenhead well lost, 1632:

"No matter whether I be a fool or a physician."

Mr. Dennis of irascible memory, who altered this play, and brought it on the stage, in the year 1702, under the title of The Comical Gallant, (when, thanks to the alterer, it was fairly damn'd!) has introduced the proverb at which Mrs. Quickly's allusion appears to be pointed. STEEVENS.

—once to-night—] i. e. sometime to-night. So in a letter from the sixth earl of Northumberland; (quoted in the notes on the household book of the fifth earl of that name:) "—notwithstanding I trust to be able ons to set up a chapell off myne owne." STEEVENS.

. Quic. -

Quic. Now heaven send thee good fortune! A kind heart he hath: a woman would run through fire and water for such a kind heart. But yet, I would my master had mistress Anne; or I would master Slender had her; or, in sooth, I would master Fenton had her: I will do what I can for them all three; for so I have promis'd, and I'll be as good as my word; but speciously⁹ for master Fenton. Well, I must of another errand to Sir John Falstaff from my two mistresses; What a beast am I to slack it? [Exit.]

S C E N E V.

The Garter inn.

Enter Falstaff and Bardolph.

Fal. Bardolph, I say.—

Bard. Here, sir.

Fal. Go fetch me a quart of sack; put a toast in't. [Ex. Bard.] Have I liv'd to be carried in a basket, like a barrow of butcher's offal; and to be thrown into the Thames? Well; if I be serv'd such another trick, I'll have my brains ta'en out, and butter'd, and give them to a dog for a new year's gift. The rogues flighted me into the river with as little remorse as they would have drown'd a bitch's blind puppies, fifteen i' the ⁹ —speciously—] She means to say specialy. STEEVENS.

¹ In former copies:

—as they would have drown'd a blind bitch's puppies,—] I have ventured to transpose the adjective here, against the authority of the printed copies. I know, in horses, a colt from a blind stallion loses much of the value it might otherwise have; but are puppies ever drown'd the sooner, for coming from a blind bitch? The author certainly wrote, as they would have drown'd a bitch's blind puppies. THEOBALD.

The transposition may be justified from the following passage in the Two Gentlemen of Verona: “—one that I saved from drowning, when three or four of his blind brothers and sisters went to it.” STEEVENS.

litter : and you may know by my size, that I have a kind of alacrity in sinking ; if the bottom were as deep as hell, I should down. I had been drown'd, but that the shore was shelvy and shallow ; a death that I abhor ; for the water swells a man ; and what a thing should I have been, when I had been swell'd ! I should have been a mountain of mummy.

Re-enter Bardolph, with the wine.

Now, is the sack brew'd ?

Bard. Ay, sir : there's a woman below would speak with you.

Fal. Come, let me pour in some sack to the Thames water ; for my belly's, as cold, as if I had swallow'd snow-balls for pills to cool the reins. Call her in.

Bard. Come in, woman.

Enter Mrs. Quick.

Quic. By your leave ;—I cry you mercy :—Give your worship good morrow.

Fal. Take away these chalices : Go brew me a pottle of sack finely.

Bard. With eggs, sir ?

Fal. Simple of itself ; I'll no pullet-sperm in my brewage.—How now ?

Quic. Marry, sir, I come to your worship from mistress Ford.

Fal. Mistress Ford ! I have had ford enough : I was thrown into the ford ; I have my belly full of ford.

Quic. Alas the day ! good heart, that was not her fault : she does so take on with her men ; they mistook their erection.

Fal. So did I mine, to build upon a foolish woman's promise.

Quic. Well, she laments, sir, for it, that it would yern your heart to see it. Her husband goes this morning a birding ; she desires you once more to come to her her between eight and nine : I must carry her word quickly : she'll make you amends, I warrant you.

Fal. Well, I will visit her : Tell her so ; and bid her think, what a man is : let her consider his frailty, and then judge of my merit.

Quic. I will tell her.

Fal. Do so. Between nine and ten, say'st thou ?

Quic. Eight and nine, sir.

Fal. Well, be gone : I will not miss her.

Quic. Peace be with you, sir ! [Exit.

Fal. I marvel, I hear not of master Brook ; he sent me word to stay within ; I like his money well. Oh, here he comes.

Enter Ford.

Ford. Bless you, sir !

Fal. Now, master Brook ? you come to know what hath pass'd between me and Ford's wife ?

Ford. That, indeed, sir John, is my business.

Fal. Master Brook, I will not lie to you ; I was at her house the hour she appointed me.

Ford. And you sped, sir ?

Fal. Very ill-favour'dly, master Brook.

Ford. How, sir ? Did she change her determination ?

Fal. No, master Brook : but the peaking cornuto her husband, master Brook, dwelling in a continual 'larum of jealousy, comes me in the instant of our encounter, after we had embrac'd, kiss'd, protested, and, as it were, spoke the prologue of our comedy ; and at his heels a rabble of his companions, thither provok'd and instigated by his distemper, and forthwith, to search his house for his wife's love.

Ford. What, while you were there ?

Fal. While I was there.

Ford. And did he search for you, and could not find you ?

Fal. You shall hear. As good luck would have it, comes in one mistress Page ; gives intelligence of Ford's approach; and, by her invention, and Ford's wife's distraction, they convey'd me into a buck-basket.

Ford. A buck-basket!

Fal. Yea, a buck-basket: ramm'd me in with foul shirts and smocks, socks, foul stockings, and greasy napkins; that, master Brook, there was the rankest compound of villanous smell, that ever offended nostril.

Ford. And how long lay you there?

Fal. Nay, you shall hear, master Brook, what I have suffer'd to bring this woman to evil for your good. Being thus cramm'd in the basket, a couple of Ford's knaves, his hinds, were call'd forth by their mistress, to carry me in the name of foul cloaths to Datchet-lane: they took me on their shoulders; met the jealous knave their master in the door; who ask'd them once or twice, what they had in their basket: I quak'd for fear, lest the lunatic knave would have search'd it; but fate, ordaining he should be a cuckold, held his hand. Well; on went he for a search, and away went I for foul cloaths. But mark the sequel, master Brook:—I suffer'd the pangs of three, ² several deaths: first, an intolerable fright, to be detect'd with ³ a jealous rotten bell-weather: next, to be compass'd, like a good ⁴ bilbo, in the circumference of a peck, hilt to point, heel to head: and then, to be stopp'd in, like a strong distillation, with stinking cloaths that fretted in their own grease: think of that,—a man

² ——— several deaths:] Thus the folio and the most correct of the quartos. The first quarto reads — egregious deaths.

STEEVENS.

³ ——— detect'd with ———] Thus the old copies. With was sometimes used for of. So, a little after:

“ I sooner will suspect the sun with cold.”

Detect'd of a jealous &c.] would have been the common grammar of the times. The modern editors read by. STEEVENS.

⁴ ——— bilbo, ———] A bilbo is a Spanish blade, of which the excellence is flexibility and elasticity. JOHNSON.

— bilbo, from Bilboa. STEEVENS.

of my 'kidney—think of that ; that am as subject to heat, as butter ; a man of continual dissolution and thaw ; it was a miracle, to 'scape suffocation. And in the height of this bath, when I was more than half flew'd in grease, like a Dutch dish, to be thrown into the Thames, and cool'd, glowing hot, in that furge, like a horse-shoe ; think of that—hisping hot—think of that, master Brook.

Ford. In good sadness, sir, I am sorry that for my sake you have suffer'd all this. 'My suit is then desperate ; you'll undertake her no more ?

Fal. Master Brook, I will be thrown into Ætna, as I have been into Thames, ere I will leave her thus. Her husband is this morning gone a blding ; I have receiv'd from her another embassy of meeting ; 'twixt eight and nine is the hour, master Brook.

Ford. 'Tis past eight already, sir.

Fal. Is it ? I will then address me ⁶ to my appointment. Come to me at your convenient leisure, and you shall know how I speed ; and the conclusion shall be crown'd with your enjoying her : Adieu. You shall have her, master Brook ; master Brook, you shall cuckold Ford. [Exit.

Ford. Hum ! ha ! is this a vision ? is this a dream ? do I sleep ? master Ford, awake ; awake, master Ford ; there's a hole made in your best coat, master Ford. 'This 'tis to be married ! this 'tis to have linen, and buck-baskets !—Well, I will proclaim myself what I am : I will now take the lecher ; he is at my house : he cannot 'scape me ; 'tis impossible he should ; he cannot creep into a half-penny purse, nor into a pepper-box : but, lest the devil that guides him should ⁵ — kidney ;] Kidney in this phrase now signifies kind or qualities, but Falstaff means, a man whose kidneys are as fat as mine.

⁶ — address me —] i. e. make myself ready. So in K. Henry V. JOHNSON.

“ To-morrow for our march we are address.” STEEVENS.

aid him, I will search impossible places. Though what I am I cannot avoid, yet to be what I would not, shall not make me tame: if I have horns to make one mad, let the proverb go with me, 'I'll be horn-mad.
[Exit.

ACT IV. SCENE I.

Page's house.

Enter Mrs. Page, Mrs. Quickly, and William.

Mrs. Page. Is he at master Ford's already, think'st thou?

Quic. Sure, he is by this; or will be presently: but truly, he is very courageous mad, about his throwing into the water. Mistress Ford desires you to come suddenly.

Mrs. Page. I'll be with her by and by; I'll but — I'll be horn-mad.] There is no image which our author appears so fond of, as that of cuckold's horns. Scarcely a light character is introduced that does not endeavour to produce merriment by some allusion to horned husbands. As he wrote his plays for the stage rather than the press, he perhaps reviewed them seldom, and did not observe his repetition; or finding the jest, however frequent, still successful, did not think correction necessary.

JOHNSON.

* This is a very trifling scene, of no use to the plot, and I should think of no great delight to the audience; but Shakspeare best knew what would please. JOHNSON.

We may suppose this scene to have been a very entertaining one to the audience for which it was written. Many of the old plays exhibit pedants instructing their scholars. Marston has a very long one in his What you Will, between a schoolmaster, and Holfernes, Nathaniel, &c. his pupils. The title of this play was perhaps borrowed by Shakspeare, to join to that of Twelfth Night. What you Will, appeared in 1607. Twelfth Night, in 1623.

STEEVENS.

bring

bring my young man here to school : Look, where his master comes ; 'tis a playing-day, I see.

Enter Sir Hugh Evans.

How now, sir Hugh ? no school to-day ?

Eva. No ; master Slender is let the boys leave to play.

Quic. Blessing of his heart !

Mrs. Page. Sir Hugh, my husband says, my son profits nothing in the world at his book ; I pray you, ask him some questions in his accidence.

Eva. Come hither, William ;—hold up your head ; come.

Mrs. Page. Come on, firrah ; hold up your head ; answer your master, be not afraid.

Eva. William, how many numbers is in nouns ?

Will. Two.

Quic. Truly I thought there had been one number more ; because they say, od's nouns.

Eva. Peace your tatlings. What is fair, William ?

Will. Pukker.

Quic. Poulcats ! there are fairer things than poulcats, sure.

Eva. You are a very simplicity 'oman ; I pray you, peace. What is Lapis, William ?

Will. A stone.

Eva. And what is a stone, William ?

Will. A pebble.

Eva. No, it is Lapis ; I pray you, remember in your prain.

Will. Lapis.

Eva. That is a good William : What is he, William, that does lend articles ?

Will. Articles are borrow'd of the pronoun ; and be thus declin'd, Singulariter, nominativo, hic, hæc, hoc.

Eva. Nominativo, big, hag, hog ;—pray you, mark : genitivo, kujuk ; Well, what is your accusative case ?

Will. Accusative, hinc.

Eva. I pray you, have your remembrance, child;
Accusativo, hung, hang, hog.

Quic. Hang hog is Latin for bacon, I warrant you.

Eva. Leave your pſabbles, 'oman. What is the focative caſe, William?

Will. O—vocativo, O.

Eva. Remember, William; focative is, cqret.

Quic. And that's a good root.

Eva. 'Oman, forbear.

Mrs. Page. Peace.

Eva. What is your genitive caſe plural, William?

Will. Genitive caſe?

Eva. Ay.

Will. Genitive, horum, harum, horum?

Quic. 'Vengeance of Giney's caſe! ſie on her!—never name her, child, if ſhe be a whore.

Eva. For ſhame, 'oman.

Quic. You do ill to teach the child ſuch words: he teaches him to hick and to hack, which they'll do faſt enough of themſelves; and to call horum:—ſie upon you!

Eva. 'Oman art thou lunatics? haſt thou no underſtanding for thy caſes, and the numbers of the genders? thou art a fooliſh chriſtian creatures, as I would deſires.

Mrs. Page. Pr'ythee, hold thy peace.

Eva. Shew me now, William, ſome declenſions of your pronouns.

Will. Forſooth, I have forgot.

Eva. It is ki, kæ, cod; if you forget your kis,

* — horum, harum, horum.] Taylor, the water-poet, has borrowed this jeſt, ſuch as it is, in his character of a ſtrumpet:

“ And come to horum, harum, whorum, then

“ She proves a great proficient among men.”

STEEVENS.

* — your kies, your kæs, &c.] All this ribaldry is likewiſe found in Taylor the water-poet. See ſol. edit. p. 106.

STEEVENS.

your kæs, and your cods, you must be preeches². Go your ways and play, go.

Mrs. Page. He is a better scholar, than I thought he was.

Eva. He is a good sprag³ memory. Farewell, mistress Page.

Mrs. Page. Adieu, good fir Hugh, Get you home, boy.—Come, we stay too long. [Exeunt,

S C E N E II.

Ford's house.

Enter Falstaff and Mrs. Ford.

Fal. Mistress Ford, your sorrow hath eaten up my sufferance: I see, you are obsequious in your love, and I profess requital to a hair's breadth; not only, mistress Ford, in the simple office of love, but in all the accoutrement, complement, and ceremony of it. But are you sure of your husband now?

Mrs. Ford. He's a birding, sweet fir John.

Mrs. Page. [Within.] What, ho, gossip Ford! what ho!

Mrs. Ford. Step into the chamber, fir John.

[Exit Falstaff.

Enter Mrs. Page.

Mrs. Page. How now, sweetheart? who's at home besides yourself?

² —you must be preeches.] Sir Hugh means to say —you must be breech'd: i. e. flogg'd. To breech is to flog. So, in the Taming of the Shrew:

“I am no breeching scholar in the schools.”

Again, in the Humorous Lieutenant, of Beaumont and Fletcher:

“Cry like a breech'd boy, not eat a bit.” STEEVENS.

³ —sprag—] I am told that this word is still used by the common people in the neighbourhood of Bath, where it signifies ready, alert, sprightly, and is pronounced as if it was written—sprack.

STEEVENS.

Mrs.

Mrs. Ford. Why, none but mine own people.

Mrs. Page. Indeed?

Mrs. Ford. No, certainly—Speak louder. [Aside.

Mrs. Page. Truly, I am so glad you have nobody here.

Mrs. Ford. Why?

Mrs. Page. Why, woman, your husband is in his old lunes⁴ again: he so takes on yonder with my husband; so rails against all married mankind; so curses all Eve's daughters, of what complexion soever; and so buffets himself on the forehead, crying, ⁶ Peer-out, peer-out! that any madness, I ever yet beheld, seem'd but tameness, civility, and patience, to this distemper he is in now: I am glad the fat knight is not here.

Mrs. Ford. Why, does he talk of him?

Mrs. Page. Of none but him; and swears, he was carried out, the last time he search'd for him, in a basket: protests to my husband, he is now here; and hath drawn him and the rest of their company from their sport, to make another experiment of his suspicion: but I am glad the knight is not here; now he shall see his own foolery.

Mrs. Ford. How near is he, mistress Page?

Mrs. Page. Hard by; at street end; he will be here anon.

Mrs. Ford. I am undone!—the knight is here.

Mrs. Page. Why, then thou art utterly sham'd, and he's but a dead man. What a woman are you?—Away with him, away with him; better shame than murder.

⁴ — lunes —] i. e. lunacy, frenzy. See a note on the Winter's Tale. The quarto 1630, and the folio, read luns, instead of lunes. The elder quartos — his old vaine again. STEVENS.

⁵ — he so takes on —] To take on, which is now used for to grieve, seems to be used by our author for to rage. Perhaps it was applied to any passion. JOHNSON.

⁶ — Peer-out,] That is, appear horns. Shakespeare is at his old lunes. JOHNSON.

Mrs. Ford. Which way should he go? how should I bestow him? Shall I put him into the basket again?

Enter Falstaff.

Fal. No, I'll come no more i' the basket: May I not go out, ere he come?

Mrs. Page. Alas, three of master Ford's brothers watch the door with pistols, that none should issue out; otherwise you might slip away ere he came.— But what make you here?

Fal. What shall I do? I'll creep up into the chimney.

Mrs. Ford. There they always use to discharge their birding-pieces: creep into the kiln-hole.

Fal. Where is it?

Mrs. Ford. He will seek there on my word. Neither press, coffer, chest, trunk, well, vault, but he hath an abstract⁷ for the remembrance of such places, and goes to them by his note: There is no hiding you in the house.

Fal. I'll go out then.

Mrs. Ford. If you go out in your own semblance, you die, sir John; unless you go out disguis'd— How might we disguise him?

Mrs. Page. Alas the day, I know not. There is no woman's gown big enough for him; otherwise, he might put on a hat, a muffler, and a kerchief, and so escape.

Fal. Good hearts, devise something: any extremity, rather than a mischief.

Mrs. Ford. My maid's aunt, the fat woman of Brentford, has a gown above.

Mrs. Page. On my word, it will serve him; she's as big as he is: and there's her thrum hat, and her muffler too⁸: Run up, sir John.

Mrs.

⁷ an abstract—] i. e. a list, an inventory. STEEVENS.
⁸ her thrum hat, and her muffler too:—] The thrum is the end of a weaver's warp, and we may suppose, was used for

Mrs. Ford. Go, go, sweet fir John : mistress Page, and I, will look some linen for your head.

Mrs. Page. Quick, quick ; we'll come dress you straight : put on the gown the while. [Exit Falstaff.]

Mrs. Ford. I would, my husband would meet him in this shape : he cannot abide the old woman of Brentford ; he swears, she's a witch ; forbade her my house, and hath threatened to beat her.

Mrs. Page. Heaven guide him to thy husband's cudgel ; and the devil guide his cudgel afterwards !

Mrs. Ford. But is my husband coming ?

Mrs. Page. Ay, in good sadness, is he ; and talks of the basket too, howsoever he hath had intelligence.

Mrs. Ford. We'll try that ; for I'll appoint my men to carry the basket again, to meet him at the door with it, as they did last time.

Mrs. Page. Nay, but he'll be here presently : let's go dress him like the witch of Brentford.

Mrs. Ford. I'll first direct my men what they shall do with the basket. Go up, I'll bring linen for him straight.

Mrs. Page. Hang him, dishonest varlet ! we cannot misuse him enough.

We'll leave a proof, by that which we will do,

Wives may be merry, and yet honest too :

We do not act, that often jest and laugh ;

'Tis old but true, Still swine eat all the draught.

for the purpose of making coarse hats. In the Midsummer Night's Dream :

“ O fates, come, come,

“ Cut thread and thrum.”

A muffler was some part of dress that covered the face. So, in the Cobler's Prophecy, 1594 :

“ Now is she bare-fac'd to be seen :—strait on her Muffler goes.”

Again, in Laneham's account of Queen Elizabeth's entertainment at Kenelworth castle, 1575 : “ —his mother lent him a nu mufflar for a napkin, that was tyed to hiz gyrdle for lozyng.”

STEVENS.

Mrs.

Mrs. Ford. Go, first, take the basket again on your shoulders; your master is hard at door; if he bid you set it down, obey him: quickly, dispatch.

[Exeunt Mrs. Page and Mrs. Ford.]

Enter Servants with the basket.

1 Serv. Come, come, take up.

2 Serv. Pray heaven, it be not full of the knight again.

1 Serv. I hope not; I had as lief bear so much lead.

Enter Ford, Shallow, Page, Caius, and Sir Hugh Evans.

Ford. Ay, but if it prove true, master Page, have you any way then to unfool me again?—Set down the basket, villain:—Somebody call my wife:—Youth in a basket!—Oh, you panderly rascals! there's a knot, a gang, a pack, a conspiracy, against me: Now shall the devil be sham'd. What! wife, I say! come, come forth; behold what honest cloaths you send forth to bleaching.

Page. Why, this passes! Master Ford, you are not to go loose any longer; you must be pinion'd.

Eva. Why, this is lunatics! this is mad as a mad dog!

Shal. Indeed, master Ford, this is not well; indeed.

—this passes!] The force of the phrase I did not understand when our former impression of Shakspeare was prepared; and therefore gave these two words as part of an imperfect sentence. One of the obsolete senses of the verb, to pass, is, to go beyond bounds. So, in Sir Clyomon, &c. Knight of the Golden Shield, 1599:

“I have such a deal of substance here when Brian's men are slain,

“That it passeth. Oh that I had while to stay!”

Again, in the translation of the Menæchmi, 1595: “This passeth, that I meet with none, but thus they vex me with strange speeches.” STEEVENS.

Enter

Enter Mrs. Ford.

Ford. So say I too, fir.—Come hither, mistress Ford;—mistress Ford, the honest woman, the modest wife, the virtuous creature, that hath the jealous fool to her husband!—I suspect without cause, mistress, do I?

Mrs. Ford. Heaven be my witness, you do, if you suspect me in any dishonesty.

Ford. Well said, brazen-face; hold it out.—Come forth, firrah. [Pulls the cloaths out of the basket.]

Page. This passes.

Mrs. Ford. Are you not ashamed? let the cloaths alone.

Ford. I shall find you anon.

Eva. 'Tis unreasonable! Will you take up your wife's cloaths? come away.

Ford. Empty the basket, I say.

Mrs. Ford. Why, man, why,——

Ford. Master Page, as I am a man, there was one convey'd out of my house yesterday in this basket; Why may not he be there again? In my house I am sure he is: my intelligence is true; my jealousy is reasonable; Pluck me out all the linen.

Mrs. Ford. If you find a man there, he shall die a flea's death.

Page. Here's no man.

Shal. By my fidelity, this is not well, master Ford; this wrongs you.

Eva. Master Ford, you must pray, and not follow the imaginations of your own heart: this is jealousies.

Ford. Well, he's not here I seek for.

——this wrongs you.] This is below your character, unworthy of your understanding, injurious to your honour. So, in The Taming of the Shrew, Bianca, being ill treated by her rugged sister, says:

“You wrong me much, indeed you wrong yourself.”

JOHNSON.

Page.

Page. No, nor no where else but in your brain.

Ford. Help to search my house this one time: if I find not what I seek, shew no colour for my extremity, let me for ever be your table-sport; let them say of me, As jealous as Ford, that search'd a hollow wall-nut for his wife's leman². Satisfy me once more, once more search with me.

Mrs. Ford. What ho, mistress Page! come you, and the old woman down; my husband will come into the chamber.

Ford. Old woman! what old woman's that?

Mrs. Ford. Why, it is my maid's aunt of Brentford.

Ford. A witch, a quean, an old cozening quean! Have I not forbid her my house? She comes of errands, does she? We are simple men; we do not know what's brought to pass under the profession of fortune-telling. She works by charms³, by spells, by the figure, and such daubery⁴ as this is: beyond our element: we know nothing.—Come down, you witch; you hag you, come down, I say.

Mrs. Ford. Nay, good, sweet husband;—good gentlemen, let him not strike the old woman.

Enter Falstaff in women's cloaths, led by Mrs. Page.

Mrs. Page. Come, mother Prat, come, give me your hand.

Ford. I'll prat her:—Out of my doors, you witch! [Beats him.] you hag, you baggage, you poucat, ² — his wife's leman.] Leman, i. e. lover, is derived from loef, Dutch, beloved, and man. STEEVENS.

³ She works by charms, &c.] Concerning some old woman of Brentford, there are several ballads; among the rest, Julian of Brentford's last Will and Testament, 1599. STEEVENS.

⁴ such daubery—] Dauberics are disguises. So, in K. Edgar says; “I cannot daub it further.” STEEVENS.

you ' ronyon ! out ! out ! I'll conjure you, I'll fortune-tell you. [Exit Fal.

Mrs. Page. Are you not asham'd ? I think, you have kill'd the poor woman.

Mrs. Ford. Nay, he will do it :—'Tis a goodly credit for you.

Ford. Hang her, witch !

Eva. By yea and no, I think, the 'oman is a witch indeed : I like not when a 'omans has a great peard⁶ ; I spy a great peard under his muffler.

Ford. Will you follow, gentlemen ? I beseech you, follow ; see but the issue of my jealousy : if I cry out thus upon no trail, never trust me when I open again.

⁵ ——— ronyon ! —] Ronyon, applied to a woman, means, as far as can be traced, much the same with scall or scab spoken of a man. JOHNSON.

So, in Macbeth :

" Aroint thee witch, the rump-fed ronyon cries." From Rogneau, Fr. So again : " The roynish clown," in As you like it. STEEVENS.

⁶ ——— a great peard ; —] One of the marks of a supposed witch, was a beard. So in Macbeth :

" ——— you should be women,

" And yet your beards forbid me to interpret

" That you are so."

Again, in the Duke's Mistress, 1638 :

" ——— a chin, without all controversy, good

" To go a fishing with ; a witches beard on't."

STEEVENS.

⁷ ——— I spy a great peard under his muffler.] As the second stratagem, by which Falstaff escapes, is much the grosser of the two, I wish it had been practised first. It is very unlikely that Ford, having been so deceived before, and knowing that he had been deceived, would suffer him to escape in so slight a disguise.

JOHNSON.

⁸ — cry out thus upon no trail, —] The expression is taken from the hunters. Trail is the scent left by the passage of the game. To cry out, is to open or bark. JOHNSON.

So, in Hamlet :

" How cheerfully on the false trail they cry :

" Oh this is counter, ye false Danish dogs !" STE

Page. Let's obey his humour a little further: Come, gentlemen. [Exeunt.]

Mrs. Page. Trust me, he beat him most pitifully.

Mrs. Ford. Nay, by the mass, that he did not; he beat him most unpitifully, methought.

Mrs. Page. I'll have the cudgel hallow'd, and hung o'er the altar; it hath done meritorious service.

Mrs. Ford. What think you? may we, with the warrant of woman-hood, and the witness of a good conscience, pursue him with any further revenge?

Mrs. Page. The spirit of wantonness is, sure, scar'd out of him; if the devil have him not in fee-simple, with fine and recovery, he will never, I think, in the way of waste, attempt us again⁹.

Mrs. Ford. Shall we tell our husbands how we have served him?

Mrs. Page. Yea, by all means; if it be but to scrape the figures out of your husband's brains. If they can find in their hearts, the poor unvirtuous fat knight shall be any further afflicted, we two will be still the ministers.

Mrs. Ford. I'll warrant, they'll have him publicly sham'd: and; methinks, there would be no period¹⁰ to the jest, should he not be publicly sham'd.

Mrs. Page. Come, to the forge with it then, shape it: I would not have things cool. [Exeunt.]

⁹ —in the way of waste, attempt us again.] i. e. he will not make further attempts to ruin us, by corrupting our virtue, and destroying our reputation STEEVENS.

¹⁰ —no period—] Shakespeare seems, by no period, to mean, no proper catastrophe. Of this Hamner was so well persuaded, that he thinks it necessary to read —no right period. STEEVENS.

SCENE III.

The Garter inn.Enter Host and Bardolph.

Bard. Sir, the Germans desire to have three of your horses: the duke himself will be to-morrow at court, and they are going to meet him.

Host. What duke should that be, comes so secretly? I hear not of him in the court: let me speak with the gentlemen; they speak English?

Bard. Sir, I'll call them to you.

Host. They shall have my horses; but I'll make them pay, I'll sauce them: they have had my houses a week at command; I have turk'd away my other guests: they must come off; I'll sauce them; come.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE

² ——— they must come off; —] This never can be our poet's or his host's meaning. To come off being, in other terms, to go foot-free. We must read, “come off,” i. e. clear their reckoning.

WARBURTON.

To come off, signifies, in our author, sometimes, to be uttered with spirit and volubility. In this place it seems to mean what is in our time expressed by to come down, to pay liberally and readily. These accidental and colloquial senses are the disgrace of language, and the plague of commentators. JOHNSON.

To come off, is, to pay. In this sense it is used by Massinger, in The Unnatural Combat, act IV. sc. ii. where a wench, demanding money of the father to keep his bastard, says: “Will you come off, sir?” Again, in Decker's If this be not a good Play the Devil is in it, 1612:

“Do not your gallants come off roundly then?”

Again, in Heywood's If you know not me you know Nobody, 1633 p. 2: “——— and then if he will not come off, carry him to the compter.” Again, in A Trick to catch the Old One, 1616:

“Hark in thine ear:—will he come off think I thou, and pay my debts?”

Again, in the Return from Parnassus, 1606:

“It is his meaning I should come off.”

Again.

S C E N E IV.

Ford's house.

Enter Page, Foyd, Mrs. Page, Mrs. Ford, and Sir Hugh Evans.

Evā. 'Tis one of the best discretions of a 'omans as ever I did look upon.

Page. And did he send you both these letters at an instant?

Mrs. Page. Within a quarter of an hour.

Ford. Pardon me, wife: Henceforth do what thou wilt;

I rather will suspect the sun with cold, Than

Again, in The Widow, by B. Jonson, Fletcher, and Middleton, 1652: "I am forty dollars better for that: an 'twould come off quicker 'twere nere a whit the worse for me." Again, in A merye Jest of a Man called Horologlas, bl. l. no date: "Therefore come off lightly, and geve me my mony." STEEVENS.

"They must come off," says mine host; 'I'll sauce them." This passage has exercised the critics. It is altered by Dr. Warburton; but there is no corruption, and Mr. Steevens has rightly interpreted it. The quotation however from Maffinger, which is referred to likewise by Mr. Edwards in his Canons of Criticism, scarcely satisfied Mr. Heath, and still less the last editor, who gives us, "They must not come off." It is strange that any one conversant in old language, should hesitate at this phrase. Take another quotation or two, that the difficulty may be effectually removed for the future. In John Heywood's play of the Four P's, the pedlar says:

"If you be willing to buy,
Lay down money, come off quickly."

In The Widow, by Jonson, Fletcher, and Middleton, — "if he will come off roundly, he'll set him free too." And, again, in Fennor's Comptor's Commonwealth: — "except I would come off roundly, I should be bar'd of that priviledge," &c. FARMER.

The phrase is used by Chaucer, Friar's Tale, 338. edit. UNY:

"Come off, and let me riden hastily,
Give me twelve pence; I may no longer tarie."

TARWHITT.

[rather will suspect the sun with cold,] Thus the modern edi-

The old ones read — with gold, which may mean, I re-

Than thee with wantonneſs : now doth thy honour
ſtand,

In him that was of late an heretick,
As firm as faith.

Page. 'Tis well, 'tis well ; no more.
Be not as extreme in ſubmiſſion,
As in offence ;

But let our plot go forward : let our wives
Yet once again, to make us publick ſport,
Appoint a meeting with this old fat fellow,
Where we may take him, and diſgrace him for it.

Ford. There is no better way than that they ſpoke of.

Page. How ! to ſend him word they'll meet him in the park

At midnight ! ſie, ſie ; he will never come.

Eva. You ſay, he hath been thrown into the river ; and hath been grievouſly peaten, as an old 'oman : methinks, there ſhould be terrors in him, that he ſhould not come ; methinks, his fleſh is puniſh'd, he ſhall have no deſires.

Page. So think I too.

Mrs. Ford. Deviſe but how you'll uſe him when he comes,

And let us two deviſe to bring him hither.

Mrs. Page. There is an old tale goes, that Herne
the hunter,

Sometime a keeper here in Windſor foreſt ;
Doth all the winter time, at ſtill midnight,
Walk round about an oak, with great ragg'd horns ;

ther will ſuſpect the ſun can be a thief, or be corrupted by a bribe, than thy honour can be betrayed to wantonneſs. Mr. Rowe ſilently made the change, which ſucceeding editors have as ſilently adopted. A thought of a ſimilar kind occurs in Hon. IV. Part I.

“ Shall the bleſſed ſun of heaven prove a miſer ? ”

I have not, however, diſplaced Mr. Rowe's emendation ; as a zeal to preſerve old readings without diſtinction, may ſometimes prove as injurious to the author's reputation, as a deſire to introduce new ones, without attention to the quaintneſs of phraſeology in their uſe. STEEVENS.

And

And there he blasts the tree, ⁴ and takes the cattle ;
 And makes milch-kine yield blood, and shakes a chain
 In a most hideous and dreadful manner :
 You have heard of such a spirit ; and well you know,
 The superstitious idle-headed eld ⁵
 Receiv'd, and did deliver to our age,
 This tale of Herne the hunter for a truth.

Page. Why; yet there want not many, that do fear
 In deep of night to walk by this Herne's oak :
 But what of this ?

⁶ Mrs. Ford. Marry, this is our device ; —
 That Falstaff at that oak shall meet with us.
 We'll send him word to meet us in the field,
 Disguis'd like Herne, with huge horns on his head.

Page. Well, let it not be doubted but he'll come,
 And in this shape ; When you have brought him thither,

What

⁴ — and takes the cattle;] To take, in Shakespeare, signifies to seize or strike with a disease, to blast. So, in Lear :

“ — Strike her young bones ;”

“ Ye taking airs, with lameness.” JOHNSON.
 So, in Markham's Treatise of Horses, 1695, chap. . . . “ Of a horse that is taken. A horse that is bereft of his feeling, moving, or stirring, is said to be taken, and in sooth so hee is, in that he is arrested by so villanous a disease ; yet some farriers, not well understanding the ground of the disease, counter the word taken, to be stricken by some planet or evil-spirit, which is false, &c.” Thus our poet :

“ No planets strike, no fairy takes.” TOLLET.

⁵ — idle-headed eld] Eld seems to be used here, for what our poet calls in Macbeth — the olden time. It is employed in Measure for Measure, to express age and decrepitude :

“ — doth beg the alms

“ Of palsied eld.” STELVENS.

⁶ Mrs. Ford. Marry, this is our device ; —

That Falstaff at that oak shall meet with us.

Page. Well, let it not be doubted, but he'll come,

And in this shape ; when you have brought him thither.] Thus this passage has been transmitted down to us, from the time of the first edition by the players : but what was this shape, in which staff was to be appointed to meet ? For the women have not said

What shall be done with him? what is your plot?

Mrs. Page. That likewise we have thought upon, and thus :

Nan Page my daughter, and my little son,
And three or four more of their growth, we'll dress
Like urchins⁷, ouches, and fairies, green and white,
With rounds of waxen tapers on their heads,
And rattles in their hands; upon a sudden,
As Falstaff, she, and I, are newly met,
Let them from forth a saw-pit rush at once⁸
With some dissu'd song : upon their sight,
We two in great amazedness will fly :
Then let them all encircle him about,
⁹ And, fairy-like, to pinch the unclean knight ;

And

said one word to ascertain it. This makes it more than suspicious, the defect in this point must be owing to some wise retrenchment. The two intermediate lines, which I have restored from the old quarto, are absolutely necessary, and clear up the matter

THEOBALD.

⁷ — urchins, ouches, —] The primitive signification of urchin is a hedge-hog. In this sense it is used in the Tempest. Hence it comes to signify any thing little and dwarfish. Ouch is the Teutonic word for a fairy or goblin. STEEVENS.

⁸ With some dissu'd song : —] A dissu'd song is one that strikes out into wild ranting beyond the bounds of nature, such as those whose subject is fairy land. WARBURTON.

Dissu'd may mean confused. So in Stowe's Chronicle, p. 553 : "Rue, quoth he, (i. e. Cardinal Wolsey,) speak you Welch to them: I doubt not but thy speech shall be more dissu'd to him, than his French can be to thee." TOLIER.

⁹ And, fairy-like, —] Shakespeare may mean such irregular songs as mad people sing. Edgar, in A. Lear, when he has determined to assume the appearance of a travelling lunatic, declares his resolution to use his speech, i. e. to give it the turn peculiar to madness. STEEVENS.

⁹ And, fairy-like, to pinch the unclean knight ;] The grammar requires us to read:

And, fairy-like too, pinch the unclean knight. WARB.

This should perhaps be written to-pinch, as one word. This use of to in conjunction with verbs, is very common in Gower and Chaucer, but must have been rather antiquated in the time of Shakespeare. See, Gower, De Confessio Amantis, B. iv. fol. 1 :

"All to-tore is myn arnie."

And ask him, why, that hour of fairy revel,
In their so sacred paths he dares to tread
In shape prophane ?

Mrs. Ford. And till he tell the truth,
Let the supposed fairies pinch him sound¹,
And burn him with their tapers.

Mrs. Page. The truth being known,
We'll all present ourselves ; dis-horn the spirit,
And mock him home to Windsor.

Ford. The children must
Be practis'd well to this, or they'll ne'er do't.

Eva. I will teach the children their behaviours ; and I will be like a jack-an-apes also, to burn the knight with my taper.

Ford. This will be excellent. I'll go buy them vizards.

Mrs. Page. My Nan shall be the queen of all the fairies,
Finely attired in a robe of white.

Page. ² That silk will I go buy ; and, in that time Shall

And Chaucer, Reeve's Tale, 1169 :

“ ————mouth and nose to-broke.”

The construction will otherwise be very hard. TYRWHITT.

I add a few more instances to shew that this use of the preposition to was not entirely antiquated. Spenser's F. Q. b. iv. c. 7 :

“ With briars and bushes all to-rent and scratched.”

Again, b. v. c. 3 :

“ With locks all loose, and raiment all to-torn.”

Again, b. v. c. 9 :

“ Made of strange stuffe, but all to-woorne and ragged,

“ And underneath the breech was all to-terne and jagged.”

Again, in the Three Lords of London, 1590 :

“ The post at which he runs, and all to-burns it.”

Again, in Arden of Feversham, 1592 :

“ Catchet fartin doublet, all to-torn.” SIEEVENS.

“ [ch him sound,] i: e. soundly. The adjective used as an adverb. The modern editors read ——— round.” SIEEVENS.

² That silk will I go buy ; — and, in that time] Mr. Theobald, referring that time to the time of buying the silk, alters it to time. But there

Shall master Slender steal my Nan away, [Aside.
And marry her at Eaton.—Go, send to Falstaff straight.

Ford. Nay, I'll to him again in the name of Brook :
He'll tell me all his purpose. Sure, he'll come.

Mrs. Page. Fear not you that : Go, get us properties³
And *tricking for our fairies.

Eva. Let us about it : It is admirable pleasures, and fery honest knaveries. [Ex. Page, Ford, and Evans.

Mrs. Page. Go, mistress Ford,
Send Quickly to fir John, to know his mind.

[Exit Mrs. Ford.

I'll to the doctor ; he hath my good will,
And none but he, to marry with Nan Page.
That Slender, though well landed, is an idiot ;
And he my husband best of all affects,
The doctor is well money'd, and his friends'
Potent at court ; he, none but he shall have her,
Though twenty thousand worthier come to crave her.

[Exit.

there is no need of any change ; that time evidently relating to the time of the mask with which Falstaff was to be entertained, and which makes the whole subject of this dialogue. Therefore the common reading is right. WARBURTON.

³ ——— properties ———] Properties are little incidental necessities to a theatre, exclusive of scenes and dresses. So, in the Taming the Shrew : “ ——— a shoulder of mutton for a *prop*ty.”

STEEVENS.

⁴ ——— tricking for our fairies.] To trick, is to dress out. So,
in Milton :

“ Not trick'd and frounc'd as she was wont,

“ With the Attic boy to hunt ;

“ But kerchief'd in a hemely cloud.” STEEVENS.

S C E N E

S C E N E V.

The Garter inn.Enter Host and Simple.

Host. What would'st thou have, boor? what, thick-skin? speak, breathe, discuss; brief, short, quick, snap.

Simp. Marry, sir, I come to speak with sir John Falstaff from master Slender.

Host. There's his chamber, his house, his castle, his standing-bed, and truckle-bed; 'tis painted about with the story of the prodigal, fresh and new: Go, knock and call; he'll speak like an *Anthropophaginian*⁷ unto thee: Knock, I say.

Simp. There's an old woman, a fat woman gone up into his chamber; I'll be so bold as stay, sir, 'till she come down: I come to speak with her, indeed.

Host. Ha! a fat woman! the knight may be robb'd: I'll call.—Bully knight! Bully sir John! speak

⁵ —what, thick-skin?] I meet with this term of abuse in Warner's Albions England, 1602, book vi. chap. 30:

“That he, so foul a thick-skin should so fair a lady catch.”

STEEVENS.

⁶ —standing-bed, and truckle-bed;—] The usual furniture of chambers in that time was a standing-bed, under which was a truckle, truckle, or running bed. In the standing-bed lay the master, and in the truckle-bed the servant. So, in Hall's Account of a Servile Tutor:

“He lieth in the truckle-bed,

“While his young master lieth o'er his head.” JOHNSON.

So, in the Return from Parnassus, 1606:

“When I lay in a trundle-bed under my tutor.”

And here the tutor has the upper bed. Again, in Heywood's Royal King, &c. 1637: “—shew these gentlemen into a close room with a standing-bed in't, and a truckle too.” STEEVENS.

⁷ —Anthropophaginian—] i. e. a cannibal. See Othello, act I. sc. iii. It is here used as a sounding word to astonish Simple. Ipse, which follows, has no more meaning. STEEVENS.

from

from thy lungs military: Art thou there? it is thine host, thine Ephesian, calls.

Falstaff abor

Fal. How now, mine host?

Host. Here's a 'Bohemian-Tartar' carries the coming down of thy fat woman: Let her descend, 'bully, let her descend; my chambers are honourable: Fie! privacy? fie!

Enter Falstaff.

Fal. There was, mine host, an old fat woman even now with me; but she's gone.

Simp. Pray you, fir, 'was't not the wise woman of Brentford?

Fal. Ay, marry was it, 'mussel-shell; What would you with her?

Simp. My master, fir, master Slender sent to her, seeing her go through the street, to know, fir, whether one Nym, fir, that beguil'd him of a chain, had the chain, or no.

Fal. I spake with the old woman about it.

Simp. And what says she, I pray, fir?

Fal. Marry, she says, that the very same man, that beguil'd master Slender of his chain, 'cozen'd him of it.

Simp. I would I could have spoken with the wo-

^s. — Bohemian-Tartar —] The French call a Bohemian what we call a Gypsy; but I believe the Host means nothing more than, by a wild appellation, to insinuate that Simple makes a strange appearance. JOHNSON.

In Germany, there were several companies of vagabonds, &c. called Tartars and Zigans. "These were the same in my opinion," says Mezeray, "as those the French call Bohemians, and the English Gypsies." Bulteel's Translation of Mezeray's History of France, under the year 1417. TOLLET.

² — mussel-shell; —] He calls poor Simple mussel-shell, because he stands with his mouth open. JOHNSON.

mal

man herself; I had other things to have spoken with her too, from him.

Fal. What are they? let us know.

Hof. Ay, come; quick.

Simp. I may not conceal them, sir.

Fal. Conceal them, or thou dy'st.

Simp. Why, sir, they were nothing but about mistress Anne Page; to know, if it were my master's fortune to have her, or no.

Fal. 'Tis, 'tis his fortune.

Simp. What, sir?

Fal. To have her—or no: Go; say the woman told me so.

Simp. May I be so bold to say so, sir?

Fal. Ay, sir, Tike; like who more bold.

Simp. I thank your worship: I shall make my master glad with these tidings. [Exit Simple.]

Hof. Thou art clerkly¹, thou art clerkly, sir John: Was there a wise woman with thee?

Fal. Ay, that there was, mine host; one, that hath taught me more wit than ever I learn'd before in my life: and I paid nothing for it neither, but was paid for my learning².

Enter Bardolph.

Bard. Out, alas, sir! cozenage! meer cozenage!

¹ Simple. May I be so bold to say so, sir?

Falstaff. Ay, sir, like who more bold.] In the first edition, the latter speech stands:

I Tike, who more bolde. — And should plainly be read here, Ay, sir Tike, &c. FARMER.

² — clerkly, —] i. e. scholar-like. So, in the Two Gentlemen of Verona:

— 'Tis very clerkly done. STEEVENS.

³ — paid nothing for it neither, but was paid for my learning.] He alludes to the beating which he had just received. The same play on words occurs in Cymbeline, act V. “ — sorry you have paid too much, and sorry that you are paid too much.”

STEEVENS.

Hof.

Host. Where be my horses? speak well of them, varletto.

Bard. Run away with the cozeners: for so soon as I came beyond Eaton, they threw me off, from behind one of them, in a slough of mire; and set spurs, and away, like three German devils, three Doctor Faustus's⁴.

Host. They are gone but to meet the duke, villain: do not say, they are fled; Germans are honest men.

Enter Sir Hugh Evans.

Eva. Where is mine host?

Host. What is the matter, sir?

Eva. Have a care of your entertainments: there is a friend of mine come to town, tells me, there is three couzin-germans, that has cozen'd all the hosts of Readings, of Maidenhead, of Colebrook, of horses and money. I tell you for good will, look you: you are wise, and full of gibes and vouting-stogs; and 'tis not convenient you should be cozen'd: Fare you well.

Enter Caius.

Caius. Vere is mine Host de farterre

Host. Here, master doctor, in perplexity, and doubtful dilemma.

Caius. I cannot tell wat is dat: But it is well-a-me, dat you make a grand preparation for a duke de Jamany: by my trot, dere is no duke, dat the court is know, to come: I tell you for good vill: adieu.

[Exit.]

Host. Hue and cry, villain, go! assist me, knight; I am undone:—fly, run, hue and cry, villain! I am undone!

[Exit.]

Fal. I would all the world might be cozen'd; for ⁴ —three German devils, three Doctor Faustus's.] John Faustus, commonly called Doctor Faustus, was a German. STEEVENS.

I have been cozen'd, and beaten too. If it should come to the ear of the court, how I have been transform'd, and how my transformation hath been wash'd and cudgel'd, they would melt me out of my fat, drop by drop, and liquor fishermens' boots with me; I warrant, they would whip me with their fine wits, till I were as crest-faln as a dry'd pear. I never prosper'd since I foreswore myself at ⁵ Primero. Well, if my wind were but long enough to say my prayers, I would repent.—

Enter Mistress Quickly.

Now! whence come you?

Quic. From the two parties, forsooth.

Fal. The devil take one party, and his dam the other, and so they shall be both bestow'd! I have suffer'd more for their sakes, more, than the villainous inconstancy of man's disposition is able to bear.

Quic. And have not they suffer'd? yes, I warrant; speciously one of them; mistress Ford, good heart, is beaten black and blue, that you cannot see a white spot about her.

Fal. What tell'st thou me of black and blue? I was beaten myself into all the colours of the rainbow; and I was like to be apprehended for the witch of Brentford; but that my admirable dexterity of wit, counterfeiting the ⁶ action of an old woman, deliver'd me,

⁵ — Primero.] A game at cards. JOHNSON.

— since I foreswore myself at Primero.] Primero was in Shakespeare's time the fashionable game. In the Earl of Northumberland's letters about the powder plot, Josc. Percy was playing at Primero on Sunday, when his uncle, the conspirator, called on him at Essex House. This game is again mentioned in our author's Hen. VIII. Percy.

⁶ — action of an old woman.—] What! was it any dexterity of wit in Sir John Falstaff to counterfeit the action of an old woman, in order to escape being apprehended for a witch? Surely, one would imagine, this was the readiest means to bring him into such a scrape: for none but old women have ever been suspected of being witches. The text must certainly be restor'd, a wood woman, • a crazy, me, the knave constable had set me i' the stocks, i' the common stocks, for a witch.

Quic. Sir, let me speak with you in your chamber : you shall hear how things go ; and, I warrant, to your content. Here is a letter will say somewhat. Good hearts, ' what ado is here to bring you together ! sure, one of you does not serve heaven well, that you are so cross'd.

Fal. Come up into my chamber. [Exeunt.

S C E N E VI.

Enter Fenton and Host.

Host. Master Fenton, talk not to me ; my mind is heavy, I will give over all.

Fent. Yet hear me speak : Assist me in my purpose, And, as I am a gentleman, I'll give thee A hundred pound in gold, more than your loss.

Host. I will hear you, master Fenton ; and I will, at the least, keep your counsel.

Fent. From time to time I have acquainted you With the dear love I bear to fair Anne Page ; Who, mutually, hath answer'd my affection (So far forth as herself might be her chuser) a crazy, frantick woman ; one too wild, and silly, and unmeaning, to have either the malice, or mischievous subtlety of a witch in her. THEOBALD.

This emendation is received by Sir Thomas Hanmer, but rejected by Dr. Warburton. To me it appears reasonable enough.

JOHNSON.

I am not certain that this change is necessary. Falstaff, by counterfeiting such weakness and infirmity, as would naturally be pitied in an old woman, averted the punishment to which he would otherwise have been subjected, on the supposition that he was a witch. STEEVENS.

' what ado is here to bring you together ! — } The great fault of this play is the frequency of expressions so profane, that no necessity of preserving character can justify them. There are laws of higher authority than those of criticism. JOHNSON.

Even

Even to my wish : I have a letter from her
Of such contents as you will wonder at ;
The mirth whereof's so larded with my matter,
That neither, singly, can be manifested,
Without the shew of both : For sir John Falstaff
Hath a great scene ; the image of the jest⁸

[Shewing a letter.
I'll shew you here at large. Hark, good mine host :
To-night at Herne's oak, just 'twixt twelve and one,
Must my sweet Nan present the fairy queen ;
The purpose why, is here⁹ ; in which disguise,
While other jests are something rank on foot¹,
Her father hath commanded her to slip
Away with Slender, and with him at Eaton
Immediately to marry : she hath consented : now, sir,
Her mother, even strong against that match²,
And firm for doctor Caius, hath appointed
That he shall likewise shuffle her away,
While other sports are tasking of their minds³,
And at the deanery, where a priest attends,
Straight marry her : to this her mother's plot
She, seemingly obedient, likewise hath
Made promise to the doctor :—Now, thus it rests ;
Her father means she shall be all in white ;
And in that habit, when Slender sees his time

⁸ — [the image of the jest] Image is representation. So, in K. Rich. III.

“ And liv'd by looking on his images.” STEEVENS.

— is here ; —] i. e. in the letter. STEEVENS.

— are somewhat rank on foot,] i. e. while they are hotly pursuing other merriment of their own. STEEVENS.

² — even strong against that match,] Thus the old copies. The modern editors read ever, but perhaps without necessity. Even strong, is as strong, with a similar degree of strength. So, in Hamlet : — even christian¹ is fellow christian. STEEVENS.

³ king of their minds,] So, in another play of our author :

— some things of weight

“ That task our thoughts concerning us and France.”

STEEVENS.

To

To take her by the hand, and bid her go,
 She shall go with him :—her mother hath intended,
 The better to devote ⁴ her to the doctor,
 (For they must all be mask'd and vizarded)
 That, quaint in green ⁵, she shall be loose enrob'd,
 With ribbands pendant, flaring 'bout her head ;
 And when the doctor spies his vantage ripe,
 To pinch her by the hand, and, on that token,
 The maid hath given consent to go with him.

Host. Which means she to deceive ? father or mother ?

Fent. Both, my good host, ~~to~~ go along with me :
 And here it rests,—that you'll procure the vicar
 To stay for me at church, 'twixt twelve and one,
 And, in the lawful name of marrying,
 To give our hearts united ceremony.

Host. Well, husband your device ; I'll to the vicar :
 Bring you the maid, you shall not lack a priest.

Fent. So shall I evermore be bound to thee ;
 Besides, I'll make a present recompence. [Exeunt.]

——to devote——] We might read—denote. So ^{as} ~~as~~ ^{forwards} :
 “ ——— the white will decipher her well enough.” STEEVENS.
⁵ ——— quaint in green, —— may mean fantastically drest in green. So, in Milton's Masque at Ludlow Castle :

“ ——— left the place,

“ And this quaint habit, breed astonishment.”

Quaintness, however, was anciently used to signify gracefulness. So, in Greene's Dialogue betwixt a He and She Coney-catcher, 1592 :
 “ I began to think what a handsome man he was, and wished that he would come and take a night's lodging with me, sitting in a duffop to think of the quaintness of his personage.” In the Two Gentlemen of Verona, act III. sc.i. quaintly is used for ingeniously :

“ ——— ladder quaintly made of cords.” STEEVENS.

ACT V. SCENE I.

Enter Falstaff and Mrs. Quickly.

Fal. Pr'ythee, no more prating;—go.—I'll hold: This is the third time; I hope, good luck lies in odd numbers. Away, go; they say, there is divinity in odd numbers, either in nativity, chance, or death.—Away.

Quic. I'll provide you a chain; and I'll do what I can to get you a pair of horns. [Exit Mrs. Quickly.]

Fal. Away, I say; time wears: hold up your head; and mince.

Enter Ford.

How now, master Brook? Master Brook, the matter will be known to-night, or never. Be you in the Park about midnight, at Herne's oak, and you shall see wonders.

Ford. Went you not to her yesterday, sir, as you told me you had appointed?

Fal. I went to her, master Brook, as you see, like a poor old man; but I came from her, master Brook, like a poor old woman. That same knave, Ford her husband, hath the finest mad devil of jealousy in him; master Brook, that ever govern'd frenzy. I will tell you.—He beat me grievously, in the shape of a woman; for in the shape of man, master Brook, I fear not Goliath with a weaver's beam; because I know also, life is a shuttle. I am in haste; go along with me; I'll tell you all, master Brook. Since I pluck'd

^s —hold up your head, and mince.] To mince is to walk with affected delicacy. So, in the Merchant of Venice:

“ —turn two mincing steps

“ Into a manly stride. STELVENS.

geese, play'd truant, and whipp'd top, I knew not what 'twas to be beaten, till lately. Follow me: I'll tell you strange things of this knave Ford; on whom to-night I will be reveng'd, and I will deliver his wife into your hand.—Follow: Strange things in hand, master Brook! follow.— [Exeunt.]

S C E N E II.

Windfor Park.

Enter Page, Shallow, and Slender.

Page. Come, come; we'll couch i' the castle-ditch, till we see the light of our fairies.—Remember, son Slender, my daughter.

Slen. Ay, forsooth; I have spoke with her, and we have a nay-word⁷ how to know one another. I come to her in white, and cry, mum; she cries, budget; and by that we know one another.

Shal. That's good too; But what needs either your mum, or her budget? the white will decipher her well enough.—It hath struck ten o'clock.

Page. The night is dark; light and spirits will become it well. Heaven prosper our sport! ⁸ No man means evil but the devil, and we shall know him by his horns. Let's away; follow me. [Exeunt.]

S C E N E

⁷ — a nay-word —] i. e. a watch-word. Mrs. Quickly has already used it in this sense. STEEVENS.

⁸ — No man means evil but the devil, —] This is a double blunder; for some, of whom this was spoke, were women. We should read them, No one means. WARBURTON.

There is no blunder. In the ancient interludes and moralities, the beings of supreme power, excellence, or depravity, are occasionally styled men. So, in Much Ado about Nothing, Dogberry says: "God's a good man." Again, in an Epitaph, part of which has been borrowed as an absurd one, by Mr. Pope and his associates, who were not very well acquainted with ancient phraseology: "Do

S C E N E. III.

Enter Mistress Page, Mistress Ford, and Dr. Caius.

Mrs. Page. Master doctor, my daughter is in green : when you see your time, take her by the hand, away with her to the deanery, and dispatch it quickly : Go before into the park ; we two must go together.

Caius. I know vat I have to do ; Adieu. . . [Exit.

Mrs. Page. Fare you well, sir. My husband will not rejoice so much at the abuse of Falstaff, as he will chafe at the doctor's marrying my daughter : but 'tis no matter ; better a little chiding, than a great deal of heart-break.

Mrs. Ford. Where is Nan now, and her troop of fairies ? ' and the Welch devil Evans ?

Mrs. Page. They are all couch'd in a pit hard by Herne's oak¹, with obscur'd lights ; which, at the very instant of Falstaff's and our meeting, they will at once display to the night.

“ Dr. all we can,

“ Death is a man

“ That never spareth none.”

Again, in Jeronimo, or the First Part of the Spanish Tragedy, 1605 :

“ You're the last man I thought on, save the devil.”

STEEVENS.

“ — and the Welch devil Evans ? ” The former impression, and the Welch devil Herne ? But Falstaff was to represent Herne, and he was no Welchman. Where was the attention or sagacity of our editors, not to observe that Mrs. Ford is enquiring for Evans by the name of the Welch devil ? Dr. Thirlby likewise discover'd the blunder of this passage. THEOBALD.

• I suppose only the letter H was set down in the MS ; and therefore, instead of Hugh (which seems to be the true reading,) the editors substituted Herne. STEEVENS.

¹ — in a pit hard by Herne's oak, —] An oak, which may be that alluded to by Shakespeare, is still standing close to a pit in Windsor forest. It is yet shewn as the oak of Herne.

STEEVENS.

Mrs. Ford. That cannot chuse but amaze him.

Mrs. Page. If he be not amaz'd, he will be mock'd; if he be amaz'd, he will every way be mock'd.

Mrs. Ford. We'll betray him finely.

Mrs. Page. Against such lewdsters, and their lechery, Those that betray them do no treachery.

Mrs. Ford. The hour draws on; To the oak, to the oak! [Exeunt.]

S C E N E IV.

Enter Sir Hugh Evans and Fairies.

Eva. Trib, trib, fairies; come; and remember your parts: be pold, I pray you; follow me into the pit; and when I give the watch-ords, do as I bid you; Come, come; trib, trib. [Exeunt.]

S C E N E V.

Enter Falstaff with a buck's head on.

Fal. The Windsor bell hath struck twelve; the minute draws on: Now, the hot-blooded gods assist me!—Remember, Jove, thou wast a bull for thy Europa; love set on thy horns.—Oh powerful love! that, in some respects, makes a beast a man; in some other, a man a beast.—You were also, Jupiter, a swan, for the love of Leda;—Oh, omnipotent love! how near the god drew to the complexion of a goose?—A fault done first in the form of a beast;—O Jove, a beastly fault!—and then another fault in the semblance of a fowl;—think on't, Jove; a foul fault.—When gods have hot backs, what shall poor men do?

For

² — When gods have hot backs, what shall poor men do? Shakespeare had perhaps in his thoughts, the argument which Cherea employed in a similar situation. Ter. Eun. act III. sc. v.

“ — — — Quia

For me, I am here a Windsor stag; and the fattest, I think, i' the forest: •Send me a cool rut-time, Jove, or who can blame me to piss my tallow? •Who comes here? my doe?

Enter Mistress Ford and Mistress Page.

Mrs. Ford. Sir John? art thou there, my deer? my male deer?

Fal. My doe with the black scut?—Let the sky rain potatoes; let it thunder to the tune of Green Sleeves; hail kissing-comfits, and snow eringoes; let there come a tempest of provocation, I will shelter me here.

Mrs.

“ ————— Quia consimilem luserat

“ Jam olim ille ludum, impendio magis animus gaudebat mihi
“ Deum sese in hominem convertisse, atque per alienas tegulas “ Venisse clanculum per impluvium, fucum factum mulieri.
“ At quem deum? qui templa cœli summa sonitu concutit.
“ Ego homuncio hoc non facerem? Ego vero illud ita feci, ac lubens.”

A translation of Terence was published in 1598. MALONE.

— Send me a cool rut-time, Jove, or who can blame me to piss my tallow?—] This, I find, is technical. In Tyrberville's Booke of Hunting, 1575: “During the time of their rut, the harts live with small sustenance. — The red mushroome helpeth well to make them pisse their greace, they are then in so vehement heate, &c.” FARMER.

In Ray's Collection of Proverbs, the phrase is yet further explained: “He has piss'd his tallow. This is spoken of bucks who grow lean after rutting-time, and may be applied to men.”

STEEVENS.

• — rain potatoes; —] Potatoes, when they were first introduced in England, were supposed to be strong provocatives. • See Mr. Collins's note on a passage in Troilus and Cressida, act V. sc. ii.

STEEVENS.

• • — kissing-comfits, —] These were sugar-plums, perfum'd to make the breath sweet. So, in Webster's Duchess of Malfy, 1623:

“ ————— Sure your pistol holds

“ Nothing but perfumes or kissing-comfits.”

In Sweetnam Arraign'd, 1620, these confections are called—“kissing-causes.” “Their very breath is sophisticated with amber-pellets, and kissing-causes.” Again, in The Siege, or Love's Con-

Mrs. Ford. Mistress Page is come with me, sweet-heart.

Fal. ⁶ Divide me like a bribe-buck, each a haunch :
I will keep my sides to myself, my shoulders for the ⁷ fellow of this walk, and my horns I bequeath your husbands. Am I a woodman ? ha ! Speak I like Herne the hunter ?—Why, now is Cupid a child of conscience ; he makes restitution. As I am a true spirit, welcome ! [Noise within.

Mrs. Page. Alas ! what noise ?

Mrs. Ford. Heaven forgive our sins !

Fal. What shall this be ?

Mrs. Ford.

Mrs. Page. } Away, away,

[The women run out.]

Fal. I think the devil will not have me damn'd, vert, by Cartwright : “ — kept rust-plumbs continually in his mouth, &c.” Again, in A Very Woman, by Massinger :

“ Consists of ambergris to help our kisses.”

For eating these, queen Mab may be said, in Romeo and Juliet, to plague their lips with blisters. STEEVENS.

Divide me like a bribe-buck, —] Thus all the old copies, mistakenly ; it must be bribe-buck ; i. e. a buck sent for a bribe.

THEOBALD.

⁷ — fellow of this walk, —] Who the fellow is, or why he keeps his shoulders for him, I do not understand. JOHNSON.

To the keeper the shoulders and humbles belong as perquisite.

GRAY.

So, in Friar Bacon, and Friar Bungay, 1599 :

“ Butter and cheese, and humbles of a deer,

“ Such as poor keepers have within their lodge”

So, in Holinshed, 1556, vol. I. p. 204 : “ The keeper, by a custom — hath the skin, head, unbles, chine and shoulders.”

STEEVENS.

A walk, is that district in a forest, to which the jurisdiction of a particular keeper extends. So, in Logge's Rosalynd, 1592 :

“ Tell me forester, under whom maintainest thou thy walk ?”

Again, ibid. “ Thus, for two or three days he walked up and down with his brother, to shew him all the commodities that belonged to his walk.” MALONE.

lest the oil that is in me should set hell on fire; he never would else cross me thus.

Enter Sir Hugh like a satyr; Quickly, and others, dress'd like fairies, with tapers.

Quic. Fairies, black, grey, green, and white,
You moon-shine revellers, and shades of night,

² You orphan-heirs of fixed destiny,
Attend your office, and your quality.—

Crier Hobgoblin, make the fairy o-yes.

Eva. Elves, list your names; silence, you airy toys?

Cricket,

³ You ORPHAN-heirs of fixed destiny,] But why orphan-heirs? Destiny, whom they succeeded, was yet in being. Doubtless the poet wrote:

You OUPHEN heirs of fixed destiny,

i. e. you elves, who minister, and succeed in some of the works of destiny. They are called, in this play, both before and afterwards, oupbes; here ouphen; en being the plural termination of Saxon nouns. For the word is from the Saxon Alpenn, lamie, dæ-mones. Or it may be understood to be an adjective, as wooden, woolen, golden, &c. WARBURTON.

• Dr. Warburton corrects orphan to ouphen; and not without plausibility, as the word oupbes occurs both before and afterwards. But, I fancy, in acquiescence to the vulgar doctrine, the address in this line is to a part of the troop, as mortals by birth, but adopted by the fairies: orphans in respect of their real parents, and now only dependent on destiny herself. A few lines from Spenser will sufficiently illustrate this passage:

“The man whom heavens have ordaind to be

“The spouse of Britomart is Artegall;

“He wonneth in the land of Fayeree,

“Yet is no Fairy borne, ne sib at all,

“To elves, but sprong of seed terrestriall,

“And whilome by false Faries stolen away,

“Whiles yet in infant cradle he did crall, &c.”

Edit. 1590. b. iii. ff. 26.

FARNER.

² Crier Hobgoblin, make the fairy o-yes.

Eva. Elves, list your names; silence, you airy toys.] These two lines were certainly intended to rhyme together, as the preceding and subsequent couplets do; and accordingly, in the old

Cricket, to Windsor chimneys shalt thou leap :
 Where fires thou find'st unrak'd, and hearths unswept,
 There pinch the maids as blue as bilberry¹ :
 Our radiant queen hates sluts, and sluttery.

Fal. They are fairies ; he, that speaks to them, shall die ;

I'll wink and cough ; No man their works must eye.
 [Lies down upon' his face.]

Eva. Where's Bede?—Go you, and where you find a maid,

That, ere she sleep, hath thrice her prayers said,

² Rein up the organs of her fantasy ;
 Sleep she as sound as careless infancy :

But

editions, the final words of each line are printed, eyes and town. This therefore is a striking instance of the inconvenience which has arisen from modernizing the orthography of Shakespeare.

TYRWHITT.

¹ —as bilberry.] The bilberry is the whortleberry. Fairies were always supposed to have a strong aversion to sluttery. Thus, in the old song of Robin Good Fellow. See Dr. Percy's Reliques, &c. vol. III :

“ When house or hearth doth sluttish lye,

“ I pinch the maidens black and blue, &c.”

STEVENS.

² RAISE up the organs of her fantasy ;] The sense of this speech is — that she, who had performed her religious duties, should be secure against the illusion of fancy ; and have her sleep, like that of infancy, undisturbed by disordered dreams. This was then the popular opinion, that evil spirits had a power over the fancy ; and, by that means, could inspire wicked dreams into those who, on their going to sleep, had not recommended themselves to the protection of heaven. So Shakespeare makes Imogen, on her lying down, say :

From fairies, and the tempters of the night,

Guard me, beseech ye !

As this is the sense, let us see how the common reading expresses it ;

Raise up the organs of her fantasy ;

i. e. inflame her imagination with sensual ideas ; which is just the contrary to what the poet would have the speaker say. We cannot therefore but conclude he wrote :

REIN up the organs of her fantasy ;

But those, as sleep, and think not on their sins,
Pinch them, arms, legs, backs, shoulders, sides, and shins.

Quic. About, about ;
Search Windsor castle, elves, within and out :
Strew good luck, ouches, on every sacred room ;
That it may stand till the perpetual doom,
3 In state as wholesome, as in state 'tis fit ;
4 Worthy the owner, and the owner it.

The

i. e. curb them, that she be no more disturbed by irregular imaginations, than children in their sleep. For he adds immediately :

Sleep she as sound as careless infancy.

So, in The Tempest :

" Give not dalliance too much the REIN."

And, in Measure for Measure :

" I give my sensual race the REIN."

To give the rein, being just the contrary to rein up. The same thought he has again in Macbeth :

" ——— Merciful powers !

" Restrain in me the cursed thoughts that nature

" Gives way to in repose." WARBURTON.

This is highly plausible ; and yet, raise up the organs of her fantasy, may mean, elevate her ideas above sensuality, exalt them to the noblest contemplation. STEEVENS.

" 3 In state as wholesome, ———] The Oxford editor, not knowing the meaning of wholesome, has altered it to,

In state as wholesome, and so has made the wish a most absurd one. For the site or situation must needs be what it is, till the general destruction. But wholesome here signifies integer. He wishes the castle may stand in its present state of perfection, which the following words plainly shew :

————— as in state 'tis fit. WARBURTON.

4 Worthy the owner, AND the owner it.] And cannot be the true reading. The context will not allow it ; and his court to queen Elizabeth directs us to another :

————— As the owner it.

For, sure he had more address than to content himself with wishing a thing to be, which his complaisance must suppose actually was, namely, the worth of the owner. WARBURTON.

Surely this change is unnecessary. The fairy wishes that the castle and its owner, till the day of doom, may be worthy of each other.

5 The several chairs of order look you scour
 With juice of balm, and every precious flower :
 Each fair instatement coat, and several crest,
 With loyal blazon, eyermore be blest !
 And nightly, meadow-fairies, look, you sing,
 Like to the Garter's compass, in a ring :
 The expresse that it bears, green let it be,
 More fertile-fresh than all the field to see ;
 And, Hony Soit Qui Maky Penſe, write,
 6 In emerald tufts, flowers purple, blue, and white ;
 Like

other. Queen Elizabeth's worth was not devolvable, as we have seen by the conduct of her foolish successor. The prayer of the fairy is therefore sufficiently reasonable, as a intelligible, without alteration. STEEVENS.

5 *The several chairs of order, look you scour
 With juice of balm, &c.* It was an article of our ancient luxury, to rub tables, &c. with aromatic herbs. Pliny informs us, that the Romans did the same, to drive away evil spirits. STEEVENS.

6 *In emerald-tufts, flowers PURPLE, blue, and white ;
 Like saphire, pearl, AND rich embroidery,* These lines are most miserably corrupted. In the words—Flowers purple, blue, and white—the purple is left uncompar'd. To remedy this, the editors, who seem to have been sensible of the imperfection of the comparison, read, AND rich embroidery; that is, according to them, as the blue and white flowers are compar'd to saphire and pearl, the purple is compar'd to rich embroidery. Thus, instead of mending one false step, they have made two, by bringing saphire, pearl, and rich embroidery under one predicament. The lines were wrote thus by the poet :

In emerald-tufts, flowers PURPLED, blue, and white ;

Like saphire, pearl, IN rich embroidery.

i. e. let there be blue and white flowers worked on the green-sward, like saphire and pearl in rich embroidery. To purple, is to over-lay with tinsel, gold thread, &c. so our ancestors called a certain lace of this kind of work a purpling-lace. 'Tis from the French pourfiler. So Spenser :

“ — she was yelad,

“ All in a silken camus, lilly white,

“ PURPLED upon, with many a folded plight.”

The change of and into in, in the second verse, is necessary. For flowers worked, or purpled in the grass, were not like saphire and pearl simply, but saphire and pearl in embroidery. How the corrupt reading and was introduced into the text, we have shewn above. WARBURTON.

Whdever

Like saphire, pearl, and rich embroidery,
 Buckled below fair knight-hood's bending knee; }
 Fairies use flowers for their ⁷ charactery.
 Away; disperse: But, till tis one o'clock,
 Our dance of custom, round about the oak
 Of Herne the hunter, let us not forget.

Eva. Pray you, lock hand in hand; yourselves in order set:

And twenty glow-worms shall our lanthorns be,
 To guide our measure round about the tree.

But, stay; I smell a man ⁸ of middle earth.

Fal. Heavens defend me from that Welch fairy!
 Lest he transform me to a piece of cheese!

Eva. Vile worm, thou wast o'er-look'd even in thy birth?

Quic.

Whoever is convinced by Dr. Warburton's note, will shew he has very little studied the manner of his author, whose splendid incorrectness in this instance, as in many others, is surely preferable to the insipid regularity proposed in its room.

STEEVENS.

⁷ ——— charactery.] For the matter with which they make letters. JOHNSON.

• So, in another of our author's plays:—

“All the charactery of my sad brows.”

i. e. all that seems to be written on them. STEEVENS.

⁸ ——— of middle earth.] Spirits are supposed to inhabit the ethereal regions, and fairies to dwell under ground, men therefore are in a middle station. JOHNSON.

So, in the ancient metrical romance of Syr Guy of Warwick,
 bl. l. no date:

“Thou mayst them flea with dint of swearde,

“And win the fayrest mayde of middle erde.”

, Again:

“————— the best knight

“That ever was in middle earde.”

• Again, in Gower, De Confessione Amantis, fol. 26:

“Adam, for pride lost his price

“In myddell erth.”

Again, in an ancient alliterative ode, quoted by Mr. Warton, in his History of English Poetry:

“Middel-ord for mon was made.” STEEVENS.

⁹ Vile worm, thou wast o'er-look'd even in thy birth.] The old copy reads—wild. That wild, which so often occurs in these plays,

Quic. 'With trial-fire touch me his finger-end :
If he be chaste, the flame will back descend,
And turn him to no pain ; but if he start,
It is the flesh of a corrupted heart.

Eva. A trial, come.——

[They burn him with their tapers, and pinch him.

Come, will this wood take fire ?

Fal. Oh, oh, oh !

Quic. Corrupt, corrupt, and tainted in 'desire !—
About him ; fairies ; 'sing a scornful rhyme :
And, as you trip, still pinch him to your time.

Eva. 'It is right ; indeed, he is full of lecheries and iniquity.

The SON.

Fie on sinful phantasy !

Fie on lust and luxury !

 Lust is but a bloody fire,*

Kindled with unchaste desire,

Few

plays, was not an error of the press, but the pronunciation of the time, appears from these lines of Heywood, in his Pleasant Dialogues and Dramas, 1637 :

" EARTH. What goddess, or how styl'd ?

" AGE. Age, am I call'd.

" EARTH. Hence false virago wild." MALONE.

[With trial-fire, &c.] So Beaumont and Fletcher, in The Faithful Shepherdes :

" In this flame his finger thrust,

" Which will burn him if he lust ;

" But it not, away will turn,

" As loth unspotted flesh to burn." STEEVENS.

² Eva. It is right, indeed, —] This short speech, which is very much in character for sir Hugh, I have inserted from the old quarto, 1619. THEOBALD.

³ —and luxury !] Luxury is here used for incontinence. So, in King Lear : " To't luxury, pell-mell, for I lack soldiers." STEEVENS.

⁴ Lust is but a bloody fire,] So the old copies. I once thought it should be read :

Lust is but a cloudy fire,

*Fed in heart ; whose flames aspire,
As thoughts do blow them, higher and higher.
Pinch him, fairies, mutually ;
Pinch him for his villainy ;*

*Pinch him, and burn him, and turn him about,
'Till candles, and star-light, and moon-shine be out.*

' During this song, they pinch him'. Doctor Caius comes one way, and steals away a fairy in green ; Slender another way, and he takes away a fairy in white ; and Fenton comes, and steals away Mrs. Anne Page. A noise of hunting is made within. All the fairies run away. Falstaff pulls off his buck's head, and rises.

Enter Page, Ford, &c. They lay hold on him.

Page. Nay, do not fly : I think, we have watch'd you now ;

Will none but Herne the hunter, serve your turn ?

Mrs. Page. I pray you, come ; hold up the jest no higher :—

Now, good sir John, how like you Windfor wives ?

*' See you these, husband ? do not these fair yoaks
Become the forest better than the town ?*

Ford.

but sir T. Hamner reads with less violence :

Lust is but i' the blood a fire. JOHNSON.

Either emendation is unnecessary. A bloody fire, means a fire in the blood. In The Second Part of Henry IV. act iv. the same expression occurs :

" Led on by bloody youth," &c.

i. e. sanguine youth. STEEVENS.

' During this song, —] This direction I thought proper to insert from the old quartos. THEOBALD.

" — they pinch him.] So, in Lylly's Endymion, 1591 :
" The fairies dance, and, with a song pinch him." And, in his Maid's Metamorphosis, 1600, they threaten the same punishment.

STEEVENS.

' See you these, husband ? do not these fair oaks

Become the forest better than the town ?] What oaks, in the name of nonsense, do our sagacious editors make Mrs. Page talk of? The oaks in the park ? But there was no intention of transplanting them into the town — Talis inscitæ me quidem pudet, pigetæ. The first folio reads, as the poet intended, yoaks : and Mrs.

Ford. Now, fir, who's a cuckold now?—Master Brook, Falstaff's a knave, a cuckoldly knave; here are his horns, master Brook: And, master Brook, he hath enjoyed nothing of Ford's but his buck-basket, his cudgel, and twenty pounds of money; which must be paid to master Brook; his horses are arrested for it, master Brook.

Mrs. Ford. Sir John, we have had ill luck; we could never meet. I will never take you for my love again, but I will always count you my deer.

Fal. I do begin to perceive, that I am made an ass,

Ford. Ay, and an ox too; both the proofs are extant.

Fal. And these are not fairies? I was three or four times in the thought, they were not fairies: and yet the guiltiness of my mind, the sudden surprize of my powers, drove the grossness of the soppery into a receiv'd belief, in despite of the teeth of all rhyme and reason, that they were fairies. See now, how wit may be made a Jack-a-lent^s, when 'tis upon ill employment!

Eva.

Mrs. Page's meaning is this. She speaks to her own, and Mrs. Ford's husband, and asks them, if they see the borns in Falstaff's hand; and then, alluding to them as the types of cuckoldoms, puts the question, whether those yoaks are not more proper in the forest than in the town, i. e. than in their families, as a reproach to them?

THEOBALD.

* Shakespeare may use oaks for branches. Branching is an epithet as commonly bestowed on borns as on trees. STEVEN.

* — how wit may be made a Jack-a-lent, —] * A Jack o' Lent appears to have been some puppet which was thrown at in Lent, like Shrove-tide cocks.

So, in the old comedy of Lady Alimony, 1659:

“ ——— throwing cudgels

“ At Jack-a-lents, or Shrove-cocks.”

Again, in The Wild Goose Chase of Beaumont and Fletcher:

“ I would be married sooner to a monkey,

“ Or to a Jack of Straw.”

Again, in B. and Fletcher's Tamer Tamed:

“ ——— if I forfeit,

“ Make me a Jack o' Lent, and break my shins

“ For untagg'd points, and counters.” —

Again,

Eva. Sir John Falstaff, serve Got, and leave your desires, and fairies will not pinse you.

Ford. Well said, fairy Hugh.

Eva. And leave your jealousies also, I pray you.

Ford. I will never mistrust my wife again, till thou art able to woo her in good English.

Fal. Have I lay'd my brain in the sun, and dried it, that it wants matter to prevent so gross o'er-reaching as this? Am I ricklen with a Welch goat too? shall I have a coxcomb of frize? 'tis time I were choak'd with a piece of toasted cheese.

Eva. Seese is not good to give putter; your pelly is all putter.

Fal. Seese and putter! have I liv'd to stand in the point of one that makes fritters of English? this is enough to be the decay of lust and late-walking, through the realm.

Mrs. Page. Why, sir John, do you think, though we would have thrust virtue out of our hearts by the head and shoulders, and have given ourselves without scruple to hell, that ever the devil could have made you our delight?

Ford. What, a hodge-pudding? a bag of flax?

Mrs. Page. A puff'd man?

Page. Old, cold, wither'd, and of intolerable entails?

Ford. And one that is as slanderous as Satan?

Page. And as poor as Job?

Ford. And as wicked as his wife?

Again, in Ben Jonson's Tale of a Tub:

"——— on an Ash-wednesday,

"Where thou didst stand six weeks the Jack o' Lent,"

"For boys to hurl three throws a penny at thee." STEEV.

- a coxcomb of frize? -] i. e. a fool's cap made out of Welch materials. Wales was famous for this cloth. So, in K. Edward I. 1599: "Enter Lluellin, alias prince of Wales, &c. with swords and bucklers, and frizee jerkins." Again: "Enter Suffex, &c. with a mantle of frizee." "—my boy shall weare a mantle of this country's weaving, to keep him warm." STEEVENS.

Eva.

Eva. And given to fornications, and to taverns, and facks, and wines, and metheglins, and to drinkings, and swearings, and starings, pribbles and prabbles?

Fal. Well, I am your theme; you have the start of me; I am dejected; I am not able to answer the Welch flannel¹; ² ignorance itself is a plummet o'er me: use me as you will.

Ford. Mairry, fir, we'll bring you to Windsor; to one master Brook, that you cozen'd of money, to whom you should have been a pandar: over and above that you have suffer'd, I think, to repay that money will be a biting affliction.

³ Mrs. Ford. Nay, husband, let that go to make amends:
Forgive that sum, and so we'll all be friends.

Ford.

¹ — the Welch flannel; —] The very word is derived from a Welch one, so that it is almost unnecessary to add that flannel was originally the manufacture of Wales. In the old play of King Edward I. 1599: "Enter Hugh ap David, Guentlian his wench in flannel, and Jacke his novice." Again:

"Here's a wholesome Welch wench,

"Lapt in her flannel, as warm as wool." STEEVENS.

² — ignorance itself is a plummet o'er me: —] Though this be perhaps not unintelligible, yet it is an odd way of confessing his dejection. I should much to read:

— ignorance itself has a plume o'er me:

That is, I am so depressed, that ignorance itself ducks me, and decks itself with the spoil of my weakness. Of the present reading, which is probably right, the meaning may be, I am so enfeebled, that ignorance itself weighs me down and oppresses me. JOHNSON.

"Ignorance itself, says Falstaff, is a plummet o'er me." If any alteration be necessary, I think, "Ignorance itself is a planet o'er me," would have a chance to be right. Thus Bobadil excuses his cowardice: "Sure I was struck with a planet, for I had no power to touch my weapon." FARMER.

Dr. Farmer might have supported his conjecture by a passage in K. Henry VI. where queen Margaret says, that Suffolk's face:

"—rul'd like a wandering planet over me." STEEVENS.

Perhaps Falstaff's meaning may be this: "Ignorance itself is a plummet o'er me: i. e. above me;" ignorance itself is not so low as I am, by the length of a plummet-line. TYRWHITT.

³ Mrs. Ford. Nay, husband, —] This and the following little speech I have inferred from the old quartos. The retrenchment,

F pro-

Ford. Well, here's my hand; all's forgiven at last.

Page. Yet be cheerful, knight: thou shalt eat a posset to-night at my house; where I will desire thee to laugh at my wife, that now laughs at thee: Tell her, master Slender hath married her daughter.

Mrs. Page. Doctors doubt that; if Anne Page be my daughter, she is, by this, doctor Caius' wife.

[Aside.

Enter Slender.

Slen. Whoo, ho! ho! father Page!

Page. Son! how now? how now, son? have you dispatch'd?

Slen. Dispatch'd!—I'll make the best in Gloucestershire know on't; would I were hang'd, la, else.

Page. Of what, son?

Slen. I came yonder at Eaton to marry mistress Anne Page, and she's a great lubberly boy; If it had not been i' the church, I would have swing'd him, or he should have swing'd me. If I did not think it had been Anne Page, would I might never stir, and 'tis a post-master's boy.

Page. Upon my life then you took the wrong.

Slen. What need you tell me that? I think so, when I took a boy for a girl: If I had been married to him, for all he was in woman's apparel, I would not have had him.

Page. Why, this is your own folly; Did not I tell you, how you should know my daughter by her garments?

Slen. I went to her in white, and cry'd, mum, and

I presume, was by the players. Sir John Falstaff is sufficiently punished, in being disappointed and exposed. The expectation of his being prosecuted for the twenty pounds, gives the conclusion too tragical a turn. Besides, it is poetical justice that Ford should sustain this loss, as a fine for his unreasonable jealousy. THEOB.

⁴ —laugh at my wife, —] The two plots are excellently connected, and the transition very artfully made in this speech.

JOHNSON.

she cry'd budget, as Anne and I had appointed; and yet it was not Anne, but a post-master's boy.

Eva. Jeshu! Master Slender, cannot you see but marry boys?⁵

Page. O, I am vex'd at heart: What shall I do?

Mrs. Page. Good George, be not angry: I knew of your purpose; turn'd my daughter into green; and, indeed, she is now with the doctor at the deanery, and there married.

Enter Caius.

Caius. Vere is mistress Page? By gar, I am cozen'd; I ha' married un garçon, a boy; un paisan, by gar, a boy; it is not Anne Page: by gar, I am cozen'd.

Mrs. Page. Why, did you not take her in green?

Caius. Ay, be gar, and 'tis a boy: be gar, I'll rise all Windfor. [Exit Caius.]

Ford. This is strange: Who hath got the right Anne?

Page. My heart misgives me: Here comes master Fenton.

Enter Fenton, and Anne Page.

How now, master Fenton?

Anne. Pardon, good father! good my mother, pardon!

Page. Now, mistress? how chance you went not with master Slender?

Mrs. Page. Why went you not with master doctor, maid?

Fent. You do amaze her; Hear the truth of it. You would have married her most shamefully, Where there was no proportion held in love. The truth is, She and I, long since contracted Are now so sure, that nothing can dissolve us. The offence is holy, that she hath committed: And this deceit loses the name of craft, ⁵ — marry boys?] This and the next speech are likewise restorations from the old quarto. STEVENS.

Of disobedience, or unduteous title;
 Since therein she doth evitate and shun
 A thousand irreligious cursed hours,
 Which forced marriage would have brought upon her.

Ford. Stand not amaz'd: here is no remedy:—
 In love, the heavens themselves do guide the state;
 Money buys lands, and wives are sold by fate.

Fal. I am glad, though you have ta'en a special stand to strike at me, that your arrow hath glanc'd.

Page. Well, what remedy? Fenton, heaven give thee joy!

What cannot be eschew'd, must be embrac'd.

Eva. I will dance and eat plums at your wedding.

Fal. When night-dogs run, all sorts of deer are chac'd.

Mrs. Page. Well, I will muse no further:—Master
 Fenton,

Heaven give you many, many merry days!—

Good husband, let us every one go home,
 And laugh this sport o'er by a country fire;
 Sir John and all.

Ford. Let it be so:—Sir John,
 To master Brook you yet shall hold your word;
 For he, to-night, shall lye with mistress Ford.

[Exeunt omnes.]

Page. Well, what remedy?—] In the first sketch of this play, which, as Mr. Pope observes, is much inferior to the latter performance, the only sentiment of which I regret the omission, occurs at this critical time. When Fenton brings in his wife, there is this dialogue.

Mrs. Ford. Come, mistress Page, I must be bold with you,
 'Tis pity to part love that is so true.

Mrs. Page. [Aside] Although that I have mis'd in my intent,
 Yet I am glad my husband's match is cross'd.

Here Fenton, take her.—

Eva. Come, master Page, you must needs agree.

Ford. I faith, sir, come, you see your wife is pleas'd.

Page. I cannot tell, and yet my heart is eas'd;

And yet it doth me good the doctor mis'd.

Come hither, Fenton, and come hither, daughter.

Of this play there is a tradition preserved by Mr. Rowe, that it was written at the command of queen Elizabeth, who was so delighted with the character of Falstaff, that she wished it to be diffused through more plays; but suspecting that it might pall by continued uniformity, directed the poet to diversify his manner, by shewing him in love. No task is harder than that of writing to the ideas of another. Shakespeare knew what the queen, if the story be true, seems not to have known, that by any real passion of tenderness, the selfish craft, the careless jollity, and the lazy luxury of Falstaff must have suffered so much abatement, that little of his former cast would have remained. Falstaff could not love, but by ceasing to be Falstaff. He could only counterfeit love, and his professions could be prompted, not by the hope of pleasure, but of money. Thus the poet approached as near as he could to the work enjoined him; yet having perhaps in the former plays completed his own idea, seems not to have been able to give Falstaff all his former power of entertainment.

This comedy is remarkable for the variety and number of the personages, who exhibit more characters appropriated and discriminated, than perhaps can be found in any other play.

Whether Shakespeare was the first that produced upon the English stage the effect of language distorted and depraved by provincial or foreign pronunciation, I cannot certainly decide. This mode of forming ridiculous characters can confer praise only on him, who originally discovered it, for it requires not much of either wit or judgment: its success must be derived almost wholly from the player, but its power in a skilful mouth, even he that despises it, is unable to resist.

The conduct of this drama is deficient; the action begins and ends often before the conclusion, and the different parts might change place with great inconvenience; but its general power, that power by which all works of genius shall finally be tried, is such, that perhaps it is ever yet had reader or spectator, who did not think it too soon at an end. JOHNSON.

* In the Three Ladies of London, 1584, is the character of an Italian merchant, very strongly marked by foreign pronunciation. Dr. Dodyall, in the comedy which bears his name, is, like Caius, a French physician. This piece appeared at least a year before the Merry Wives of Windsor. The hero of it speaks such another jargon as the antagonist of Sir Hugh, and like him is cheated of his mistress. In several other pieces, more ancient than the earliest of Shakespeare's, provincial characters are introduced. STEEVENS.

